2. The nature of divine worship. It must be sincere, or "in truth," otherwise it is a solemn mockery; and it must be spiritual, or we can hold no communion with the Supreme Spirit. But, alas! we are carnal, hence then arises the necessity of a Mediator: out of Christ, that is, irrespective of his merits and atonement, "God is a consuming fire." Nor is this all, we are carnal, and can offer no spiritual worship, but as assisted by his Holy Spirit. How good is God! He not only expresses his readiness to receive sinners, but he sends a Mediator to introduce us to his presence; and lends the aid of his Holy Spirit to assist us. Even this poor Samaritan woman seems to have had some idea of these things: "I know (said she) that Messiah cometh, and when he is come he will teach us all things." Jesus replies, "I that speak unto thee am he."

Clarke, seem to doubt the identity of the well. Orient. Lit. No. 1343.—Sat thus on the well—That is, says Harmer, as a weary traveller.—About the sixth hour—i. e. Noon. See note on Mat. xxvii. 45.

Ver. 10. Living water.—By living water, the Hebrews evidently understood water always in motion, whether in a rising spring, or a flowing stream. Stagnant waters were considered dead—as the Dead sea.

Ver. 11. Thou hast nothing to draw with.—Rauwolf, speaking of the well of Bethlehem says, the people that go to dip water are provided with small leathern buckets and a line, as is usual in these countries.—Orient. Cust. No. 467.

Ver. 18. Is not thy husband.—Mr. Madan supposed that four of her husbands were deceased, or had been divorced; that she had married a fifth, and deserted him, and now lived with another man. The one she had deserted must, however, still have been her husband, and the other with whom she now lived, our Lord says, was not her husband.

Ver. 20. Our fathers worshipped in this mountain.—[Mount Gerizim, to which the woman probably pointed, and at the foot of which Sychar was situated, where Abraham and Jacob had erected altars and sacrificed. On this mountain Sanballat had built a temple for them, which was destroyed by John Hyrcanus.—Josephus.]—R. See Deut. x. 29; xxvii. 12. The origin of this schism was as follows:—Manasseh having been expelled the priesthood for marrying the daughter of Sanballat, the Moabite, his father-in-law obtained leave from Alexander the Great to build a temple on Mount Gerizim, which mountain they still continued to reverence, though the temple had been long since destroyed. The people were a mixture of Cuthites, and other Pagan nations, introduced at various times into the province by various conquerors. See 2 Kings xvii. 24, 25. It is certain that the Samaritans were always bitter enemies to the Jews, as well as the Jews to the Samaritans. See Ne. ii. 19; iv. 27, &c. and vi. 1, &c.

Ver. 27. With the woman.—Campbell, "with a woman." Lightfoot says, it was disreputable for any man of respectability to talk publicly with a woman.

30 Then they went out of the city, and came unto him.

31 ¶ In the mean while his disciples prayed him, saying, Master, eat.

32 But he said unto them, I have meat to eat that ye know not of.

33 Therefore said the disciples one to another, Hath any man brought him aught to eat?

34 Jesus saith unto them, My [s] meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish [t] his work.

35 Say not ye, There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to [u] harvest.

36 And he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit [v] unto life eternal: that both [w] he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together.

37 And herein is that saying true, One [x] soweth, and another reapeth.

38 I sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labour: other [y] men laboured, and ye are entered into their labours.

39 ¶ And many of the Samaritans of that city believed on him for the saying [z] of the woman, which testified, He told me all that ever I did.

40 So when the Samaritans were come unto him, they besought him that he would tarry with them: and he abode there two days.

41 And many more believed because of his own word;

42 And said unto the woman, Now we believe, not because of thy saying: [a] for we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world.

43 ¶ Now after two days he departed thence, and went into Galilee.

44 For Jesus himself testified, that [b] a prophet hath no honour in his own country.

45 Then when he was come into Galilee, the Galileans received him, having seen [c] all the things that he did at Jerusalem at the feast: for [d] they also went unto the feast.

46 So Jesus came again into Cana of Galilee, where he made [e] the water wine. And there was a certain [f] nobleman, whose son was sick at Capernaum.

47 When he heard that Jesus was come out of Judea into Galilee, he went unto him, and besought him that he would come down, and heal his son: for he was at the point of death.

48 Then said Jesus unto him, Except ye see signs [g] and wonders, ye will not believe.

49 The nobleman saith unto him, Sir, come down ere my child die.

50 Jesus saith unto him, Go [h] thy way; thy son liveth. And the man believed the word that Jesus had spoken unto him, and he went his way.

The conversation is now interrupted by the arrival of Christ's disciples; and the woman leaves her water-pot, and runs home to invite her neighbours to come and see this extraordinary person: "Come see a man (who) has told me all that I ever did. Is not this the Christ?"

Ver. 31—42. The disciples return, and the woman also, bringing others with her.—Christ's disciples were, we know, at this time deeply imbued with Jewish prejudices. They were surprised to find Jesus talking familiarly with a Samaritan woman, and that of the lower class, as her occupation seems to have been to fetch water. Knowing, however, they should meet reproof, they make no remark on this circumstance, but merely entreat their Master, who probably appeared exhausted and fatigued, to take some food; but he said, "I have meat to eat that ye know not of.—My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." This is the perfection of obedience, when, like Job, (chap. xxiii. 12,) we esteem the divine commands "more than our necessary food;" and can say with the Psalmist, (Ps. cxix. 92,) "O how I love thy law! it is my meditation all the day." But it was not merely in obedience to the moral law, that our Lord Jesus delighted; it was in suffering for our sins also. "I have a baptism to be baptized with," said he, alluding to his last extreme sufferings, "and how am I straitened till it be accomplished!" (Luke xii. 50.) This was the finishing of Christ's work for our salvation, and to this he looked through all the intermediate steps of his ministerial labour. Deeply impressed with these ideas he animates his disciples to like diligence in their labours. At this time, it should seem, there were about four months unto the harvest; but he points to another harvest close approaching, in which he evidently alludes to the Samaritans, whom the woman was now bringing with her, and who being probably dressed in white, (as the Asiatics generally are,) gave him occasion to say, "look on the fields, for they are white already unto harvest." These Samaritans were a mixed race of Jews and heathens, but they were running eagerly to receive the word, for which they had been prepared by their countrywoman. Such, he remarks, accorded with the usual course of Providence. One man sows and another reaps, but when the work is complete, sower and reaper rejoice together. Many believed Jesus to be the Messiah from what the woman said; and when they came, they were so delighted with his conversation, that they requested him to remain two days longer with them. Then, "many more believed, because of his own word: and said unto the woman"—what it is of great importance for all of us to be able to say—"Now we believe, not because of thy saying; for we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world"—and not of the Jews only.

It is hardly to be supposed that the disciples took no part in this work, after being thus stimulated by their Master: it is to be hoped they, entering into this woman's labours, reaped a rich harvest. At the same time, the seed now sown seems to be in preparation for another harvest; for, upon the conversion of the apostle Paul, from being a persecutor to become a preacher, we are told that, "then had the churches rest throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria, (Acts ix. 31;) which seems to imply, that many souls had been gathered in those parts, within about seven years of this period.

Ver. 43—54. Jesus cures a nobleman's son in Galilee.—The report of the miracle which Jesus had here wrought, in turning water into wine, with other miracles which followed, had spread through the surrounding country, and naturally occasioned the present application. The two days he had been detained in Samaria being expired, Jesus now proceeds to Galilee; but not to Nazareth, which he avoided, and passed on to Cana, because he himself bare witness that "a prophet hath no honour in his own country." (See Matt. xiii. 57, 58.) When he came to Galilee, however, he was joyfully and gratefully received. But he is applied to by a nobleman at Capernaum, one of Herod's immediate attendants, (as the word seems to imply,) and not improbably Chusa, Herod's steward, whose wife became afterwards an attendant upon our Lord, (Luke viii. 3;) and it has been supposed, in consequence of the miracle wrought upon her son. As to this nobleman, it is said, that "himself believed, with his whole house," though we hear nothing farther of him as a disciple of our Saviour. If he returned to court, it was not a place friendly to the cultivation of religion, nor was Herod a master likely to countenance religious servants. As to his faith, (as Dr. Henry Hunter observes,) it appears to have been "blended with much infirmity. He reposed confidence in the power of Christ to heal the sick; but he weakly imagined that his power could operate only on the spot. Under this impression he travels from Capernaum to Cana, in hope of being able to persuade Jesus to accompany him to the former city. . . . He besought him that he would come down and heal his son, for he was at the point of death. He urges the importance of despatch, lest death should interpose and extinguish hope for ever; for his faith carried him no farther than to the brink of the grave, and there gave up all for lost. . . . . It was meet that he should be taught to enlarge his ideas of the power and grace of the Redeemer, as extending to universal space, and to every possible state of things. This seems to be the only rational interpretation which can be given of the apparent coldness of the reception given him by our Lord. Instead of his usual promptitude to fly to the relief of distress, the importunate father meets, from the lips of Christ, with a seemingly ungracious reflection, which had nearly chilled his heart. Then said Jesus unto him, 'Except ye see signs and wonders ye will not believe.' . . . . . Parental affection perseveres in following up the request. He tacitly admits the justice of Christ's censure,

Ver. 42. The Saviour of the world.—Whether they learned this from Christ himself, or from the prophecies of the Old Testament, or from both, is not stated.

Ver. 46. Into Cana of Galilee.—(Dr. E. D. Clarke, who visited Cana a few years ago, says, "that, walking among the ruins of a church, we saw large massy pots, answering the description given of the ancient vessels of the country; not preserved, but lying about, disregarded by the present inhabitants, as antiquities with whose original use they were unacquainted. From their appearance, and the number of them, it was quite evident that a practice of keeping water in large pots, each holding from eighteen to twenty-seven gallons, was once common in the country.")—Bagster.—A certain nobleman.—The word (basilikos) signifies properly, as the Syriac and Arabic versions render it, "a minister or servant of the king:" i. e. Herod, who, though tetrarch only was allowed to bear that title.

51 And as he was now going down, his servants met him, and told him, saying, Thy son liveth.

52 Then inquired he of them the hour when he began to amend. And they said unto him, Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him.

53 So the father knew that it was at the same [i] hour, in the which Jesus said unto him, Thy son liveth: and himself [j] believed, and his whole house.

54 This is again the second miracle that Jesus did, when he was come out of Judea into Galilee.

CHAPTER V.

1 Jesus on the sabbath day cureth him that was diseased eight and thirty years. 10 The Jews therefore cavil, and persecute him for it. 17 He answereth for himself, and reproveth them, showing by the testimony of his Father, 32 of John, 36 of his works, 39 and of the scriptures, who he is.

AFTER this there was a feast [a] of the Jews; and Jesus went up to Jerusalem.

2 Now there is at Jerusalem by the sheep [o] market a pool, which is called in the Hebrew tongue Bethesda, having five porches.

3 In these lay a great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, withered, waiting for the moving of the water.

4 For an angel went down at a certain season into the pool, and troubled the water: whosoever then first [c] after the troubling of the water stepped in was made whole [d] of whatsoever disease he had.

5 And a certain man was there, which had an infirmity [e] thirty and eight years.

6 When Jesus saw him lie, and [f] knew that he had been now a long time in that case, he saith unto him, Wilt thou be made whole?

7 The impotent man answered him, Sir, I have [g] no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool: but while I am coming, another steppeth down before me.

8 Jesus saith unto him, [h] Rise, take up thy bed, and walk.

9 And immediately the man was made whole, and took up his bed, and walked: and on [i] the same day was the sabbath.

10 ¶ The Jews therefore said unto him that was cured, It is the sabbath day: [j] it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed.

11 He answered them, He that made me whole, the same said unto me, Take up thy bed, and walk.

12 Then asked they him, What man is that which said unto thee, Take up thy bed, and walk?

13 And he that was healed wist [k] not who it was: for Jesus had conveyed [l] himself away, [m] a multitude being in that place.

14 Afterward Jesus findeth him in the temple, and said unto him, Behold, thou art made whole: sin [n] no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee.

but waves discussion, and in the anguish of his soul renews his application. . . . . 'Sir, come down ere my child die!' Where the heart is deeply interested the words are few; but, oh, how forcible! The feelings of a parent are seen with approbation by the friend of mankind, to whom nothing that affects humanity can be a matter of indifference. Jesus saith unto him, 'Go thy way, thy son liveth.' . . . . . He receives his son as one alive from the dead; he learns to correct his false ideas of the power of Christ, and to submit implicitly to his decisions. 'And the man believed the word that Jesus had spoken unto him, and he went his way.'" By the way, however, a servant met him with the joyful news of his son's recovery, and upon inquiring the time, it was found that the fever left him at the very hour when Jesus spoke the word. Thus in the world of Grace, as in that of Nature, "He spake, and it was done: he commanded, and it was established."

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—16. The lame man cured at the pool of Bethesda.—This is considered as one of the most difficult narratives to explain in all the gospels. We shall consider,—

1. The pool itself, which was called Bethesda, or the House of Mercy, being a kind of infirmary where there was a bath for the benefit of the poor, of which there are some remains to the present day. Maundrell describes it as 120 paces long, 40 broad, and 8 deep. At its west end, he adds, may be discovered some old arches which are now dammed up, which are supposed to be the remains of the porches or cloisters built round it for the convenience of the poor who came to bathe; but the pool is supposed to have been formerly employed to wash the sacrifices for the temple.

2. But the most remarkable part of this narrative respects the descent of an angel at certain times to disturb the water, which gave it a sanative or healing quality. It seems to be generally supposed that this water possessed medicinal properties, which, at certain times, were rendered the more effective by a certain agitation of them, which the Jews attributed to the agency of an angel: and how far the agency of angels may be employed in producing the phenomena of nature is not for us, in the present state, to ascertain: but the most extraordinary circumstance attending this agitation was the transient efficacy of the waters, so that only the few persons that immediately entered the pool while thus agitated were cured. We do not see the necessity, however, of supposing its virtues were confined to a single individual, but to the few only that entered the bath during its agitation, which this poor man was not able to do on account of his extreme debility, which had lasted, it should seem, almost forty years, though nothing is said of the time he had here waited. The narrative is certainly full of mystery, in whatever way it may be viewed. Dr. Hammond supposes it might have derived its medicinal virtues from washing the sacrifices; we should rather suspect that the springs which supplied the bath might have some secret connexion either with a subterraneous sea, or an exhausted volcano. Thus much is certain, that the Dead sea, at no great distance from Jerusalem, is remarkable for the quantity of salt and bitumen which it contains. Leaving these circumstances, however, in that mystery in which nature is often shrouded, we must now devote our attention to the signal miracle which our Saviour wrought upon this miserable invalid.

Jesus asked no question of the man, but whether he was willing to be cured, and then immediately commanded him to take up his bed and walk. This command, however, was delivered on the sabbath, and gave such offence to the Jews, as to raise their enmity, and excite a persecution against him, on pretence that he violated the sabbath. But what was this poor man's bed? Perhaps only his hyke, or upper garment, or a piece only of old carpeting; or, at most, an old mattress stuffed with hay or straw, on which he had been accustomed to be lifted from place to place; and whether he carried it upon his arm or his shoulder, could make no difference to the law, since it was probably of less weight than the robes of the Pharisee, when full dressed for prayers. Jesus, however, had withdrawn from the crowd without making himself known, either to the man or to the people; when, therefore, they inquired of him—not, Who made him whole? but who dared to bid him carry his bed? he very properly replied, "He that made me whole, the same said unto me, take up thy bed, and walk." And, surely, he who was able to work such a miracle, had a right to be obeyed.

Soon after this, however, Jesus finding the poor man in the temple, where he doubtless came to return thanks to God, after carrying home his bed, he made himself known to him; and the man, probably with a view to do him honour, told the Jews

CHAP. V. Ver. 1. A feast of the Jews.—Generally understood to be the Passover. So Doddridge.

Ver. 2. By the sheep-market.—So Doddridge; but Campbell renders it "sheep-gate;" because (he says) we have good evidence that one of the gates was called the sheep-gate, (Ne. iii. 1, 32; xii. 39,) but no evidence that there was a sheep-market.——Bethesda.—[The supposed remains of the pool of Bethesda are situated on the east of Jerusalem, contiguous on one side to St. Stephen's gate, and on the other to the area of the temple. Maundrell states, that "it is 120 paces long, and 40 broad, and at least 8 deep, but void of water. At its west end it discovers some old arches, now dammed up. These some will have to be the five porches in which sate that multitude of lame, halt, and blind. But the mischief is, instead of five, there are but three of them."]—Bagster.

Ver. 4. For an angel went down, &c.—[The sanative property of this pool has been supposed by some to have been communicated by the blood of the sacrifices, and others have referred it to the mineral properties of the waters. But, 1. The beasts for sacrifice were not washed here, but in a laver in the temple. 2. No natural property could cure all manner of diseases. 3. The cure only extended to the first who entered. 4. It took place only at one particular time. 5. As the healing was effected by immersion it must have been instantaneous: and it was never failing in its effects All which, not being observed in medicinal waters, determine the cures to have been miraculous, as expressly stated in the text.]—Bagster. This verse is admitted to be wanting in the Vatican, the Ephrem, and Cambridge MSS., and in others is marked as doubtful; but it is found in all other MSS., (including the Alexandrian,) the Syriac, and other ancient versions; and its connexion with verse 7 (which is not wanting) renders it impossible to make sense of the narrative without it. In our opinion, the omission of this verse (and in some MSS. the concluding clause of the third verse) only shows that the copyists were as much perplexed as we are to understand the passage.—The late ingenious Editor of Calmet (Mr. Taylor) was of opinion, that here were two waters: the one in which the cattle were washed before they were sent to the market, or to the priests; and in this the poor were permitted to bathe: but he thinks there was another water, far more efficacious, which ran only periodically, and in small quantities

Ver. 5. Thirty and eight years.—There is no evidence that this man waited at the pool 38 years. He was diseased that length of time. No argument for the sinner to wait, can fairly be drawn from this, as the man immediately complied with the command of Christ.

Ver. 13. Conveyed himself away.—Doddridge, "slipped away." According to Casaubon, the word has an allusion to swimmers, who glide through the water without leaving any impression in it.

15 The man departed, and told the Jews that it was Jesus, which had made him whole.

16 And therefore did the Jews persecute Jesus, and sought to slay him, because he had done these things on the sabbath day.

17 ¶ But Jesus answered them, [o] My Father worketh hitherto, and I work.

18 Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill [p] him, because he not only had broken the sabbath, but said also that God was his Father, making [q] himself equal with God.

19 ¶ Then answered Jesus and said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, [r] The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise.

20 For [s] the Father loveth the Son, and showeth him all things that himself doeth: and he will show him greater works than these, that ye may marvel.

21 For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even [t] so the Son quickeneth whom he will.

22 For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed [u] all judgment unto the Son:

23 That all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. He that honoureth not the Son honoureth not the Father which hath sent him.

24 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He [v] that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed [w] from death unto life.

25 Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead [x] shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live.

26 For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life [y] in himself;

27 And hath given him authority [z] to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man.

28 Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice,

29 And shall come forth; they [a] that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of [b] damnation.

30 I [c] can of mine own self do nothing: as I hear, I judge: and my judgment is just; because I seek not mine own will, but the will [d] of the Father which hath sent me.

that it was Jesus—not, who had bid him carry his bed, but who had made him whole. Our Lord, at the same time as he thus made himself known, added this friendly caution—"Sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee;" namely, a worse thing than total helplessness and poverty, which, we conceive, can intend nothing short of the miseries of an eternal state. This discovery of Jesus, however, exposed him to the malice of his enemies, who even now sought his death, and would gladly have procured it, either by legal or illegal means. They hated the light, because their minds were full of darkness.

Ver. 17—30. Jesus maintains the divinity of his character.—The charge is now turned from the poor patient who had been cured, to the good Physician who had wrought the cure. The Jews sought to slay him because he had done these things:—not only for his direction to his patient to carry his bed, but because he had wrought this and other cures upon the sabbath day. This seems to have been the way in which they endeavoured to get rid of the evidence in favour of his divine character and mission, by accusing him as a sabbath-breaker. Jesus now enters on his defence,—"My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." It is true that the Almighty rested from his work of creation on the sabbath-day, and left us both precept and example to do the same: but has the Deity ceased from works of benevolence to men? Are not his infinite energies perpetually exerted on our behalf? "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work,—and what are my works but an imitation of his infinite benevolence? He causes his sun to shine, and his rains to descend, both upon the evil and the good; I exert the like benevolence in healing the sick, and instructing the ignorant." It is a grand mistake to think that the sabbath can be sanctified by sloth and idleness. To heal the sick, to relieve the poor, and to instruct the ignorant, were the employments of the Son of God, and are duties incumbent, not only on all his ministers, but also on all his followers, as they have ability and opportunity. But Jesus called God "his Father," with a familiarity which implied a peculiar relation to him as his own Father. (See note on ver. 18.) This they thought blasphemous, and it would have been so, had he been a mere man, as they supposed.

Dr. Waterland justly remarks, that had their inference been unjust, he would have had only to deny it; whereas, in the following verses, he not only admits but justifies it, and claims honour equal to the Father.

In attempting to expound our Lord's doctrinal discourses relative to the divine Being, we feel a peculiar awe, lest we should step beyond the boundary of revelation, which we believe has been the true cause of all the theological errors with which the church has been afflicted: in truth, we would rather stop short than step beyond. We have already suggested our opinion that St. John, in the first chapter, has an allusion to Solomon's beautiful allegory in the 8th chapter of Proverbs, where Wisdom is represented as the first-born of God the Father, brought up under his immediate care, and, as a darling child, witnessing the mysterious process of the creation. "When he prepared the heavens—when he appointed the foundations of the earth—Then (says Wisdom) I was by him, as one brought up with him," and witnessed all his works. (Prov. viii. 22—31.) Thus our apostle, speaking of the divine Logos, says, "The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these doeth the Son likewise." Did the Father create all things in the beginning? No less true is it of the Word, or Son of God: "All things were made by him, and without him was not any thing made that was made." (Chap. i. 3.)

"For the Father loveth the Son, and showeth him all things that himself doeth, (as already instanced in creation;) and he will show him greater things than these, that ye may marvel." Then our Lord goes on to state his participation in the most mysterious works of the resurrection and future judgment: "For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." And as to the last judgment, "the Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment to the Son." And wherefore is all this? Is it to show that the Son is inferior to the Father? Most assuredly not. It is, that notwithstanding, and, indeed, because, the Son hath "humbled himself and become of no reputation"—because he "became obedient to death, even the death of the cross, therefore hath God (the Father) exalted him, and given him a name above every name," (Phil. ii. 7—9,) "that all (men and angels too) should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father."

The inspired writers represent the Lord Jesus as he whom the Father "delights to honour"—whom he hath clothed in his own robes of light and glory—whom he hath placed upon his own throne, and hath stationed his own angels to attend him; and, finally, he hath solemnly declared, before earth and heaven, that "he that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father which hath sent him." (Compare Matt. xvi. 27; xxiv. 30, 31.)

When our Saviour declares that "the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear his voice," he is generally (and we think justly) understood to speak with a double reference; first, to the quickening power of divine grace attending his ministry on earth, and rendering it successful among men dead in trespasses and sins; (Ephes. ii. 1;) and, secondly, to the resurrection of certain individuals from the grave, as the widow's son, Lazarus, &c.; and he tells them they need not wonder at this, as the time would hereafter come, when "ALL the dead" should hear his voice, and obey it.

Nor let it be supposed, that any of us are uninterested in this great event; for, at the last day, all that are in their graves shall come forth; they that, being animated by a lively faith, have "done good (works) to the resurrection of life" eternal;

Ver. 18. His Father.—Doddridge and Campbell, "His own Father." The former says, "This is the plain and literal sense of the original—Patera idion." See Luke vi. 41; x. 34. Acts iv. 32. 1 Co. vii. 2.——Equal with God.—Campbell renders it "By calling God peculiarly his Father, (he) had equalled himself with God."

Ver. 19 Nothing of himself—That is, independently, or without his concurrence.

Ver. 26. Given to the Son to have life.—As the Father is self-existent, so, according to the divine economy, the Son is also self-existent.

Ver. 27 Because he is the Son of man.—Campbell, "A Son of man," the Greek here omitting the usual article. The Saviour in applying this appellation to himself, claims attributes that show him divine. He is to execute judgment and to raise the dead, ver. 29. See Dan. vii. 9—14. Phi. ii. 5—11.

Ver. 29. Resurrection of life.—Life is sometimes taken for religion, as ver. 24. John x. 28. Sometimes it means the just, Luke xiv. 14. Here, it means the eternal favour of God, a freedom from sin and from dying.——Resurrection of damnation.—Damnation means the sentence, the judgment, the condemnation passed upon a criminal. In the text, it means the judgment pronounced by God upon the wicked. So the resurrection to damnation is this those who have done evil shall be raised up to be condemned or damned eternally. To oppose, as an objection, that a different meaning is to be given to the word everlasting when applied to the wicked, than what is used when applied

CHAPTER VI.

1 Christ feedeth five thousand men with five loaves and two fishes. 15 Thereupon the people would have made him king: 16 but withdrawing himself, he walked on the sea to his disciples: 26 reproveth the people flocking after him, and all the fleshly hearers of his word: 32 declareth himself to be the bread of life to believers. 66 Many disciples depart from him. 68 Peter confesseth him. 70 Judas is a devil.

AFTER [a] these things Jesus went over the sea of Galilee, which is the sea of Tiberias.

2 And a great multitude followed him, because they saw his miracles which he did on them that were diseased.

3 And Jesus went up into a mountain, and there he sat with his disciples.

4 And the passover, a feast of the Jews, was nigh.

5 When Jesus then lifted up his eyes, and saw and "they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of condemnation."

Ver. 31—47. Jesus appeals to his heavenly Father, to John the Baptist, to his own miracles, and to the Scriptures, in evidence of his divine mission.—Our Lord having before told the Jews, "The Son can do nothing of himself," now repeats it in the first person, "I can of mine own self do nothing;" but the two propositions do not refer exactly to the same point. In the former he is speaking of his miracles, all which were wrought in harmony with the divine operations of the Father. Here he speaks of passing judgment at the last day: "As I hear (says he) I judge;" that is, I judge from evidence: "and my judgment is just, because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me." Nothing so much biases the mind in judgment as having some interest in the cause, or a will of our own to be consulted. The will of Christ is wholly absorbed in that of his heavenly Father. So he prayed, when in the scene of his deepest mental agonies, "Father, not my will, but thine be done."

In evidence of his mission, Jesus appeals first to his heavenly Father: "If I only bear witness of myself," says our Lord, "my witness is not ratid," not admissable in evidence. (See note on ver. 31.) "But there is another who beareth witness," referring to God his Father, "and I know (adds he) that his witness is true," and valid, and indisputable—referring to the witness borne from heaven at his baptism, "This is my beloved Son."—"Ye sent messengers unto John the Baptist, and he bare witness unto the truth." "But I receive not," or rather take not, "witness from men." I look to higher authority. "The works which the Father hath given me to finish"—the miracles I perform, the doctrines I deliver, and the sufferings I am about to endure—all "bear witness of me"—all testify the divinity of my character and mission.

But the following verse demands a more particular attention. "The Father himself hath borne witness of me: ye have neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his shape," or appearance; that is, the glory of his person. It is true, that Deity is invisible, and it is only in a figurative sense that men can be said to hear his voice; yet we so frequently read of Moses and other prophets seeing the divine glory, and hearing the voice of God, that we are strongly inclined to read the passage interrogatively, as is done by several modern critics and divines, as follows: "Have ye neither heard his voice at any time, nor seen his appearance? and have ye not his word abiding in (or among) you, that ye believe not on him whom he hath sent?" The former question is understood to refer to the divine appearance which bore witness to the Saviour at his baptism, as above-mentioned, when the Father testified from heaven, "This is my beloved Son." The latter question relates to the sacred oracles intrusted with them, of which our Lord speaks distinctly in the following verse: "Search the Scriptures," or, as some read the text indicatively, "Ye (do) search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." (See note on verse 37.)

But whether these words be taken indicatively or imperatively, they contain a most important duty—the searching of the Scriptures, which should certainly be diligently attended to, by all who consider them as containing eternal life. But the searching here is more than barely reading them; more than idly criticising them: the Jews did both these, but they did not seek for eternal life in them, or they would have led them to Jesus for that eternal life; for they spake of him—and to "him gave all the prophets witness."

"We read the heavenly word,
We take the offer'd grace:
Obey the statutes of the Lord,
And trust his promises."—Watts.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—21. Jesus feedeth five thousand by miracle; then withdraws from them, and walks on the sea to his disciples.—Both these miracles having been already brought before our readers, we shall here chiefly confine ourselves to incidents, or circumstances, not before mentioned. The miracle of feeding five thousand men, beside women and children, with a few loaves and fishes, is recorded by all the Evangelists: our remarks have been confined to the narrative of Matthew, (ch. xiv. 14—21.) We shall subjoin two or three more.

1. We observe, that this being just before Passover time, (ver. 4,) almost the whole population of the country was now gathering together, (particularly of the males,) and that a great part of them were at a distance from home, and had no occupation here, but to attend the feast; hearing, therefore, that a new prophet was arisen, who had wrought great miracles, they naturally thronged to see and hear him; and his miracles appeared so extraordinary, and his discourses so much superior to those of their Rabbies, that they were unwilling to separate, or leave him, notwithstanding the inconveniences of hunger and fatigue. Jesus, however, who felt for every one's sufferings but his own, determined at once both to satisfy their necessities, and to demonstrate his own miraculous powers. He did so; and to make the demonstration more complete, as well as to exclude all waste, the fragments were gathered up, to the righteous, is contrary to all rules of interpretation. As rationally might the advocates of universal salvation contend for a different meaning of the word resurrection. See notes on Mat. xxv. 46.

Ver. 31. My witness is not true.—Wesley, "Not valid." A man may bear a true witness concerning himself, but because it is his own, therefore is it inadmissible in evidence. See ch. viii. 13—18; also Parkhurst in Alethes, iii.

Ver. 34. I receive not.—The Greek verb (lambano) is often used for taking in the hand, as bread or fishes. Campbell renders it exegetically, "I need no human testimony."

Ver. 35. He was a burning and a shining light.—Compare Mat. v. 14—16.

Ver. 37. Ye have neither heard, &c.—The different reading we have given above, depends merely on the insertion of two marks of interrogation; and their insertion seems to have been first suggested by Turner, of Wakefield, in Priestley's Harmony: it is adopted and ably defended by Campbell, and by Boothroyd. —Nor seen his shape.—The Gr. eidos, evidently signifies any object of sight, even when no definite image has been visible; so it is used by the LXX. Ex. xxiv. 17. Num. ix. 15, 16; xii. 8. Compare Deut. iv. 12.

Ver. 39. Search the scriptures.—The words may be read either imperatively or indicatively: our translators prefer the former; both Doddridge and Campbell the latter. But some read this also interrogatively, "Do ye search," &c. The term search is noted by the critics as remarkably emphatic and expressive. It is a compound word, signifying, literally, to seek a bird, and is an allusion to miners in search of the precious metals: Homer uses it in reference to a lion scouring the plain, to trace the footsteps of a man who had robbed his den. The same word is also used to denote the fidelity, perseverance, and accuracy, with which the dog traces the game, by the scent of the foot, to the very place where it is lodged.

Ver. 43. If another shall come in his own name.—Some think this refers particularly to Barchochebas, a noted impostor in the succeeding age; but, as Doddridge observes, there were many other false Messiahs.

a great company come unto him, he saith unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat?

6 And this he said to prove him: for he himself knew what he would do.

7 Philip answered him, Two [b] hundred penny-worth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little.

8 One of his disciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto him,

9 There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves, and two small fishes: but what are they among so many?

10 And Jesus said, Make the men sit down. Now there was much grass in the place. So the men sat down, in number about five thousand.

11 And Jesus took the loaves; and when he had given thanks, he distributed to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were set down; and likewise of the fishes as much as they would.

12 When they were [c] filled, he said unto his disciples, Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing [d] be lost.

13 Therefore they gathered them together, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley loaves, which remained over and above unto them that had eaten.

14 Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that Jesus did, said, This is of a truth that [e] prophet that should come into the world.

15 ¶ When Jesus therefore perceived that they would come and take him by force, to make him a king, he departed again into a mountain himself alone.

16 And [f] when even was now come, his disciples went down unto the sea,

17 And entered into a ship, and went over the sea toward Capernaum. And it was now dark, and Jesus was not come to them.

18 And the sea [g] arose by reason of a great wind that blew.

19 So when they had rowed about five and twenty or thirty furlongs, they see Jesus walking on the sea, and drawing nigh unto the ship: and they were afraid.

20 But he saith unto them, It is [h] I; be not afraid.

21 Then they willingly received him into the ship: and immediately the ship was at the land whither they went.

22 ¶ The day following, when the people which stood on the other side of the sea saw that there was none other boat there, save that one whereinto his disciples were entered, and that Jesus went not with his disciples into the boat, but that his disciples were gone away alone;

23 (Howbeit there came other boats from Tiberias nigh unto the [i] place where they did eat bread, after that the Lord had given thanks:)

24 When the people therefore saw that Jesus was not there, neither his disciples, they also took shipping, and came to Capernaum, seeking for Jesus.

25 And when they had found him on the other side of the sea, they said unto him, Rabbi, when camest thou hither?

26 Jesus answered them and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Ye seek me, not be-and filled twelve baskets, which showed that the surplus only, far exceeded the food originally set before them. The people were hereby fully convinced that he must be the Great Prophet, so long and so often predicted from the time of Moses to that of Malachi; and therefore, without consulting him, intended to take him "by force," and proclaim him Messiah the King. Our Lord Jesus, however, whose kingdom was of a very different kind from that which they contemplated, knowing their design, withdrew from them, probably while they were maturing their design, in order to spend some time in private prayer, as he was accustomed to do, both night and morning, in the lonely solitude of a mountain. When evening came on, the disciples, by his previous direction, took shipping to cross the sea or lake of Galilee, toward Capernaum, while the people, finding themselves deserted by Jesus not returning, as they probably expected, naturally dispersed themselves to their several homes.

2. We now find the disciples embarked upon the sea, the night dark and stormy, and, what was worse than all, their Master was not with them. After rowing hard for between twenty and thirty furlongs, they at last see an object upon the water, at which they are startled, and, in their agitation, conclude it must be a spirit, which adds not a little to their terror. Their fears, however, as often ours do, prove unfounded. It was their Master, whose care and sympathy had brought him to their aid, and immediately as he stepped into the vessel, the storm subsided, and they reached the land. On this miracle, which is also related by Matthew, immediately after the preceding, we have there offered a few observations, and shall here add only a recollection of the principal circumstances from the meditations of the pious Bishop Taylor:—

"He that left his Father's kingdom to take upon him the miseries and infelicities of this world, fled from the offers of a kingdom, and their tumultuary election, as from an enemy; and, therefore, sending his disciples to the ship before towards Bethsaida, he ran into the mountains to hide himself, till the multitude should scatter to their several habitations; he, in the mean time, taking the opportunity of that retirement for the advantage of his prayers. But when the apostles were far engaged in the deep, a great tempest arose, with which they were pressed to the last extremity of danger . . . . labouring in sadness and hopelessness till the fourth watch of the night, when, in the midst of their fears and labour, Jesus came walking on the sea, and appeared to them, which turned their fears into affrightments; for they supposed it to have been a spirit. but he appeased their fears with his presence, and the manifestation who he was; which yet they desired to have proved by a sign. For Simon Peter said, 'Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water.' (Matt. xiv. 28.) The Lord did so, and Peter, throwing himself upon the confidence of his Master's power and providence, came out of the ship, when his fears began to weigh him down, and he cried, 'Lord, save me.' Jesus took him by the hand, reproved the timorousness of his faith, and went with him into the ship; where, when they had worshipped him, and admired the divinity of his power and person, they came. . . .to their (desired) port immediately."

Ver. 22—40. Many of the people follow Jesus to Capernaum, who reproves them for their improper motive, and recommends himself to them as the bread of life.—Among the multitudes which followed our Lord, it must be expected that they were influenced by different motives, as are doubtless most numerous congregations in the present day. Those who had formed a plan of aggrandizement, and who thought of being made ministers of state, by making him a king, were probably so much disappointed, that they followed him no farther. Those, however, who were gratified by being feasted with the loaves and fishes, at free cost, followed him to Capernaum, probably expecting to be fed again in like manner. To these our Lord now addresses himself, exhorting them to labour and strive, not for the food that perishes, but for that which endureth unto eternal life, and which the Son of man alone

CHAP. VI. Ver. 7. Two hundred penny-worth.—[This sum would amount to about $27.75 of our money; which appears to have been more than our Lord, and all his disciples, were worth of this world's goods.]—Bagster.

Ver. 10. Now there was much grass.—[No wonder, since it was the spring, being near the passover; and, from the plenty of grass, it would be a place much more suitable to the purpose. This circumstance, says Paley, is plainly the remark of an eye-witness.]—Bagster

Ver. 13. And filled twelve baskets.—[It is scarcely possible to imagine a more wonderful proof of the creative power of Christ, than was here displayed. The loaves were of the small kind, common in the country; and the fishes were also small; and yet, after the 5000 were fed, twelve times as much, at least, remained, as they at first sat down to!]—Bagster.

Ver. 15. To make him a king.—Doddridge suggests, that his ability of feeding multitudes by miracle might suggest to them, how easy it might be for him to maintain an army!

Ver. 17. Went over the sea toward Capernaum.—Mark says, "to the other side," as we read it; but Campbell renders it, "and pass over toward Bethsaida." Now these places were all on the same side of the lake with Tiberias, and might all be travelled by land;—but, 1. They wished to avoid any of the people following them. 2. They were sailors, and had got their boat, and therefore preferred going by water; but a storm arising, instead of Bethsaida, they were driven farther, even to Capernaum. The term, other side, seems equally applicable to the other end. Doddridge understands it, of the other side a creek, near Bethsaida.

Ver. 19. About five and twenty furlongs—That is, between three and four miles.

Ver. 22. None other boat.—The same vessel is in ver. 17 called a ship-which shows what humble ships these were. It is evident they had both sails and oars.

Ver. 23. From Tiberias.—[Tiberias was a celebrated city of Galilee, on the western shore of the lake to which it gave name, so called because built by Herod Agrippa in honour of the Emperor Tiberius, distant 30 furlongs from Hippos, 60 from Gadara, 120 from Scythopolis, and 30 from Taricheæ. It is still called Tabaria, or Tabbareeah, by the natives, is situated close to the 27 [i] Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that [k] meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you: for [l] him hath God the Father sealed.

28 Then said they unto him, What shall we do, that we might work the works of God?

29 Jesus answered and said unto them, This [m] is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent.

30 ¶ They said therefore unto him, What sign [n] showest thou then, that we may see, and believe thee? what dost thou work?

31 Our fathers [o] did eat manna in the desert; as it is [p] written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat.

32 Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Moses gave you not that bread from heaven; but my [q] Father giveth you the true bread from heaven.

33 For the bread of [r] God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world.

34 Then said they unto him, Lord, evermore give us this bread.

35 And Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life: he [s] that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he [t] that believeth on me shall never thirst.

36 But I said unto you, That ye [u] also have seen me, and believe not.

37 All [v] that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him [w] that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out.

38 For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but [x] the will of him that sent me.

39 And this is the Father's will [y] which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day.

40 And this is the will of him that sent me, that [z] every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will [a] raise him up at the last day.

41 The Jews then murmured at him, because he said, I am the bread which came down from heaven.

42 And they said, Is [b] not this Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? how is it then that he saith, I came down from heaven?

43 Jesus therefore answered and said unto them, Murmur not among yourselves.

44 No man can come to me, except the Father could give them. They now inquire, and our Lord explains, what that work or labour is, which he recommends; and what that food is, which endures unto eternal life.

The work of God is faith. By "the work of God," it is evident that the Jews meant, the work, or duty, which God required of them; and, by our Lord's answer, this is stated to be faith in him, and a cordial reception of him, as the Messiah. This faith is explained as receiving him, and living upon him spiritually, as we do upon bread and animal food, naturally. The mention of bread naturally enough reminded the Jews of the manna which their fathers ate in the desert—as it is written, "He gave them bread from heaven." (Ps. lxxviii. 24.) That is, manna was rained upon them from the clouds; but this true "bread of heaven" was from a higher source. "Our Lord's declaration, as I imagine, (says Dr. Campbell,) imports, that it is in a subordinate sense only, that what dropped from the clouds, and was sent for the nourishment of the body, still mortal, could be called the bread of heaven; being but a type of that which descended from the heaven of heavens, for nourishing the immortal soul unto eternal life, and which is therefore, in the most sublime sense, the bread of heaven."

But some of the Jews, for we must not suppose they were all of the same class, demand a miracle to support their faith. Perhaps these had not been at the miraculous feast on the preceding day, but had subsequently joined the party. If they had been, it confirms our Lord's assertion, that they followed him "for the loaves and fishes," and therefore wished for another miracle of the same nature; which is the more likely, if, as we may reasonably suppose, the miraculous bread and fishes of which they had partaken, were of the same superior flavour as the miraculous wine of Cana. (Chap. ii. 10.)

But to return to our Lord's discourse. He tells them, that the true "bread of heaven" had not only the power of maintaining, but also of giving life—"The bread of God is he (or rather that) which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." Then said they unto him, "Lord, evermore give us this bread!" By this answer, it is evident that they did not understand our Lord as speaking of a person, but their minds probably adverted to the miraculous feast which they had enjoyed the day before, and of which they wanted a repetition.

Jesus now more fully explains himself: "I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." Here coming to Christ is explained by believing on him; and the expression, "never hunger," as well as "never thirst," must be taken in the same sense as in his conversation with the woman of Samaria, (ch. iv. 14,) namely, that the spiritual appetite shall be perpetually supplied and satisfied.

Some commentators understand this of our Lord's doctrine, and it is certain that doctrine is food to the mind; but, from the subsequent part of the discourse, we shall find that our Lord had here a reference to his death and atonement, as well as to his doctrine. Our Lord now continues his discourse more plainly, and reproves their unbelief. "I said unto you" before, namely, in ver. 26, "Ye have even seen me, and believe not;" or, as Dr. Campbell renders it more clearly, "Though ye have seen me, ye do not believe."

"All that the Father giveth me shall come to me." This corresponds with the promise made to Messiah, in the 2d Psalm, "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance;" and in the 110th Psalm, "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power." No one can truly "come to Christ, except the Father draw him." "All that the Father draweth will come"—and "him that cometh to the Son, he will by no means cast out;" he will "lose none, but raise up" every such person to life and glory in the last day. Here, then, is the greatest possible encouragement to humble minds. He who has invited all the miserable and distressed—"Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden," (Matt. xi. 28)—will by no means reject any who come and look unto him by faith, for life and salvation.

> "Jesus, we come at thy command,
> With faith and hope, and humble zeal
> Resign our spirits to thy hand,
> To mould and guide us by thy will."—Watts.

edge of the lake, has tolerably high but ill-built walls on three of its sides, flanked with circular towers, and is of nearly a quadrangular form, according to Pococke, containing a population estimated at from 2000 to 4000 souls.]—Bagster.

Ver. 27. Labour not for the meat which perisheth.—This is a precept very liable to be abused by idle people, as in the following instance from an ancient writer:—"A certain brother came to the Convent of Mount Sinai, and finding the Monks all at work, shook his head, and said to the Abbot, 'Labour not for the meat that perisheth—Mary chose the good part.'—'Zachary,' said the old Abbot to his servant, 'give the brother a book, and show him into a cell.' There sat the Monk alone all day long. At night, wondering that nobody had called him to dinner, he goes to the Abbot. 'Father,' (says he,) 'don't the brethren eat to-day?'—'O yes,' replied the Abbot, 'they have eaten plentifully.'

And why (added the Monk) did you not call me?' 'Because, brother,' (replied the Abbot,) 'you are a spiritual man, and have no need of carnal food. For our parts . . . we are obliged to eat, and therefore we work.' . . . . 'Pardon me, father, I perceive my mistake.'—'I do,' subjoined the old man; 'but remember, Martha is as necessary a Christian as Mary.'"—Claude's Essay.—Him hath God the Father sealed—That is, ratified his mission by the power of working miracles.

Ver. 32. Moses gave you not that bread from heaven.—Campbell, "Not the bread of heaven." He observes—"Here, though the difference in expression is but small, the difference in meaning is considerable." The expression, "bread from heaven," seems to "point only to the place from which the manna came. The pronoun that, which is quite unwarranted, conduces much to this appearance."

Ver. 33. He which cometh down from heaven.—Doddridge and Campbell "That which descendeth from heaven." The latter says, "Let it be observed, that (ho artos) to which this participle (descendeth) refers, is of the masculine gender, and, by consequence, susceptible of the interpretation I have given it. . . . The request in the next verse shows that he was not yet understood, as speaking of a person."

Ver. 37. Shall come to me.—Doddridge renders it, "will come;" because (adds he) "I would not lead any in mere dependence on a translation, to build a weak argument on the word shall, which it is well known has sometimes been done."—I will in no wise.—Doddridge, "By no means." The original is very emphatical.

Ver. 39. This is the Father's will which hath sent me.—Campbell remarks, the word patros, (father,) is wanting in several MS. versions and fathers, and is omitted by Mill, and other critics. He therefore reads, "This is the will of him that sent me;" as in the next verse.—Lose nothing—Doddridge and Campbell, "Lose none," referring to persons.

Ver. 40. Every one which seeth the Son.—Campbell, "recogniseth." Doddridge, "who views the Son with an attentive eye." But both are foreign to the Scripture style: we should rather render it, "who looketh to the Son," alluding, perhaps, to the brazen serpent. See ch. iii. 14, 15.

Ver. 42. Whose father and mother we know—i. e. we know his mean extraction and education.

ther which hath sent me draw [c] him: and I will raise him up at the last day.

45 It is written [d] in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. Every man [e] therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me.

46 Not [f] that any man hath seen the Father, save he which is of God, [g] he hath seen the Father.

47 Verily, verily, I say unto you, [h] He that believeth on me hath everlasting life.

48 I [i] am that bread of life.

49 Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead.

50 This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and [k] not die.

51 I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever: and the bread that I will give is my [l] flesh, which I will give for the life [m] of the world.

52 The Jews therefore strove among themselves, saying, How [n] can this man give us his flesh to eat?

53 Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except [o] ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you.

54 Whoso [p] eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day.

55 For my flesh is meat [q] indeed, and my blood is drink indeed.

56 He that eateth [r] my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth [s] in me, and I in him.

57 As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father: so [t] he that eateth me, even he shall live by me.

58 This is that bread which came down from heaven: not as your fathers [u] did eat manna, and are dead: he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever.

59 These things said he in the synagogue, as he taught in Capernaum.

60 ¶ Many therefore of his disciples, when they had heard this, said, This is a hard saying; who can hear it?

61 When Jesus knew in himself that his disciples murmured at it, he said unto them, Doth this offend you?

62 What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend [y] up where he was before?

63 It [w] is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life.

64 But there are some of you that believe not. For Jesus knew [x] from the beginning who they were that believed not, and who should betray him.

65 And he said, Therefore said I [y] unto you, that no man can come unto me, except it were given unto him of my Father.

66 ¶ From that time many of his disciples went [z] back, and walked no more with him.

67 Then said Jesus unto the twelve, Will ye also go away?

68 Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord,

The more carnal part of the Jews probably now finding they were not likely to be entertained with any more loaves and fishes, began to murmur: "Who is this man, that talks of having come down from heaven? Is not this the son of Joseph and Mary?" and thus they depreciate the message from the humble appearance of the messenger, notwithstanding the extraordinary miracle they had so lately witnessed. But Jesus meekly replies, I know that "no man can come unto me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him;" as it is written in the prophets, "They shall be all taught of God." However humbling, and even mortifying, to proud minds it may be, this is the doctrine of both the Old Testament and the New, that "Salvation is of God;" and that to his grace we are indebted for its first beginning, and final completion.

Our Lord now returns to his former allegory, and speaks still more explicitly:—"The bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world. Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." The blood is here mentioned in distinction from the flesh, (says a learned divine,) to denote the suffering by a violent death. "My death is equally useful and necessary to the obtaining of eternal life, as food and drink are to the sustenance of the present."—"To eat the flesh and drink the blood of Christ, (says another,) denotes to receive and appropriate the blessings resulting from his bloody death—pardon of sin, and peace of mind." Thus, under the cover of figurative language, but easy to be understood by pious Jews, accustomed to read the Old Testament, our Lord not only predicts his death, but preaches the doctrine of his atonement, as necessary to "give life unto the world," or, in other words, for the salvation of mankind. (See Dr. J. P. Smith's Messiah.)

We are accustomed to appropriate this language to the Lord's Supper, and very properly, as that is founded on this doctrine of atonement; but it can only refer to it prophetically, as it was not yet instituted; nor could it be intended, at that time, so to be understood. The carnal Jews, it is plain, did not understand it at all; for they murmured among themselves, "How can this man give us his flesh to eat?" They had no idea of eating or drinking but in the grossest sense; and it is evident, in the sequel, that his own disciples knew not what to make of it.

But this living upon Christ by faith, implies something more than even trusting to his atonement; it implies a daily communion with him, and a constant dependance on him, as on our daily food. It implies, that the Holy Spirit which animated Christ the head, animates also his believing members. "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father; so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me."

> "Tho' Christ was dead, he ever lives;
> To sinners life divine he gives;
> And saints, to keep each grace alive,
> From him must constant power derive."—Simon Browne.

Ver. 59—71. Many of the disciples of Jesus desert him; Peter's noble profession of attachment.—The preceding discourse, we here learn, was delivered in the synagogue of Capernaum, on which occasion many of our Lord's own disciples were offended, and murmured among themselves, saying, "This is a hard saying; who can hear (or understand) it." As to the dialogue, or altercation, that took place, we have several similar instances recorded by the Evangelists. (See Matt. xii. 10. Luke xiii. 14. Acts xiii. 45, &c.) For it seems to have been the custom to allow objectors, in certain cases, to reply to the speaker or preacher; or to ask questions, to which the speaker was expected to reply. Jesus did so in the present instance: "And what (said he) if you shall (or should) see the Son of man ascending up where he was before?" This passage has been considered by different persons as a key to the whole of our Lord's preceding discourse, and in that view we insert Dr. Pye Smith's judicious paraphrase: "If your prejudices are so shocked by my assurance that the Messiah must go through the lowest degradation, and an excruciating death, how will your disappointment be increased when you find that, on his reassuming his pristine dignity, and ascending to the throne of his glory, in the exercise of all power in heaven and on earth, he will confer on his disciples no such happiness as you desire. He will give no provinces nor estates; no titles, riches, nor carnal gratifications. The blessings of his reign are not those of sense, but are of an intellectual and holy kind. The divine energy which accompanies the truth taught by me, is the only cause of the enjoyment of those immortal blessings: while every profession observance, or privilege, that is merely external, can be of no avail to your real and eternal happiness; nor could even the actual feeding on my flesh and blood, if so horrid an attempt were made. My doctrine teaches, and, when sincerely believed, communicates that divine energy and that real happiness."—Smith's Messiah.

The following words (ver. 63) have, indeed, some obscurity, but Doddridge thus explains them: "The words which I speak, they are spirit; that is, to be taken in a spiritual sense;

Ver. 51. And the bread.—[This was one of the things which the Jews expected from the Messiah, as we learn from Midrash Koheleth, "Rabbi Berekiah in the name of Rabbi Isaac said, As was the first Redeemer, so also shall be the latter. The first Redeemer made manna descend from heaven, as it is said in Ex. xvi. 4, 'And I will rain bread from heaven for you.' So also the latter Redeemer shall make manna descend, as it is said, Ps. lxxii. 16, 'There shall be a handful of corn in the earth,'" &c.]—Bagster.

Ver. 52. His flesh.—Boothroyd and others, think this refers to the Jewish custom of feasting on their sacrifices

Ver. 53. Except ye eat the flesh.—The Rhemish annotators absurdly apply this passage to the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, (or of the Mass, as they call it,) though that was not instituted till just before his death.—Ye have no life.—Campbell, "Not life;" i. e. spiritual life.

Ver. 57. As the living Father hath sent me.—Campbell, "As the Father liveth who sent me."

Ver. 61. Doth this offend you?—Campbell, "scandalize you?"

CHAPTER VII.

1 Jesus reproveth the ambition and boldness of his kinsmen: 10 goeth up from Galilee to the feast of tabernacles: 14 teacheth in the temple. 40 Divers opinions of him among the people. 45 The Pharisees are angry that their officers took him not, and chide with Nicodemus for taking his part.

AFTER these things Jesus walked in Galilee: for he would not walk in Jewry, because the Jews sought to kill him.

2 Now the Jews' [a] feast of tabernacles was at hand.

3 His brethren therefore said unto him, Depart hence, and go into Judea, that thy disciples also may see the works that thou doest.

4 For there is no man that doeth any thing in secret, and he himself seeketh to be known openly. If thou do these things, show thyself to the world.

5 For neither did his brethren [b] believe in him.

6 Then Jesus said unto them, My [c] time is not yet come: but your time is alway ready.

7 The [d] world cannot hate you; but me it hateth, because I testify of it, that the works thereof are evil.

8 Go ye up unto this feast: I go not up yet unto this feast; for my time is not yet full come.

9 When he had said these words unto them, he abode still in Galilee.

10 But when his brethren were gone up, then went he also up unto the feast, not openly, but as it were in secret.

11 ¶ Then [e] the Jews sought him at the feast, and said, Where is he?

12 And [f] there was much murmuring among the people concerning him: for some said, He is a good man: others said, Nay; but he deceiveth the people.

13 Howbeit no man spake openly of him for fear of the Jews.

14 ¶ Now about the midst of the feast Jesus went up into the temple, and taught.

15 And [g] the Jews marvelled, saying, How knoweth this man [h] letters, having never learned?

and then you will find that they are life to your souls; whereas, to take them in a literal sense, they are most unprofitable and monstrous." This Jesus said, knowing that among those who followed him, were many who believed not, and one even of his apostles, who would betray him, and who probably now first began to entertain such a diabolical intention; and therefore our Lord calls him a devil—that is, a traitor and false accuser.

But let us hear Peter, whose honest heart spurned at treachery, though he afterwards proved a coward, through over confidence in his own strength. When Jesus saw one and another, who had been fed miraculously at his table, now slinking away privately from his society, till the number seems greatly to have been reduced, he said to the twelve, "Will ye also go away?" Peter, who, as we have said, scorned the thoughts of such conduct, boldly answered, "To whom, Lord, shall (or can) we go? thou hast the words of eternal life;" alluding evidently to what our Lord had just said, of his words being "spirit and life." And here we are furnished with the best possible answer to every temptation to apostacy, from whatever quarter it may arise. Does Infidelity tempt us to desert the standard of the cross? What has she to offer? Nothing but an awful blank to every Christian hope; eternal sleep instead of eternal bliss; and annihilation, instead of endless glory. Does the world tempt us to desert from Christ for its wealth, its splendour, or its joys? Alas! they pass away like a rising vapour, or the flecting clouds of summer. To whom then can we go? Thou, Lord, and thou alone, hast "the words of eternal life."

The warm-hearted apostle adds, "And we believe, and are sure, that thou art [the] Christ, the Son of the living God." Happy is it for us to be able to adopt this language from our hearts; but we should always bear upon our minds the sequel of Peter's history. He who now was most sure of Christ's character, but a short time afterwards protested that he did not know the man! The most forward professors are often the most cowardly; and sometimes the most diffident, the most victorious.

"A feeble saint shall win the day, Tho' death and hell obstruct the way."

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—13. Jesus reproves his brethren; but follows them to the feast of Tabernacles.—After these things, that is, after the preceding conversations, Jesus still walked in Galilee, teaching as he went, whether in the public roads or private houses, or in the synagogues on the Sabbath day; for he would not yet walk in Jewry, or Judea, because the Jews sought to kill him, and his time was not yet come to die. His brethren, however, or cousins rather, who did not cordially believe on him, though, for his mother's sake, probably, they did not choose openly to oppose him: these false friends, who are always worse than open enemies, persuade him to go directly to Judea, and there to exhibit his miracles before the Jews, who (as they probably well knew) were already plotting his destruction. "Go into Judea, (say they,) that thy disciples [there] also may see the works that thou doest: for no man doeth any thing in secret who himself seeketh to be publicly known," or noticed. "If (or since) thou [art able to] do these things, show thyself to the world," and convince them that thou art the great prophet which thou *g*ivest thyself out to be.

It should seem that many persons associated themselves among our Lord's disciples, with the expectation that he would shortly assume a public character, and promote them to situations of influence and honour, and they probably grew weary with delay, and therefore urged him to bring matters to a crisis. This might be the case in the present instance: or it may be these kinsmen of our Lord, who were going themselves to Jerusalem, hoped to see some splendid miracles wrought there, of which they had heard much in Galilee, though probably they had seen but few; our Lord always avoiding any thing like display, and always refusing to gratify an idle curiosity.

"My time is not yet come; but your time is always ready." As if our Lord had said, "I have reasons for delay which affect not your case. You are always ready to push yourselves forward to public notice, and you may do so without danger. You have not provoked them by any exposure of their crimes, or by any protest against their errors; but the case is widely different with me. I have protested both against their principles and conduct, and they therefore hate me and seek my life, the time for me to resign which is not yet come."

For these reasons Jesus refused to go up at first, and when he did go, went up privately, that he might not prematurely attract their notice. In the mean time, he heard their secret whisperings and debates respecting him. His enemies inquired for him, "Where is he?" and this bringing on a conversation respecting him, some said, "He is a good man;" others said, "Nay; but he deceiveth the people." Howbeit, "no man spake openly [in favour] of him for fear of the Jews," that is, those who were in authority—the Jewish rulers. It may seem strange that, after the lapse of eighteen centuries, there should still be the same diversity of opinions respecting the person and character of our Saviour; but so it always will be while the world is divided into saints and sinners, and while of those who profess his name, many are ashamed or afraid to own it before his enemies.

Ver. 14—27. Jesus goes up about the middle of the feast, and justifies both his doctrine and his conduct.—What particular circumstance might render it proper for Jesus to go up to the feast now, and not before, it is impossible to ascertain. No sooner, however, did he arrive, than he went up into the temple, and his teaching, as usual, soon attracted attention and admiration; and they who knew his limited education, ex-

Ver. 6. Your time is always ready—i. e. you are never backward to show yourselves to the world.

16 Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not [i] mine, but his that sent me.

17 If [j] any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.

18 He [k] that speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory: but he that [l] seeketh his glory that sent him, the same is true, and no unrighteousness is in him.

19 Did not Moses [m] give you the law, and yet none [n] of you keepeth the law? Why go ye about to kill [o] me?

20 The people answered and said, [p] Thou hast a devil: who goeth about to kill thee?

21 Jesus answered and said unto them, I have done one work, and ye all marvel.

22 Moses [q] therefore gave unto you circumcision; (not because it is of Moses, but [r] of the fathers;) and ye on the sabbath day circumcise a man.

23 If a man on the sabbath day receive circumcision, [s] that the law of Moses should not be broken; are ye angry at me, because [t] I have made a man every whit whole on the sabbath day?

25 Then said some of them of Jerusalem, Is not this he, whom they seek to kill?

26 But, lo, he speaketh boldly, and they say nothing unto him. Do [v] the rulers know indeed that this is the very Christ?

27 Howbeit [w] we know this man whence he is: but when Christ cometh, no man knoweth whence he is.

claimed, "How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?" This certainly cannot refer to the mere elements of reading, for every Jewish child was taught to read; but letters must be here taken in the higher sense of literature, or "learning," as our margin reads it. Not that we apprehend our Lord made any display of secular or polite literature, which was foreign to his style and manner; but he employed an easy and popular elocution, a force of reasoning, and a deep acquaintance with the Hebrew Scriptures, which eminently distinguished his discourses from those of the scribes and Pharisees, and thus excited the admiration of the people, and the envy and malevolence of their accustomed teachers.

But the great point before us is the doctrine here laid down, that the best way to understand the will of God is by studying to obey him; "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine [I preach] whether it be of God." But on this subject we shall present our readers with another beautiful extract from Bishop Taylor, of pious memory. "We (says the Bishop) have examined all ways in our inquiries after religious truth, but one, all but God's way. Let us, having missed in all the other, try this. Let us go to God for truth; for truth comes from God only. If we miss the truth, it is because we will not find it; for certain it is, that all the truth which God hath made necessary, he hath also made legible and plain; and if we will open our eyes we shall see the sun; and if we will 'walk in the light,' we shall 'rejoice in the light.' . . . . 'The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and a good understanding have all they that do his commandments.' And so David says of himself, 'I have more understanding than my teachers, because I keep thy precepts.' And this is the only way which Christ has taught us. If you ask What is truth? you must not do as Pilate did, ask the question, and then go away from him that only can give you an answer: for as God is the author of truth, so he is the teacher of it, and the way to learn is this; for so saith our blessed Lord—'If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God.'"

We must not, however, attribute this discovery to our own wisdom or our own strength. "There is (continues the good prelate) in every righteous man a new vital principle. The spirit of grace is the spirit of wisdom, and teaches us by secret inspirations, by proper arguments, by actual persuasions, by personal applications, by effects and energies: and as the soul of man is the cause of all his vital operations, so is the Spirit of God the life of that life, and the cause of all actions and productions spiritual; and the consequence of this is, what St. John tells us, 'Ye have received the unction from above, and that anointing teacheth you all things'—all things that pertain to life and godliness; all that by which a man is wise and happy. Unless the soul have a new life put into it, unless there be a vital principle within, unless the spirit of life be the informer of the spirit of man, unless there be in our hearts a secret conviction by the Spirit of God, the Gospel itself is a dead letter." (Via Intellig. quoted in Dr. Knox's Christ. Philos. § 6.)

In thus admonishing the Jews that the way to acquire a fuller knowledge of the divine will was to practise what they already did know, our Lord strongly implies that their ignorance arose from disobedience of heart: they hated the truth, and therefore rejected him that taught it. They sought their own glory, and the honour which comes of men: they were therefore insensible to his merits, who sought not his own glory, but that only which comes from God. (See ch. v. 41.)

Our Lord then adverts to the signal miracle which he had wrought at the pool of Bethesda, as related in the beginning of chapter v., and which, while it had excited the admiration of the multitude, excited also the enmity of their rulers, under the pretence that it was a violation of the sabbath, though they themselves made no scruple of performing, on the same holy day, the rite of circumcision. "But if ye yourselves perform this work of circumcision, to prevent one duty from interfering with another, why are ye angry with me for performing such a miracle of mercy as the cure of this miserable son of Abraham on the sabbath-day." Such is the tenor of our Lord's argument, which seems for the moment to have silenced his enemies and satisfied the people. "What," said some of them, "is not this he whom they seek to kill? But, lo! he speaketh boldly, and they say nothing to him. Do the rulers know"—are they at length convinced—"that this is the very Christ?"—the true Messiah? Recollecting themselves, however, and adverting to some tradition of the elders, (as it seems to us,) they conclude he surely could not be the Messiah, on account of his parentage being so well known: "When Christ cometh, no man knoweth whence he is." This, however, could only be true in reference to his divine nature, in which they certainly did not believe; but his tribe, his family, his birth-place, were all marked out, and all exactly corresponded in Jesus, the son of Mary, though they did not know it. The fact is, they did not search the Scriptures for themselves—they did not pray for divine illumination—they did not dare reason on the evidence before them, or they must surely have concluded that he who could restore the sick and the blind must be "the very Christ"—the true Messiah.

Ver. 28—39. Jesus proclaims his origin as sent from God and gives the promise of his Holy Spirit.—It may seem strange that our Saviour, who was so backward to go up to the feast, should now thus expose himself to his enemies in the most public manner, by proclaiming his character and mission in the temple. But he had doubtless his reasons: and as to his enemies, "They sought to take him; but no man did Thus Wesley, (ver. 21,) "I did one work and ye all marvel AT IT."——Not because (Doddridge, "that") it was of Moses, but of the fathers—Or early patriarchs, namely, Abraham. Gen. xvii. 16.

Ver. 25. He, whom they seek to kill?—Notwithstanding some of the people affected to think Jesus mad, because he said, "Ye go about to kill me," yet it is very evident from this, and several other expressions in this chapter, that they really had such a design, and had made no great secret of it.

Ver. 26. The very Christ.—The word (alethos) "very," or "true," Campbell remarks, is wanting in many MSS. and versions, and in some early editions, and is not necessary to the sense.

Ver. 28. Ye both know me, and ye know whence I am.—Bishop Chandler who is followed by Doddridge, Campbell, and Wesley, reads these words interrogatively; but, we humbly conceive, without sufficient reason.

40 ¶ Many of the people therefore, when they heard this saying, said, Of a truth this is the [l] Prophet.

41 Others said, This is the [m] Christ. But some said, Shall [n] Christ come out of Galilee?

42 Hath not the scripture said, That Christ [o] cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of [p] Bethlehem, where David [q] was?

43 So there was a division among the people because of him.

44 And some of them would have taken him; but no man laid hands on him.

45 ¶ Then came the officers to the chief priests and Pharisees; and they said unto them, Why have ye not brought him?

46 The officers answered, [r] Never man spake like this man.

47 Then answered them the Pharisees, Are ye also deceived?

48 Have any of the rulers [s] or of the Pharisees believed on him?

49 But this people who knoweth not the law are cursed.

50 Nicodemus saith unto them, ([t] he that came [u] to Jesus by night, being one of them,)

51 Doth [v] our law judge any man, before it hear him, and know what he doeth?

52 They answered and said unto him, Art

(or could) lay hands on him, because his time was not yet come." They were bound by an invisible power, and he was "immortal till his work was done."

But how shall we reconcile this declaration, "Ye both know me, and whence I am," with his assertion in the next chapter, (verse 19,) "Ye neither know me nor my Father?" This we explain by the following paraphrase:—"Ye know me as the Son of Mary, the wife of Joseph the carpenter of Nazareth; but ye know me not as the Son of God from heaven; neither do ye know him that sent me; who is true, and who hath sent me in fulfilment of his promises of mercy to mankind."

Nothing is here said of any particular miracles wrought on this occasion, yet such seem to be implied on their saying, "When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles than this man hath done!" And many of the people believed on him. These he informed that he had not long to remain with them, but was going whither, in present circumstances, they could not follow him—namely, to heaven; but they understood it of his design to go among the Gentiles: "Will he leave Judea, and offer himself, as the Messiah, to the Jews scattered in the surrounding nations? or even to the Greeks themselves?"

The last day of the feast of Tabernacles (at which they were now assembled) was considered as a great and high day; and on this it was customary to draw water in the sacred vases from the fountain of Siloah, (or Siloam,) which was a little without the wall, and was brought up to the temple with the sound of trumpets and with great rejoicings, and afterwards "poured out before the Lord" at the time of the evening sacrifice. The mystical design of this ceremony has been differently explained. Some suppose it to have been designed to supplicate rain upon the seed just sown; and others, to invoke the influences of the Holy Spirit; but we see no difficulty in embracing both, as the rain itself was the established emblem of the diffusion of the Spirit, (Isa. lv. 10, 11,) which has the express sanction of our Lord's interpretation. For, "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly," or from his heart, "shall flow rivers of living water;" that is, copious streams of piety and benevolence. Believers in Christ are here compared to the golden vases of the temple—they are filled with the influences of the Spirit, as were the bellies of those vases with the living waters of Siloah.

This passage undoubtedly received a signal accomplishment on the day of Pentecost, but is certainly not to be confined to that period, or to miraculous influences only, as we shall find abundant evidence, both in the sequel of our Lord's discourses with his apostles, and in the history of that event. The final remark in this section, that "the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because that Jesus was not yet glorified," teaches us that the gifts of the Spirit, both ordinary and miraculous, are the fruits of Christ's mediatorial work; and bestowed on us in consequence of his being exalted to the right hand of the Majesty on high. (See Acts ii. 33.)

Ver. 40—53. Divers opinions of Christ: and the Pharisees exasperated by the officers refusing to arrest him.—The discourses of Christ appear to have been equally convincing with his miracles, and sometimes even more effectual. An unction doubtless attended his ministry, and where his hearers were not converted, his addresses might often make a considerable impression, as in the case before us, for we are not told that any of them believed. Some said, "Of a truth (or truly) this is the prophet"—namely, the great prophet long foretold by Moses. (Deut. xviii. 15.) Others said, this is the Christ, or Messiah, alluding probably to David, speaking of the Lord's Anointed, (which is of the same import,) in the second and other Psalms. But an angry dispute, a division, here arises among the people. Some say, "Shall Christ come out of Galilee?" And others of them are learned enough to ascertain that he was to be of Bethlehem, the city of David. True; but might he not be born in Bethlehem, and yet preach in Galilee? It seems, indeed, a little strange that, though they remembered well enough the obscure parentage and education of Jesus, they seem to have no tradition of the visit of the Magi, or of Herod's subsequent cruelties at Bethlehem.

Among those who debated thus about Christ, were the officers sent by the Sanhedrim to apprehend him, but who were so overcome by the eloquence and unction with which he spake, that they could not execute their warrant. And when they returned, and were called to account, why they had not brought their prisoner, they honestly confessed the cause was, that, in their opinion, "Never man spake like this man." Upon this the Pharisees fly into a rage, and exclaim, "Are ye also deceived? Have any of the rulers, or of the Pharisees, believed on him?" As if truth always dwelt with the higher ranks of society; and as if the lower orders were not accountable to their Maker for either their principles or conduct, but were bound to surrender their consciences to their superiors—a sentiment now happily exploded, as equally irrational and unscriptural; for "every one of us must give an account of himself to God." (Rom. xiv. 12.)

Nicodemus, one of the rulers, is here again introduced to notice—the same who came to Jesus by night for fear of the Jews, and who now assumes a little more courage, and ventures to put in a word on his behalf:—"Doth our law"—the law of Moses and of God—"judge any man before it hear him?" Certainly not; but his wise fellow-senators, instead of answering that question, give a sneering reply—'Art thou also of Galilee? Search and look; for out of Galilee ariseth no prophet." And yet here they betray their ignorance; for the prophets Jonah and Nahum, as Doddridge observes, (if no others,) were both of that country. In consequence of this dissension among the people, the demur of Nicodemus, i Christ delivereth the woman taken in adultery. 12 He preacheth himself the light of the world, and justifieth his doctrine: 33 answereth the Jews that boasted of Abraham, 59 and conveyeth himself from their cruelty.

JESUS went unto the mount of Olives.

2 And early in the morning he came again into the temple, and all the people came unto him; and he sat down, and taught them.

3 And the scribes and Pharisees brought unto him a woman taken in adultery; and when they had set her in the midst,

4 They say unto him, Master, this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act.

5 Now [a] Moses in the law commanded us, that such should be stoned: but what sayest thou?

6 This they said, tempting him, that they might have to accuse him. But Jesus stooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground, as though he heard them not.

7 So when they continued asking him, he lifted up himself, and said unto them, He that is without sin among you, [b] let him first cast a stone at her.

8 And again he stooped down, and wrote on the ground.

9 And they which heard it, being convicted by their own conscience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even unto the last: and Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst.

10 When Jesus had lifted up himself, and saw none but the woman, he said unto her, Woman, where are those thine accusers? hath no man condemned thee?

11 She said, No man, Lord. And Jesus said unto her, Neither do I condemn [c] thee: go, and sin [d] no more.

12 ¶ Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I [e] am the light of the world: he that [f] followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.

13 The Pharisees therefore said unto him, Thou [g] barest record of thyself; thy record is not true.

14 Jesus answered and said unto them, Though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true: for I know whence I came, and whither I go; but [h] ye cannot tell whence I come, and whither I go.

and especially the disobedience of the officers, the council appears to have broken up without coming to any determination, and every man departed to his own house. Jesus, however, retired to the Mount of Olives; but whether he spent the whole night in devotion, as he sometimes did, or retired afterwards to rest at the house of Lazarus, in Bethany, at the foot of it, we are not informed: we find him, however, in the temple early on the following morning.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—11. The woman taken in adultery, brought to Jesus.—Notwithstanding the division among the people, and the attempt of the rulers to apprehend him, we find Jesus again in the temple early on the following morning; and no sooner does he appear, than the people again draw round him, and he sits down in one of the cloisters of the temple to instruct them. The Scribes and Pharisees, however, seeking by every possible means to ensnare him, bring before him a woman taken in adultery, whom they say Moses commanded to be stoned; but they wish to know his judgment on the case—"Master, what sayest thou?"

The case indeed seems but obscurely stated. The law of Moses (Deut. xxii. 22—24) made the crime capital only in the case of a betrothed woman, and then both parties were equally liable to the punishment. The woman is brought for the purpose of tempting our Saviour, that they might have somewhat whereof to accuse him. Had he consigned her to punishment, they might have censured his severity to the woman; "Is this he that came to seek and to save that which was lost?" Had he discharged her, they might have blamed him for lack of zeal for the law and for good morals: "Behold the friend of publicans and of sinners!" The snare was laid artfully, but he avoided it by his prudence. He is silent for some time, and takes no notice, as if he did not hear them, writing with his finger in the dust, until their importunity at length compels him; and then, raising himself erect, he says to her accusers, "Let him among you that is without sin, cast the first stone at her." It seems going too far to say, that all her accusers were guilty of the same crime, though it was, unhappily, very common; but it should seem, if not of the same, they were conscious of other enormities, though secret, which no less disqualified them to punish her with severity. At length, however, they gradually withdrew, beginning with the elders, who, first seeing the impropriety of their conduct, were of course followed by the younger.

This very unexpected answer seems to have disconcerted their design. Their consciences stung them, and they were silenced. "These men's sins, (says Bp. Hall,) as they had been secret, so they were forgotten. It is long since they were done, neither did they think to have heard any more news of them. And now, when time and security had quite worn them out of thought, he that shall one day be their judge, calls them to a back-reckoning.

"One time or other shall that just God lay our sins in our dish, and make us possess the sins of our youth. 'These things thou didst and I kept silence, and thoughtest that I was like unto thyself: but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thee.' The penitent man's sin lies before him, for his humiliation; the impenitent's, for his shame and confusion.

"It is but just that there should be a requisition of innocence in them that prosecute the vices of others. The offender is worthy of stoning, but who shall cast them? How ill would they become hands as guilty as her own? What do they but smite themselves, who punish their own offences in other men? Nothing is more unjust or absurd, than for the beam to censure the mote; the oven to upbraid the kiln. It is a false and vagrant zeal that begins not first at home.

"No sooner did these hypocrites hear of their sins from the mouth of Christ, than they are gone. Had they been sincerely touched with a true remorse, they would have rather come to him upon their knees, and have said, 'Lord, we find that thou knowest our secret sins: this argues thy divine omniscience. Thou that art able to know our sins, art able to remit them. O pardon the iniquities of thy servants."

But what becomes of the woman? She is left standing among the people, struck, probably, with the wisdom of his decision, and waiting for a word of mercy to herself. She receives it, and departs; "Go, and sin no more."—"God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved." John iii. 17.

Ver. 12—32. Christ the light of the world—the revealer of the Father's will.—Our Lord now speaks of himself as the light of the world, under which character he is spoken of by this evangelist in the first chapter of this Gospel, ver. 4 and 5. When Christ is thus called, it must always be understood in reference to the sun, under which image he was promised by the prophet Malachi, (ch. iv. 2:) "Unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise, with healing in his wings:" and it is on account of this "healing under his wings," or beams, that he is called "the light of LIFE." This true light is not like the cold light of philosophy, which, though it may enlighten the intellect, does not affect the heart; nor is it like the sickly light of enthusiasm, which destroys the healthful

Ver. 53. Every man went unto his own house.—Wesley, and some others, attach to this sentence the first verse of the following chapter. "But (Greek de) Jesus went to the mount of Olives."

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—11. "It is well known, (says Doddridge,) that this story is wanting in the Syriac version, in the Alexandrian and Bodleian copies, and in most of the oldest MSS., which engaged Beza to question, and Le Clerc, with many others, to reject its authority." But it is fully vindicated by Dr. Mill, Bp. Pearce, and the learned Nolan. Doddridge appears satisfied of its authenticity, but Campbell is doubtful. It is certainly more easy to account for its omission than its insertion; and many think it was omitted from a mistaken notion of our Lord being too indulgent to the adulteress. See Preb. Townsend's New Testament Arr. "The subject of the story, says that eminent critic, Eusebius, forms as convincing a proof in support of its genuineness, as it does in the subversion of the contrary notion, that it is an interpolation. There could be no possible inducement for fabricating such a passage, while there is an obvious motive for removing it from the canon. It has, besides, internal evidence of authenticity, in the testimony of the Vulgate, in which it is uniformly found; and external, in the express acknowledgment of its genuineness by St. Chrysostome, St. Jerome, St. Augustine, and St. Ambrose; and St. Augustine has specified the reason of its having been withdrawn from the text of the Evangelist. Add to this, that the plain and simple style is that of the Evangelist; and that every circumstance is completely in character; exactly what might be expected from the scribes and Pharisees, and from our Lord; while his answer, though perfectly suited to the purpose, would scarcely have ever been thought of by human ingenuity.]—Bagster.

Ver. 6. Wrote on the ground.—This is not uncommon in the East. Some commentators think our Lord's conduct had some reference to the law of jealousy, Nu. v. 11, &c.—to the priest's stooping to take up dust, and writing the curses pronounced upon her; but of this we are very doubtful.—As though he heard them not.—What Christ wrote we know not, and it is in vain to guess: but if these words are genuine, his writing could have no reference to her case, or they must have known he heard them. Dr. Mill, however, omits these words, and Doddridge thinks justly, as they are wanting in the most valuable MSS., and several other printed editions besides Mill's.

Ver. 9. Being convicted by their own conscience.—Campbell says this clause is wanting in many MSS., and several versions and printed editions. —Beginning at the eldest.—It would be straining the text too far, to suppose they all went out in exact rotation; but the elder and most respected members of the council, being self-convicted, first withdrew, and the others followed.

Ver. 11. Neither do I condemn thee.—Our Lord carefully avoids assuming any appearance of magisterial authority. See Luke xii 14

15 Ye judge after the flesh; I [i] judge no man.
16 And yet if I judge, my [j] judgment is true: for I [k] am not alone, but I and the Father that sent me.
17 It is also written [l] in your law, that the testimony of two men is true.
18 I am one that bear witness of myself, and the Father [m] that sent me beareth witness of me.
19 Then said they unto him, Where is thy Father? Jesus answered, Ye [n] neither know me, nor my Father: if [o] ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also.
20 These words spake Jesus in the [p] treasury, as he taught in the temple: and no man laid hands on him; for [q] his hour was not yet come.
21 Then said Jesus again unto them, I go my way, and ye [r] shall seek me, and [s] shall die in your sins: whither I go, ye [t] cannot come.
22 Then said the Jews, Will he kill himself? because he saith, Whither I go, ye cannot come.
23 And he said unto them, Ye are from beneath; I am from above: ye are of this world; I am not of this world.
24 I [u] said therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins: for [v] if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins.
25 Then said they unto him, Who art thou? And Jesus saith unto them, Even the same that I said unto you from the beginning.
26 I have many things to say and to judge of you: but [w] he that sent me is true; and I speak to the world those things which I have heard of him.
27 They understood not that he spake to them of the Father.

28 Then said Jesus unto them, When ye have lifted up [x] the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am he, and that I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, I speak these things.
29 And he that sent me is with [y] me: the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him.
30 As he spake these words, many believed on him.
31 ¶ Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue [z] in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed;
32 And ye shall know [a] the truth, and the truth shall make you [b] free.
33 ¶ They answered him, We be Abraham's seed, and were never in [c] bondage to any man: how sayest thou, Ye shall be made free?
34 Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever [d] committeth sin is the servant of sin.
35 And the servant [e] abideth not in the house for ever: but the Son abideth ever.
36 If [f] the Son therefore shall make you free, ye [g] shall be free indeed.
37 I know that ye are Abraham's seed; but ye seek to kill me, because my word hath no place in you.
38 I [h] speak that which I have seen with my Father: and ye do that which ye have seen with your father.
39 They answered and said unto him, Abraham [i] is our father. Jesus saith unto them, If [j] ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham.
40 But now ye seek to kill me, a man that vigour of the mind. It is life, and light, and joy, and peace, and happiness; and those who follow this light cannot walk in darkness; they shall neither be frozen to insensibility, nor heated to extravagance.

But he says, "I am the light of the world;" implying that, though he arose first upon the Jews, yet should he, like the natural sun, pursue his course till all nations should see and enjoy his light.

The Pharisees take offence at this discourse. "Thou bearest record of thyself," (say they,) and therefore, by thine own showing, thy evidence is invalid and inadmissible. (See chap. v. 31, and note there.) To this Jesus replies, "Though I bear witness of myself, I do not alone bear witness; my heavenly Father bears witness with me, in the doctrines which I deliver, and in the miraculous powers with which I am endowed. I cannot be deceived, because I certainly know whence I came, and whither I am going. Nor can you be deceived by me, because my witness is thus confirmed by him who 'cannot lie:' my Father himself beareth witness of me."—"Thy Father?" return the Jews,—"Where is thy Father?" Let us see him and believe. True, indeed, replies our Saviour, "Ye neither know me, nor my Father;" for, "had ye known me, ye would have known my Father also:" Had ye known my true character, ye would have known that the most high God is indeed my Father.

"These words spake Jesus in the treasury, as he taught in the temple;" and notwithstanding he spake so openly, and so boldly, claiming God to be his own Father, as he had done before, to their great offence and scandal, (in chap. v. 18,) yet no man laid hands on him, "for his time was not yet come."

Our Lord here repeats a sentiment which he had already advanced in the preceding chapter: "I go my way, and whither I go ye cannot come;" upon which some, more extravagant than those who had heard him before, now exclaim, "Will he kill himself," and escape to the other world, where we cannot follow him? Far be it from the Saviour of the world in any degree to countenance suicide. No: they were the murderers, and the fatal principle was already fixed in their hearts—they sought his life.

Jesus now explains the reason why they cannot enter into his views and principles. They were carnal and worldly men, and acted upon carnal and worldly principles: they "judged according to the flesh." On the other hand, He was of another world; judged and acted on far different principles; and always did and said those things which pleased God his Father.

While delivering this discourse, of which (as of all his discourses) we have only an outline, many believed on him, or at least professed to do so, to whom he said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed:" "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free;" that is, my doctrine, which is from above, and is as true as God is true, shall set you at liberty from the slavery of ignorance and vice—ye "shall be free indeed."

> "Oh! still that needful grace impart,
> On thee my trembling soul I cast:
> Perfect thy work within my heart,
> And own my worthless name at last!"

Ver. 33—47. The Jews boast of being Abraham's seed, and therefore free, which Jesus controverts.—We must, for a moment, turn back to the preceding section, and notice the nature of the liberty here spoken of; which is illustrated by

Ver. 15. Ye judge after the flesh—That is, from outward appearances, and on carnal principles. Compare chap. vii. 24.——I judge no man—i. e. my present commission is to save, and not to judge. See note on verse 11.

Ver. 20. Treasury.—In the court of the women in the temple there was placed one chest, or more; the Jews say eleven, for receiving the voluntary contributions of the people towards defraying the charges of public worship; such as providing the public sacrifices, wood for the altar, salt, and other necessaries. That part of the area where these chests were placed was the treasury. Mark xii. 41. Perhaps the whole court, or at least the piazza on one side, with the chambers over it, in which the sacred stores were kept, was from hence called by the same name.—Jennings's Jew. Ant.

Ver. 24. Ye shall die in your sins—That is, if ye accept not the Saviour whom God has provided, ye must die without pardon or salvation. Our Lord here tells the Jews, that they should die in their sins, and whither he went they could not come. But, according to the scheme of Universalists, they might die in their sins, and yet be able to go whither he went, and inherit eternal life. Whom shall we believe? Voltaire spent his whole life in malignant but vain attempts to ridicule and overturn Christianity. He was the idol of a large portion of the French nation: but just when they were decreeing new honours for him, and loading him with fresh applause, then the hour of his ignominy and shame was fully come. In a moment the approach of death dissipated his delusive dreams, and filled his guilty soul with inexpressible horror. As if moved by magic, conscience started from her long slumbers, and unfolded before him the broad extended roll of all his crimes. Ah! whither shall he fly for relief! Fury and despair succeed each other by turns, and he has more the appearance of a demon than a man. To his physician he said, "Doctor, I will give you half of what I am worth if you will give me six months life." The Doctor answered, "Sir, you cannot live six weeks." Voltaire replied, "Then shall I go to hell, and you shall go with me;" and soon after expired.——That I am he—Namely, the Messiah, as I have told you—even from the beginning. See next verse.

Ver. 26. Judge of you.—Campbell, "Reprove in you."

Ver. 28. When ye have lifted up—i. e. crucified.——Then shall ye know.—See Luke xxiii. 46, 47.

Ver. 33. They answered.—Campbell, "Some answered;" i. e. not the persons who believed in him, as the context shows, but others of them who believed not. So Doddridge.

Ver. 34. Whosoever committeth—Doddridge, "practiseth"—sin. He thinks it exactly parallel to "worketh iniquity," and implying a course of habitual transgression.——Is the servant—Doddridge, "the slave"—of sin; which is more literal.

Ver. 36. If the Son. . . . make you free, &c.—Alp. Tillotson says, that in some cities of Greece, the son and heir had a right to adopt brethren into the family; but Dr. Gill thinks that this refers to a custom among the Romans, of a son, after his father's death, making free all the slaves that had been born in the house.

hath told you the truth, which I have heard of God: this [k] did not Abraham.

41 Ye do the deeds of your father. Then said they to him, We be not born of fornication; we [l] have one Father, even God.

42 Jesus said unto them, If [m] God were your Father, ye would love me: for I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but [n] he sent me.

43 Why do ye not understand my speech? even because ye cannot hear my [o] word.

44 Ye [p] are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode [q] not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it.

45 And because [r] I tell you the truth, ye believe me not.

46 Which of you convinceth [s] me of sin? And if I say the truth, why do ye not believe me?

47 He that is of God heareth God's words: ye therefore hear them not, because ye are not of God.

48 ¶ Then answered the Jews, and said unto him, Say we not well that thou art a Samaritan, and [t] hast a devil?

49 Jesus answered, I have not a devil; but I honour my Father, and ye do dishonour me.

showing them the nature of sin, and the misery to which it subjects mankind, (verse 34.) "Whosoever committeth sin, is the servant (or slave) of sin." The unbelieving Jews take offence at the offer of spiritual liberty, as if it were a reflection upon their present situation. "We are Abraham's children," say they, "and never were in bondage to any man;" which cannot mean that none of the children of Abraham had ever been in bondage, for they surely could not have forgotten Egypt and Babylon; but it must refer to themselves, the present generation of Jews, as not in bondage; and even this was hardly true, for, with all their show of freedom, Judea was subject to a Roman governor and his military guard. Our Lord, however, had no reference to political circumstances: His kingdom was "not of this world;" and the liberty which he offered them was of a nature purely spiritual—a freedom from the curse of the law, and from the power of sin, to which they were now under a worse subjection than that of Rome.

They call themselves children of Abraham; and our Lord, alluding to his family, remarks, that there were slaves therein as well as children; and that the bondwoman and her son, Hagar and Ishmael, were expelled thence, while Isaac, the heir, remained to possess the inheritance: therein intimating that, if they ill-treated the Son of God, as Ishmael did Isaac, they also should be cast out of God's house, and banished to foreign lands, as indeed proved to be the case.

To understand our Lord's subsequent discourse, we must remember that Abraham had a twofold posterity—the children of his body, and of his faith. In respect of the former he admits—"I know that ye are Abraham's seed;" but in respect of the latter, he denies their relation to the patriarch: "If ye were [truly] Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham;" but ye are the offspring of another father, and his deeds ye do. Ye seek to kill me, because I tell you the truth: Abraham did not thus. Ye therefore are the children, not of Abraham, but of him who was a murderer from the beginning, and an enemy to the truth. "I speak [and do] that which I have seen with my Father [God;] ye, that which ye have seen with yours [Satan.] Hence the contrariety of our conduct and character—hence I seek to enlighten you; and hence ye seek to kill me."

Ver. 40—59. Jesus accused of being a demoniac, challenges a higher rank and antiquity than even Abraham.—In the close of the preceding section, Jesus tells the cavilling Jews around him, "He that is of God heareth God's words; namely, those which I deliver in his name: "Ye therefore hear [them] not, because ye are not of God;" that is, not under divine influence, as he told them before. "No man can come unto me, unless the Father who hath sent me draw him." (Chap. vi. 44.) This is indeed an humbling truth, that salvation is of God alone; and, to proud hearts, the most humbling truths are the most offensive; and hence the Jews again cry out, "Say we not well, that thou art a Samaritan and hast a devil?" (or rather demon.) The most spiteful names they could think of are now called forth. To the former of them he makes no reply; they must know that he was a Jew: to the latter he gives a simple and dignified denial: "I have not a devil." God is my Father, and I honour him by attributing to him the glory that is his due. Ye dishonour me by such ridiculous and unfounded insinuations. Whatever you may think, I solemnly assure you, (ver. 51,) "If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death." To see death, and to taste of death, (ver. 52,) appear to be synonymous expressions, meaning to experience it; the only question is—What death is here intended? Certainly not mere mortality, for Abraham was dead, and the prophets were dead, nor did our Lord ever intimate that either himself or his apostles should be exempted from it. But there is a second death, for which the expression is sometimes used, (see Rev. ii. 11; xx. 6, 14;) and the phrase is evidently equivalent to that which Jesus used to Martha, the sister of Lazarus, (ch. xi. 25, 26:) "He that believeth in me shall never die;" and both phrases, literally taken, mean, "shall not die for ever."

"Now (say they) we know that thou hast a devil: Abraham is dead, and the prophets are dead: whom makest thou thyself?" Here our Lord introduces some expressions respecting his pre-existence and divinity, which have been the subject of no little controversy, even to the present time. But instead of offering any observations of our own, we shall present our readers with the following extract from a very superior pen:—

"The opponents of Jesus, in their virulent cavils against him, had mentioned Abraham, their national ancestor, a man so signally favoured of God, that his name served as a proverbial example of dignity and honour. They understood our Lord's declarations as involving such assumptions of superi-

Ver. 43. Because ye cannot hear my word.—Doddridge reads the latter clause interrogatively: "Is it because ye cannot hear my word?" But Campbell thinks the Greek word hear, in this place, means to hear patiently, and renders it, "ye cannot bear my words." Compare verse 47.

Ver. 44. He was a murderer.—Greek, "A killer of men." He 'brought death into the world."—He is a liar, and the father of it—i. e. of lying. So Campbell.

Ver. 46. Which of you convinceth me—Campbell, "convicteth me"—of sin?—i. e. of falsehood, here contrasted with the truth.

Ver. 48. And hast a devil.—Greek, "Demon;" so verses 49, 52 Compare chap. vii. 20, and note. The word "devil," in the original of verse 44, is diabolos.

Ver. 51. Shall never see death.—Campbell admits that this refers to eternal death; but remarks, that the ambiguity of the original should be preserved, as it is by our translators, to give a just idea of the dialogue.

Ver. 53. And the prophets are dead.—Rather, "And the prophets [which are] dead."

Ver. 55. I shall be a liar.—Campbell, "I should speak falsely, like you."

Ver. 56. Abraham rejoiced—Campbell, "longed"—to see my day. Bishop Warburton conceives this passage refers to a prophetic vision which Abraham was favoured with at the time he offered up his son Isaac, and to which St. Paul refers, Heb. xi. 19.

Ver. 57. Thou art not yet fifty years old.—He could not be more than 35, (nor, we think, so much,) but "his visage was marred more than any man's." (Isa. lii. 14,) which might well give him the appearance of advanced age.

Ver. 58. Before Abraham was, I am.—[That our Lord by this expression asserted his divinity and eternal existence, as the great I AM, appears evident from the use of the present tense, instead of the preter, from its being in answer to the Jews, who inquired whether he had seen Abraham, and from its being thus understood by the multitude, who were exasperated at it to such a degree, that they took up stones to stone him. The ancient Jews not only believed that the Messiah was superior to and Lord of all the Patriarchs, and even of angels, but that his celestial nature existed with God, from whom it emanated, before the creation, and that the creation was effected by his ministry.]—Barnes. A celebrated foreign Professor remarks, that the common "interpretation is required by the tenor of the discussion. The objection turned upon existence; therefore the reply must refer to existence also. The objection was, 'Thou canst not have seen Abraham, for thou art not yet fifty years old; thou wast not then born.' Jesus answered, 'I was before he was.' Thus the reply corresponds to the objection." Rosenmuller.—I am. This clause, according to Dr. Smith, is attended with some difficulty. We shall give an outline of his remarks.—1. Some suppose it alludes to Exodus iii. 14, but the Hebrew is in the future. 2. The predicate of the proposition may be left to be supplied by the minds of the hearers—I am [the Christ.] Compar.

59 ¶ Then took they up stones to cast at him: but Jesus hid himself, and went out of the temple, going through the midst of them, and so passed by.

CHAPTER IX.

1 The man that was born blind restored to sight. 3 He is brought to the Pharisees. 15 They are offended at it, and excommunicate him: 35 but he is received of Jesus, and confesseth him. 39 Who they are whom Christ enlighteneth.

AND as Jesus passed by, he saw a man which was blind from his birth.

2 And his disciples asked him, saying, Master, who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind?

3 Jesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents: but that [a] the works of God should be made manifest in him.

4 I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work.

5 As long as I am in the world, I [b] am the light of the world.

6 When he had thus spoken, he [c] spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and he [d] anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay,

7 And said unto him, Go, wash in the pool of [e] Siloam, (which is by interpretation, Sent.) He [f] went his way therefore, and washed, and came seeing.

10 Therefore said they unto him, How were thine eyes opened?

11 He answered and said, A man that is called Jesus made [g] clay, and anointed mine eyes, and said unto me, Go to the pool of Siloam, and wash: and I went and washed, and I received sight.

12 Then said they unto him, Where is he? He said, I know not.

13 ¶ They brought to the Pharisees him that aforetime was blind.

14 And it was the sabbath day when Jesus made the clay, and opened his eyes.

15 Then again the Pharisees also asked him how he had received his sight. He said unto them, He put clay upon mine eyes, and I washed, and do see.

16 Therefore said some of the Pharisees, This man is not of God, because he keepeth not the sabbath day. Others said, How [h] can a man that is a sinner do such miracles? And [i] there was a division among them.

ority, that they demanded, "Art thou greater than our father Abraham? Whom makest thou thyself?" With his characteristic calmness he assured them, that Abraham had indeed regarded him as a superior; that, guided by supernatural revelation, the patriarch had really enjoyed such a mental prospect of the time when the Messiah should appear, and of the blessings of his reign, as filled him with pleasure and exultation! "Your father Abraham earnestly desired that he might see my day; and he did see it and rejoiced." This turned the conversation. The Jews, not understanding, or affecting not to understand, that Jesus spake of an anticipative vision, exclaimed, "Thou art not yet fifty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham?"—Now, therefore, the question was brought to the single point of co-existence. It was necessary for Jesus either to deny the assumption, or to admit and confirm it. He did not do the former; but he gave an answer which his opponents viewed as being either directly or constructively impious and blasphemous, i. e. as admitting their imputation." (Smith's Messiah.)

The last declaration of our Lord, that he existed before Abraham, so enraged his enemies, that they took up stones to stone him; but he was not to die by stoning, nor was his time yet come: Jesus therefore concealed himself for the moment, and then mixing in the crowd, (and having nothing peculiar in his dress,) he passed through the midst of them without being perceived, and thus again for the present escaped the malice of his enemies.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1—21. Jesus gives sight to a man born blind.—Whether this event followed on the same day after Jesus left the temple, or on a subsequent one, is neither certain nor important, only we know that it was on the sabbath. The question of the disciples seems to have reference to some previous conversation which they had held with the Scribes and Pharisees, on the subject of the transmigration of souls, which some of their Rabbies had borrowed from the Pythagoreans; or, perhaps, as Dr. Lightfoot suggests, they might have imbibed the stranger notion, that an infant might commit sin even in his mother's womb. Our Lord, however, always avoided such curious questions; and merely replies, that this blindness had happened to the man, neither for his own sins nor for those of his parents, but that an opportunity might be afforded to display the power of God through him. "As long as I am in the world," says he, "I am the light of the world;" and, in perfect harmony with that character, he proceeds to give sight to this poor man who had been born blind, and who had never yet seen the sun: and knowing that his time was short, he sets us an example that well illustrates his own precept—to work while it is called to-day! The day of our Saviour's labours was hastening to a close, and so is ours. The night is coming, when we can no more work either for God's glory, or our own salvation. "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave," whither we all are hastening. (Eccles. ix. 10.)

This blind man was a beggar; on which circumstance Bp. Hall beautifully remarks:—"Those that have eyes, and hands, and feet of their own, may be able to help themselves; those that want these helps must be beholden to the eyes, hands, and feet of others. The impotent are cast upon our mercy. Happy are we, if we can lend limbs and senses to the needy. Affected beggary is odious: that which is of God's making justly challengeth relief."

The cause of this man's affliction is uncharitably supposed to be some personal transgression of either the man himself or of his parents. Though sin was, indeed, primarily the cause of all the misery in the world; yet it is both uncharitable and unjust to refer the misfortunes of the afflicted to their personal transgressions. Afflictions are often sent for our benefit, and to exercise our patience under them, or to display the glory of God in our deliverance from them.

We are not disposed to allegorize away the facts of Scripture history; yet we may often derive useful and important reflections from the analogy between natural and spiritual objects. There is a mental blindness, to which our whole race is subjected through sin; for we are born spiritually blind, and it is Christ alone, who is the light of the world, that is able to enlighten our minds in the knowledge of himself and of divine truth. The means used in the recovery of spiritual sight, are often as strange and unpromising as the clay plaster on this poor man's eyes. The efficacy is, in this case, in the physician, and not in the remedy employed.

But to return to our history. The object in sending this Mark xiii. 6, with Mat. xxiv. 5. 3. The present, "I am," may be taken in the sense of the past, "I was." This is not unusual. Doddridge and Campbell render it, "Before Abraham was born I am;" which is perfectly literal.

Ver 59. Going through the midst, &c.—This latter part of the verse is wanting in some MSS. and versions, and is omitted by some learned Editors.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1. And as Jesus passed by.—The omission of this name in the original, seems to intimate a connexion between this event and the preceding. The New Testament, (any more than the Old,) we must recollect, was not divided into verses, or even chapters, by the inspired writers. This chapter may therefore connect with the preceding, thus—Jesus, "going through the midst of them [the multitude,] passed by [them,] and as he passed on [or 'passing by] he saw," &c.

2. Who did sin?—If this question, as is generally supposed, referred to the Pythagorean notions, it may be illustrated by the following note from Dean Prideaux:—"As to lesser crimes, [i. e. those which might not require everlasting punishment,] their opinion was, that they were punished in the bodies, which the souls which committed them were next sent into. According to this notion it was that the disciples asked Christ, in the case of the man who was born blind, who had sinned, that he should be born blind." Bishop Pearce renders this, "Who sinned? This man that he is become blind? or his parents, that he was born blind?" But we doubt much if this can be justified.

Ver. 3. Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents—That is, so as to be the occasion of his misfortune: this seems necessarily implied.

Ver. 5. I am the light of the world.—[Our Lord here claims one of the titles given by the Jews to the Divine Being. So in Bammidbar Rabba "The Israelites said to God, O Lord of the universe, thou commandest us to light lamps to thee, yet thou art the light of the world." It was also a title of the Messiah, (see Isa. xlix. 6; lx. 1;) and in a remarkable passage of Yalkut Rubeni, fol. 6, it is said, on Gen. i. 4, "From this we learn, that the Holy and Blessed God saw the light of the Messiah, and his works, before the world was created; and reserved it for the Messiah and his generation, under the throne of his glory. Satan said to the Holy and Blessed God, For whom dost thou reserve that light which is under the throne of thy glory? God answered, For him who shall subdue thee, and overwhelm thee with confusion. Satan rejoined, Lord of the universe, show that person to me. God said, Come, and see him. When he saw him, he was greatly agitated, and fell upon his face, saying, Truly this is the Messiah, who shall cast me and idolaters into hell."] —Bagster

Ver. 6. He spit . . . . and made clay.—Several Eastern travellers, particularly Captain Light, speak of a superstitious notion of the use of saliva in curing bad eyes, and other disorders, but none of them speak of a clay salve for that purpose: this, indeed, seems more calculated to destroy sight than to restore it.

Ver. 7. Go, wash—i. e. "wash thine eyes" in the pool of Siloam.—This was supplied by a fountain of the same name, which arose in the south-west part of Jerusalem. Siloam is by interpretation sent—and therefore tallies with the circumstance of his being sent thither.——He washed and came seeing.—There is this remarkable difference between cures wrought naturally and miraculously; the former, effected by some surgical operation, always require great caution to prevent relapse: the eyes, for instance, must be sayest thou of him, that he hath opened thine eyes? He said, He is a [j] prophet.

18 But the Jews did not believe [k] concerning him, that he had been blind, and received his sight, until they called the parents of him that had received his sight.

19 And they asked them, saying, Is this your son, who ye say was born blind? how then doth he now see?

20 His parents answered them and said, We know that this is our son, and that he was born blind:

21 But by what means he now seeth, we know not; or who hath opened his eyes, we know not: he is of age; ask him: he shall speak for himself.

22 These words spake his parents, because they [l] feared the Jews: for the Jews had agreed already, that if any man did confess that he was Christ, he [m] should be put out of the synagogue.

23 Therefore said his parents, He is of age; ask him.

24 Then again called they the man that was blind, and said unto him, Give God [n] the praise: we know that this man is a sinner.

25 He answered and said, Whether he be a sinner or no, I know not: one thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see.

26 Then said they to him again, What did he to thee? how opened he thine eyes?

poor man to Siloam was evidently to excite public attention to this miracle, and to spread the report of it in the temple, from which persons were continually coming and returning from Siloam; and this publicity was necessary to introduce the subsequent conversation, on the poor man's case, between himself and the Pharisees, in which the former discovers uncommon shrewdness.

They first inquire how the miracle was wrought, and affecting not to believe his own account, attempt to catechise his parents, who very prudently refer them back to him, as they do not appear to have been present at the time; and, besides, the Pharisees had threatened with exclusion from the synagogue, any person who should own Jesus to be the Christ. Therefore they said, "He is of age, ask him."

But the great offence with which they charge our Lord, is that of working this miracle on the sabbath, as it appears to have been contrary to their traditions, to use eye-salves, &c. on that holy day; and it was for this reason, probably, that our Lord used the clay, as it would have been as easy for him to have wrought the cure by a word speaking only, but that he set his face steadfastly against those traditions by which they established their own paramount authority, and made void the law of God.

Having ascertained the identity of the man, and the reality of the cure, the great point in dispute is, whether a good man and a prophet would work miracles on the sabbath day. Some of the Pharisees said, "This man is not of God, because he keepeth not the sabbath day;" not distinguishing between their own traditions and the divine commands. Others very naturally asked, "How can a man that is a sinner"—that is, a wicked man, or an impostor—"do such miracles?" Thus was there a division among the people, and as it should seem, (by ver. 16,) among the Pharisees themselves.

On the difference between the Christian doctrine of the Sabbath, and that of the Rabbies, we have offered some remarks on Matt. xii. 1—21, which we shall not here repeat. It is remarkable, certainly, that our Lord so often chose this day for the performance of his miracles, and it may serve to teach us, that active benevolence to the souls and bodies of our fellow-creatures ought to be blended with our devotions As this is the day in which God blesses us, we cannot choose a better for blessing others. "I will bless thee, and make thee a blessing." (Gen. xii. 2.)

Ver. 22—41. The Pharisees reproach Jesus, and excommunicate the blind man whom he had cured.—The man's parents having declined to answer any questions about their son, he is again called before the Pharisees, who exhort him to "give God the praise;" which Doddridge thus paraphrases: "Give glory to God, by a free confession of the fraud, if there be any collusion in this affair; or if the cure was really wrought in the manner thou affirmest, acknowledge the power, sovereignty, and goodness of the Divine Being, in working by so unworthy an instrument; for we certainly know that this man, Jesus of Nazareth, is a sinner." The man wisely answered, "Whether he be a sinner, I know not: one thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see;" an answer that may be employed to silence the cavils of others besides these Pharisees. In the course of our Christian experience, difficulties may often arise which we may not be able to explain: but if we can say, "Whereas I was once blind to my own state, and the excellence and necessity of Christ the Saviour, now I see; now is my mind enlightened duly to appreciate his salvation, it is well: let us not deny what he hath done, nor doubt his power and grace to complete the work."

But to return to the Pharisees: they cross-question the poor man, in hopes of detecting something inconsistent or contradictory in his answers, but in vain. He tartly replies—for he does not appear to be now before any public authorities who had a right thus to question him—"I told you before, and ye did not (or would not) hear: will ye also be his disciples?" Upon this they revile both him and his deliverer:—"We are Moses' disciples: as for this fellow, we know not from whence he is." The man again shrewdly retorts upon them, that it was very strange that they, the teachers and guides of the people, could not tell whence he was, when he had wrought so extraordinary a miracle, whereas a plain man like him was satisfied by the work itself, that he must be of God, for "if he were not of God, he could do nothing." Upon this they lose their temper, reprove his supposed insolence, and excommunicate, or cast him out of their synagogue. "Thou wast altogether born in sins, and dost thou teach us?" by which expression we do not understand them as referring to the Scripture doctrine of original sin, but the Pythagorean figment of the transmigration of souls, already mentioned.

As to the argument in favour of Christ's mission, we do not found it on his miracles, separately considered; but as taken in connexion with the whole of his character—the purity of his doctrine and of his life. At the same time, though bad men may have done "many wonderful works," there is not in the records of history any thing like the series of miracles recorded of our Lord, either in the power or benevolence which they displayed: neither the miracles of Moses or Elijah, much less those of their pretended prophets or impostors, can be brought into competition with his miracles

Our Lord hearing that the poor man was expelled the synagogue, which, of course, deprived him of all aid from Jewish charity, sought him out, as the first confessor who had suffered on his account, and instructs him privately, as it should seem, in the mysteries of his kingdom. "Dost thou believe in the name of the Son of God?" And he answered, "Who is 1 Christ is the door, and the good shepherd. 19 Divers opinions of him. 24 He proveth by his works, that he is Christ the Son of God: 39 escapeth the Jews, 40 and went again beyond Jordan, where many believed on him.

2 But he that entereth in by the [b] door is the shepherd of the sheep.

3 To him [c] the porter openeth; and the sheep hear his voice: and he calleth [d] his own sheep by name, and leadeth [e] them out.

4 And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him: for they know his [f] voice.

5 And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee [g] from him: for they know not the voice of strangers.

6 [i] This parable spake Jesus unto them: but they understood not what things they were which he spake unto them.

7 Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily, verily, I say unto you, I [h] am the door of the sheep.

8 All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers: but the sheep did not hear them.

9 I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture.

10 The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.

11 I [k] am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep.

12 But he that is a hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth: and the wolf catcheth them, and scattereth the sheep.

13 The hireling fleeth, because he is a hireling, and careth not for the sheep.

14 I am the good shepherd, and [k] know my sheep, and am known [l] of mine.

15 As [m] the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father: and [n] I lay down my life for the sheep.

16 And [o] other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and [p] there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.

18 No man taketh it from me, but [r] I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I [s] have power to take it again. This [t] commandment have I received of my Father.

19 ¶ There was a division therefore again among the Jews for these sayings.

21 Others said, These are not the words of he, Lord, that I might believe on him?" Jesus replied, "Thou hast both seen him, and it is he that talketh with thee." The man had been prepared for this discovery. He was convinced by the miracle of which he had been the subject, that Jesus was indeed a prophet, and has no hesitation in admitting this farther discovery of his glory—"Lord, I believe;" and as a proof thereof, he fell down and "worshipped him."

Some persons had now collected round them, and our Lord says in their hearing, "For judgment am I come into this world, that they which see not might see;" and that they which boast that they "do see, may be made blind,"—or have their blindness discovered and exposed. This occasioned some of the standers by, who were Pharisees, to exclaim, What! and "are we blind also?" To whom our Lord calmly replied, "If ye were blind," as this poor man was, or if you had no means of information, "ye should have," comparatively, "no sin:" but since ye think yourselves wise, and boastingly "say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth" without excuse, and without remedy.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—21. Jesus the door of God's sheep-fold—and the Good Shepherd himself.—In part of this allegory, Jesus Christ speaks of himself as the only door—the only way by which men can enter into the true church, or fold of God. The allusion is to the gate by which the shepherd leads his sheep into the blessed pastures. When he says, "All who came before me are thieves and robbers," he does not reflect on the prophets of the Old Testament, who made no pretensions to be themselves the way, or the door, unto eternal life, but pointed only to the Messiah as such. The thieves and robbers here alluded to, were those false teachers who pretended to point out some other way of life and salvation, than through his mediation and atonement: whether by men's own moral obedience, or by a course of ritual ceremonies and observances.

But Christ is also here spoken of as "the Good Shepherd," which is an allegory much more familiar to us than the preceding. Under this figure he is repeatedly represented to us by the prophets, (see Isa. xl. 11. Ezek. xxxiv. 23. Zech. xiii. 7, &c.,) as well as in the latter parts of the New Testament. As the Good Shepherd, he is distinguished from "the hireling, who careth not for the sheep," as well as from the robber, who comes to steal them. He is the Good Shepherd, as that character expresses his tenderness towards them:—"He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and gently lead those that are with young." (Is. xl. 11.) A good shepherd will also risk his life in defence of the sheep, as David did when he kept his father's sheep, (1 Sam. xvii. 34—36;) but THE Good Shepherd not merely risked, but gave, or, as it is here expressed, laid down his life for his sheep. Jesus is not only the Good Shepherd, but "the Great Shepherd of the sheep." (Heb. xiii. 20.' "The Chief Shepherd," (1 Pet. v. 2,) "whose own the sheep are," having "purchased them with his own most precious blood."

We are farther informed, that this Good Shepherd intimately knows his sheep, and is known of them: He calls them all by name—they know his voice and follow him; but will not follow strangers, for they know not the voice of strangers; all which circumstances relate to the divine communion which subsists between Christ and true believers; being drawn to him by the Father's grace; as he hath said, "No man can come unto me unless the Father which hath sent me draw him." (Ch. vi. 44.)

But Christ has other sheep beside those of the Jewish fold. Blessed be God, his sheep are not confined to one quarter of effect of well directed surgery: that performed by Christ was wholly a miracle, effected by the power of God. The simple means employed could have had no effect in this case; and were merely employed as symbols.—Bagster.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1. That entereth not by the door—That is, by the gate of the sheepfold. The sheepfold was an inclosure sometimes in the manner of a building, and made of stone, or fenced with reeds. In it was a large door, at which the shepherd went in and out, when he led in or brought out the sheep. At tithing, which was done in the sheepfold, they made a little door, so that two lambs could not come out together. To this inclosure there is an allusion in these words.—Orient. Cust. No. 1293.

Ver. 2. He that entereth in by the door is the shepherd—That is, thieves and robbers are not allowed to enter in by the door, but those only who belong to the sheepfold.

Ver. 3. He calleth his own sheep by name.—In Judea, and other Eastern countries, the shepherds give names to their sheep, who answer to them, as do our dogs and horses, following them when called.—Macknight.

Ver. 4. The sheep follow him: for they know his voice.—Not only is this the case in the East, but Polybius mentions, that in Italy the shepherds were accustomed to sound a horn and the sheep would follow them.—Orient. Cust.

Ver. 8. All that ever came before me.—Campbell says, the words "before me," are wanting in some of the most ancient, and in a great number of other MSS. and in some ancient versions of early editions. He reads, "All who have entered in another manner." The double comparison of Christ to a sheep door and to a shepherd, introduces a confusion of metaphor, not uncommon in the East.

Ver. 12. But . . . . a hireling.—"It is not the bare receiving hire which denominates a man a hireling; for the labourer is worthy of his hire, (Jesus himself being Judge, Luke x. 7,) but the loving hire more than the work—the working for the sake of hire." Westey.

Ver. 14, 15 And know my sheep, &c.—Campbell reads, (we think preferably,) "I both know my own, and am known by them, (even as the Father knoweth me, and I know the Father,) and I give my life for the sheep."

Ver. 18. No man taketh it—Campbell, "No man forceth it"—from me. See chap. xix. 11.

Ver. 20. He hath a devil, and is mad.—They suppose him mad in consequence of being possessed.

Ver. 20, 21. Hath a devil.—The Greek in both these verses is not diabolos but daimon, or demon.

the world; he hath a flock in almost every country of the globe, which it is the object of his gospel ministry gradually to collect into one sheep-fold, under the great Chief Shepherd of our souls. For these he hath laid down his life, and taken it again, as he told the Jews, according to "the command" or commission, which he received from his Father.

At this the Jews were startled, and some profanely said, "He hath a demon and is mad: why hear ye him?" while others shrewdly asked, "Can a demon open the eyes of the blind?" or can madmen perform miracles like this?

Ver. 22—42. Jesus disputes with the Jews in Solomon's porch.—According to Josephus, this porch was the eastern part of a gallery erected on the inside of the outer court of the temple. It was the custom of the ancients to teach and converse walking; and it being now winter, it is probable that Jesus and the Jews resorted thither for protection from the wind and rain. There has been some dispute, however, what could be intended by this Feast of Dedication. Doddridge concludes that it could not refer to the dedication of Solomon's temple, for that was in autumn, (1 Kings viii. 2:) nor that of Nehemiah, which was in spring, (Ezra vi. 15, 16;) but that of Judas Maccabæus, on his having purified the temple and altar from the profanations of Antiochus Epiphanes. This was kept annually for eight days, in the month of December.

This conversation originated with the Jews themselves, who affecting not clearly to understand the character under which our Lord wished to be considered, "If thou be the Christ, (said they,) tell us plainly." Jesus replies, "I have told you, and ye believed not;" referring, probably, to the preceding discourse, in which he had represented himself as the Good Shepherd, a character (as we have seen) specially appropriated by the prophets to Messiah. "But ye believe not, (said he,) because ye are not of my sheep; as I said unto you, [but just now,] My sheep hear my voice," &c. It is to us fully evident, that by Christ's sheep are meant his true disciples—who are humble, simple, and affectionate, as sheep are—and follow Christ as (in that country at least) sheep do their shepherd. Of these he says, "I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any (one) pluck (or wrest) them out of my Father's hand."

This conversation leads directly to the subject of our Lord's divinity, which doctrine was not only a stumbling-block to the Jews, but has been so to many in every succeeding age. The argument seems somewhat obscure, but we shall attempt to illustrate it by a short analysis. The Jews very clearly understood, from the manner in which our Lord spake of his heavenly Father, that he claimed the character of Son of God in a sense in which it would be blasphemy for any mere man to do, (see on chap. v. 17—30;) and if he had not meant to assume such equality, it would have been most easy to have silenced them by such an explanation: on the other hand, had he openly avowed such an equality, it would have required a miracle to have restrained them from stoning him, as they proposed. He therefore pursues a middle course. He remarks that the term God is, in an inferior sense, applied to magistrates and princes. (Ps. lxxxii. 1, 6.) How, then, could it be blasphemy for Jesus to assume the character of God's Son, especially when the works which he did contained the demonstration of a divine power, and fully justified the claim? "If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not: but if I do, though ye believe me not" on my own assertion, "believe the works" which you behold done, and from them ye may be convinced "that the Father is in me, and I am in the Father." But these men, instead of being softened to attend either to reason or to fact, took up stones to throw at the divine speaker, and drove from their temple the Lord thereof, and who would have been its highest glory.

"These (says the eloquent Massillon) were the returns of gratitude which Jesus Christ received of men: these the consolations with which heaven permitted him to be exercised in the painful course of his ministry. At one time they treated him as a Samaritan, as one that had a devil; at another they 'took up stones to stone him.' And thus the Son of God passed the whole time of his life, always exposed to the most obstinate contradictions, meeting with almost none but such as were insensible of his benefits, and rebellious against his preaching; and all this without his letting fall the least sign of impatience, or the least complaint."

Our Lord retreated now beyond Jordan, into the place where John at first baptized; and the seed which he had then sown now appeared, for "many believed on Jesus there," and resorted to him, saying, "John did no miracle: but all things which John spake of this man were true."

Ver. 24. How long dost thou make us to doubt—i. e. hold us in suspense.

Ver. 28. Neither shall any man pluck.—Campbell, "Neither shall any one wrest." The noun "man" is certainly improperly supplied, (as in many other places:) and Dr. Campbell's version is more literal.

Ver. 29. To pluck.—Campbell, "to wrest," as before.

Ver. 30. I and my Father.—Doddridge, "The Father;" for the pronoun is not in the original, nor is it wanted.——Are one.—Not eis, one person, but en, one thing; meaning one divine Being—one God.

Ver. 35. The word of God came.—Some refer this to the divine decree which made them magistrates, or judges; but Doddridge refers it rather to the divine message, "I said, Ye are gods." Ps. lxxxii. 6.——And the scripture cannot be broken.—We should prefer reading these words as Doddridge does, in a parenthesis, thus—"If he called them gods to whom the word of God came, (and the scripture cannot be broken,) Say ye" &c.

Ver. 36. Whom the Father hath sanctified.—This term, "sanctify," does not always mean to make holy; but often, especially in the Old Testament, to devote to a sacred purpose or office.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1. A certain man.—Doddridge, "There was one Lazarus."—[The raising of Lazarus from the dead, being a work of Christ beyond measure great, the most stupendous of all he had hitherto performed, and beyond all others calculated to evince his divine majesty, was therefore purposely recorded by the Evangelist John; while it was omitted by the other Evangelists, probably, as Gratius supposes, because they wrote their histories during the life of Lazarus; and they did not mention him for fear of exciting the malice of the Jews against him; as we find from chap. xii. 10, that they sought to put him to death, that our Lord might not have such a monument of his power and goodness remaining in the land.]—Bagster.

Ver. 2. It was that Mary which anointed the Lord.—Doddridge, "who (afterwards) anointed;" as mentioned in the next chapter, ver. 3.—[This is said by prolepsis, or anticipation, and may be rendered "she who (some time

3 Therefore his sisters sent unto him, saying, Lord, behold, he [c] whom thou lovest is sick.

4 When Jesus heard that, he said, This sickness is not unto death, but [d] for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby.

5 Now Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus.

6 When he had heard therefore that he was sick, he abode two days still in the same place where he was.

7 Then after that saith he to his disciples, Let us go into Judea again.

8 His disciples say unto him, Master, the Jews of late [e] sought to stone thee; and goest thou thither [f] again?

9 Jesus answered, Are there not twelve hours in the day? If [g] any man walk in the day, he stumbleth not, because he seeth the light of this world.

10 But if a man walk in the [h] night, he stumbleth, because there is no light in him.

11 These things said he: and after that he saith unto them, Our friend Lazarus [i] sleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep.

12 Then said his disciples, Lord, If he sleep, he shall do well.

13 Howbeit Jesus spake of his death: but they thought that he had spoken of taking of rest in sleep.

14 Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead.

15 And I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe; nevertheless let us go unto him.

16 Then said Thomas, which is called Didymus, unto his fellow disciples, Let us also go, that we may die with him.

17 Then when Jesus came, he found that he had lain in the grave four days already.

18 Now Bethany was nigh unto Jerusalem, [j] about fifteen furlongs off:

19 And many of the Jews came to Martha and Mary, to [k] comfort them concerning their brother.

20 Then Martha, as soon as she heard that Jesus was coming, went and met him: but Mary sat still in the house.

21 Then said Martha unto Jesus, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.

22 But I know, that even now, whatsoever [l] thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee.

23 Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again.

24 Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the [m] resurrection at the last day.

25 Jesus said unto her, I am the [n] resurrection, and the [o] life: he that believeth in me, though [p] he were dead, yet shall he live:

26 And whosoever [q] liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?

27 She saith unto him, Yea, Lord: I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world.

28 And when she had so said, she went her way, and called Mary her sister [r] secretly, saying, The Master [s] is come, and calleth [t] for thee.

29 As soon as she heard that, she arose quickly, and came unto him.

30 Now Jesus was not yet come into the town, but was in that place where Martha met him.

31 The [u] Jews then which were with her in the house, and comforted her, when they saw Mary, that she rose up hastily and went out, followed her, saying, She goeth unto the grave to weep there.

32 Then when Mary was come where Jesus was, and saw him, she fell down at his feet, saying unto him, Lord, if [v] thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.

33 When Jesus therefore saw her weeping, and the Jews also weeping which came with her, he groaned in the spirit, and [w] was troubled,

34 And said, Where have ye laid him? They said unto him, Lord, come and see.

35 Jesus [x] wept.

36 Then said the Jews, Behold how he loved him!

37 And some of them said, Could not this —"Sickness (says Bishop Hall) is the common preface to death: no mortal nature is exempted from this complaint; even Lazarus, whom Jesus loved, is sick. . . . . It was a stirring message that Mary sent to Jesus: 'Lord, he whom thou lovest is sick:' as if she would imply that his part was no less deep in Lazarus than hers. Neither doth she say, 'He that loves thee is sick;' but 'He whom thou lovest:' not pleading the merits of Lazarus' affection to Christ, but the mercy and favour of Christ to him.

"Jesus well heard the first groan of his dear Lazarus; every short breath that he drew, every sigh that he gave, was upon account; yet this Lord of life lets his Lazarus sicken, and languish, and die. . . . . .

"What a happy family was this! I find none upon earth so much honoured! 'Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus.' . . . . But, O, Saviour, how doth this agree? Thou lovedst this family, yet, hearing of their distress, thou heldest off two days more from them. Canst thou love those thou regardest not? Canst thou regard them from whom thou willingly absentest thyself in their necessity? Behold, thy love, as it is above ours, so it is oft against ours. Even out of very affection art thou not seldom absent. None of thine, but have sometimes cried, How long, Lord?"

A few other particulars may be here observed:

1. Our Lord says, "This sickness is not unto death," when he well knew that Lazarus was dying; but the meaning evidently is, that it should not terminate in death, but "in the glory of God," by his resurrection from the grave.

2. Jesus, we may remark, delayed his visit to Bethany till after Lazarus was dead and buried, and his body (in that climate particularly) must in the natural course of events, have begun to decay, and the smell become so offensive as to satisfy every one of the certainty of its dissolution.

3. The gentle manner in which our Lord informs his disciples of the decease of Lazarus: first he says, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth, but I go that I may awake him." Believers sleep in death; but, in the resurrection, they awake in the Saviour's likeness. Shortly afterwards he explains himself: "Lazarus is dead;" but he adds immediately, "I am glad for your sakes, that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe."

4. We have an affectionate proof of the attachment of the apostles to their Lord and Master. No sooner does he speak of going back to Judea, than Thomas, one of the most affectionate, proposes to his fellow-disciples to go with him; and anticipating the Jews would do him some mischief, he says, with a mixture of love and desperation, "Let us also go, that we may die with him."

Ver. 20—40. Jesus converses with the sisters of Lazarus.—The news that Jesus was coming, soon spread itself in the neighbourhood, and Martha immediately set out to meet him, and left Mary weeping in the house. Immediately as she sees Jesus, she laments that he had not come sooner, saying, "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died: but even now"—What! after he had been dead four days, and the corpse had become offensive to the smell? Yes, even now, "I know that whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it

Ver. 7. Let us go into Judea.—From the country east of Jordan, whither he had retired some time before, when the Jews sought to stone him; ch. x. 39, 40.

Ver. 9. Are there not twelve hours in the day?—The Jews divided the space from sunrise to sunset, were the days longer or shorter, into twelve parts: so that the hours of their day were all the year the same in number, though each shorter in winter than in summer man, which [y] opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died?

38 Jesus therefore again groaning in himself cometh to the grave. It was a cave, and a stone lay upon it.

39 Jesus said, Take ye away [z] the stone. Martha, the sister of him that was dead, saith unto him, Lord, by this time [a] he stinketh: for he hath been dead four days.

40 Jesus saith unto her, Said [b] I not unto thee, that, If thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?

41 Then they took away the stone from the place where the dead was laid. And Jesus lifted up his eyes, and [c] said, Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me.

42 And I knew that thou hearest me always: but because of the people which stand by I said it, that they may believe that thou hast sent me.

43 And when he thus had spoken, he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth.

44 And [d] he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-clothes: and his face [e] was bound about with a napkin. Jesus saith unto them, Loose him, and let him go.

45 Then many of the Jews which came to Mary, and had seen [f] the things which Jesus did, believed on him.

46 But some of them went their ways to the Pharisees, and told them what things Jesus had done.

47 ¶ Then [g] gathered the chief priests and the Pharisees a council, and said, What [h] do we? for this man doeth many miracles.

48 If we let him thus alone, all [i] men will believe on him: and the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation.

49 And one of them, named [j] Caiaphas, being the high priest that same year, said unto them, Ye know nothing at all,

50 Nor consider that it is [k] expedient for us, that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not.

51 And this spake he not of himself: but being high priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation;

52 And not [l] for that nation only, but that also he should gather together in one the children of God that were [m] scattered abroad.

53 Then from that day forth they took counsel together [n] for to put him to death.

54 Jesus therefore walked no more openly [o] among the Jews; but went thence unto a country near to the wilderness, into a city called [p] Ephraim, and there continued with his disciples.

55 ¶ And [q] the Jews' passover was nigh at hand: and many went out of the country up to Jerusalem before the passover, to purify themselves.

thee." Jesus here, as it were, put words into her mouth; "Thy brother shall rise again:" as if he had said, "Ask then the life of thy brother:" but she understands him of a distant resurrection at the end of the world: "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." Jesus now announces himself as "the resurrection and the life;" and encourages her to believe, that even yet her brother might be restored to her through his almighty power. And he goes farther—"He that believeth on me, though he were [spiritually] dead, yet shall he [spiritually] live: and he that [thus] liveth, and believeth in me, shall never die"—that is, shall not die for ever; shall not suffer the pain of a second, an everlasting death. "Believest thou this?" said he: she replies, "Yea, Lord, I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world:" and having thus said, she instantly runs to tell her sister Mary secretly, what doubtless was the fact—"The Master is come, and calleth for thee;" and Mary as suddenly and privately leaves her company—those who had come to mourn with her—and they very naturally conclude that she was gone to her brother's grave, as the custom was, "to weep there." She went not, however, to "seek the living among the dead;" but she flies to her adored Lord—she casts herself at his feet, overwhelms him with her tears, and repeats the same gentle complaint as her sister—"Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died."

Jesus inquires now for the tomb of Lazarus, and as they lead him thither—"JESUS WEPT."

We attempt no comment on these interesting words: those inclined to do so, might observe that these Tears were—Tears of affection to Lazarus—of sympathy to his sisters—and of compassion to the Jews.

The remark of the Jews was certainly very natural: "Behold, (said they,) how he loved him!" And some of them who had witnessed his late miracle on the man born blind, said, "Could not this man, which opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died?" but none of them seem to have anticipated the miracle now about to be performed. The Lord Jesus, "groaning in himself, cometh to the grave"—doubtless still weeping over his be loved Lazarus. He then orders the stone to be removed from the mouth of the cave in which he had been buried, as was the Jewish custom. Martha objects to this, perhaps thinking it dangerous, as she observed the body must be so far putrified as to emit an unpleasant, and perhaps infectious smell; but our Lord rebukes this attempt to disannul his order: "Said I not unto thee, if thou wouldest believe thou shouldest see the glory of God?" Alas! how much of the glory of God do we lose the sight of through our unbelief!

Ver. 41—57. The resurrection of Lazarus, and its effect upon the Jews.—The stone at the cave's mouth being removed by some of the bystanders, Jesus, after a short but inaudible address to his heavenly Father, that the people might know in whose name he acted, and with whose sanction he acted, "He cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth!" He came forth from the tomb where his body had been laid; but being, of course, entangled and encumbered with his grave-clothes, the Lord commanded, "Loose him, and let him go"—that is, set him at liberty.

In this miracle we remark, 1. Its extraordinary nature: it was the restoration of life to the dead. 2. The decisive evidence of this fact: the body had lain in the tomb four days. 3. The manner in which it was wrought, by a word speaking; but not till after a solemn address to the Deity. 4. The witnesses: not only the sisters themselves, but also the Jews who came to condole and to mourn with them; some of whom, it appears, had also witnessed the cure of the man born blind.

We are now to consider the effects of this miracle. 1. On the witnesses of the miracle, many of whom believed on him. 2. On others, who did not believe, who went immediately and informed the Scribes and Pharisees. 3. The debate among his enemies: "What do we?" say they, for this man doeth many miracles, and if we let him alone all men will believe on him. 4. The alarm excited: "If all men believe on him, the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation:" that is, supposing the nation to own him as Messiah, the jea-

And as the Jews did not make use of coffins, they placed their dead separately in niches or little cells cut into the sides of these caves or rooms. (Maundrell's Travels.) This form of the Jewish sepulchre suggests an easy solution of a very important difficulty in the history of Lazarus's resurrection. It is said, that when Jesus called upon Lazarus to come forth, he came out bound hand and foot. But deists, talking of this miracle, commonly ask with a sneer, how he could come out of a grave who was bound in that manner? The answer, however, is obvious. The Evangelist does not mean that Lazarus walked out of the sepulchre, but that, laying on his back, he raised himself into a sitting posture, then putting his legs over the edge of his niche or cell, slid down, and stood upright upon the floor; all which he might easily do, notwithstanding his arms were close bound to his body, and his legs were tied strait together by means of the shroud and rollers with which he was swathed. Accordingly, when he was come forth, it is said, that Jesus ordered them to loose him and let him go; a circumstance plainly importing, that the historian knew that Lazarus could not walk till he was unbound.—Macknight's Harmony.

Accordingly, we find that a desert, or wilderness, extended from Jericho to Bethel. 56 Then [r] sought they for Jesus, and spake among themselves, as they stood in the temple, What think ye, that he will not [r] come to the feast?

57 Now both the chief priests and the Pharisees had given a commandment, that, if any man knew where he were, he should show it, that they might take him.

CHAPTER XII.

1 Jesus excuseth Mary anointing his feet. 9 The people flock to see Lazarus. 10 The high priests consult to kill him. 12 Christ rideth into Jerusalem. 20 Greeks desire to see Jesus. 23 He foretelleth his death. 37 The Jews are generally blinded: 42 yet many chief rulers believe, but do not confess him: 44 Therefore Jesus calleth earnestly for confession of faith.

THEN Jesus six days before the passover came to Bethany, where [a] Lazarus was which had been dead, whom he raised from the dead.

2 There they made him a supper; and Martha [b] served: but Lazarus was one of them that sat at the table with him.

3 Then [c] took Mary a pound of ointment of spikenard, very costly, and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with her hair: and the house was filled with the odour of the ointment.

4 Then saith one of his disciples, Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, which should betray him,

5 Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor?

6 This he said, not that he cared for the poor; but because he was a [d] thief, and had [e] the bag, and bare what was put therein.

7 Then said Jesus, Let her alone: against the day of my burying hath she kept this.

8 For [f] the poor always ye have with you; but [g] me ye have not always.

9 ¶ Much people of the Jews therefore knew that he was there: and they came not for Jesus' sake only, but that they might see Lazarus also, whom he had raised from the dead.

10 But the chief priests consulted that they might put Lazarus also [h] to death;

11 Because that [i] by reason of him many of the Jews went away, and believed on Jesus.

12 On [j] the next day much people that were come to the feast, when they heard that Jesus was coming to Jerusalem, 13 Took branches of palm trees, and went forth to meet him, and cried, [k] Hosanna: Blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord.

14 And Jesus, when he had found a young ass, sat thereon; as it is [l] written, 15 Fear not, daughter of Sion: behold, thy King cometh, sitting on an ass's colt.

16 These things [m] understood not his disciples at the first: but when Jesus was [n] glorified, then remembered [o] they that these things were written of him, and that they had done these things unto him.

17 The people therefore that was with him when he called Lazarus out of his grave, and raised him from the dead, bare record.

lousy of the Romans would be excited, and they would put an end to the Jewish polity. Pilate, however, appears to have had no suspicion of this nature, when he heard Jesus declare, that his kingdom was not of this world. (See chap. xviii. 36.) On the other hand, the rejection of Jesus really brought on the destruction both of their temple and city. 5. The advice and prediction of Caiaphas, the High Priest, that it were better to sacrifice one man, however innocent, than to risk the safety of the nation. As a maxim of political expediency this may be admitted, and has been often acted upon: but there are many things approved and acted upon in human governments, which will not bear the scrutiny of the great Supreme, who judges all actions either just or unjust, without any regard to political considerations.

This iniquitous advice, however, was approved by the great majority, and from that day they determined on his death. His time, however, was not yet come; Jesus therefore retreated to an obscure town, at some considerable distance from the metropolis, for a time; and the people debated among themselves whether he would be likely to attend the approaching Passover, in which case the Pharisees had strictly charged them, that if any one saw him, he should give them notice, that he might be apprehended.

But the chief difficulty in this chapter regards the prophecy of Caiaphas. "This he (Caiaphas) spake not of himself;" that is, he did not understand his own prediction, which, through the overruling providence of God, was accomplished in a manner far beyond his meaning or comprehension. Yes; blessed be His name! Jesus did die for the nation—even for his murderers—and for all the children of God (whom the Father had given into his hands) that were scattered abroad throughout the world.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1—11. Jesus anointed by Mary, the sister of Lazarus.—It has been doubted whether this is the same anointing mentioned by Matthew, (ch. xxvi. 6, &c.) and by Mark, (xiv. 3;) but the reasoning of Preb. Townsend (who follows Doddridge and Michaelis) has fully satisfied us that it is; and the few circumstances which seem to disagree will be explained in our notes. (See New Test. Arran.) The entertainment, as Matthew says, was "at the house of Simon the leper," who probably was a wealthy man, whom Jesus had cured; Martha, whose character is elsewhere given by Luke, as "cumbered about much serving," (chap. x. 40,) here also seems to have superintended the preparations: Lazarus was one of the guests, and Mary, as before, was wholly occupied with her beloved Lord, whom she anointed, first by breaking open the box, and pouring part of its precious contents upon his head, as stated by Matthew; but also, as John informs us, with the same ointment of spikenard, she bathed his feet.

On this account we may remark:—1. The publicity of the miracle which had been wrought on Lazarus, in raising him from the dead. For "much people (or many) of the Jews" came, "not for Jesus' sake only, but that they might see Lazarus also, whom he had raised from the dead." The report, therefore, must have been widely spread in a short period. 2. We remark the grateful attentions of Mary to the Lord, and the precious ointment wherewith she anointed him, which some think was the remainder of what she had purchased to anoint her own brother at his funeral: and which could not now be better bestowed than in expressing her gratitude for his resurrection. 3. The surly reproof of Judas, in which he appears, for the moment, to have been joined with other disciples, though not from the same motive; for Judas carried the bag. 4. The defence which the Lord made for Mary, as if he had said, "Talk not now of the poor; them you have always with you, and can at any time relieve; me ye have not always. I am about to leave you, and she hath done this very opportunely, just before my departure." "Against the day of my burial hath she kept this;" and these words will have an additional force, if we adopt the above supposition, that some of the same ointment had been used at the burial of her brother. 5. We remark the effects and consequences of this meeting of the Jews with Lazarus, and of the circumstances which attended it. "Many of the Jews went away" from the entertainment, as we understand it, and believed on Jesus; though some think the expression "went away," (ver. 11,) means they deserted from the Pharisees, with whom they had been connected. 6. And lastly, we observe how liberally our Lord rewards acts of kindness and sympathy in his people. "She hath done what she could" to honour me; and "Verily I say unto you, wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that this woman hath done, shall be spoken of for a memorial of her." (Matt. xxvi. 13.)

Ver. 12—19. Jesus enters Jerusalem in triumph.—This circumstance is mentioned by all the Evangelists, and upon the narrative of Matthew we have offered some remarks: to those

Ver. 56. What think ye, that he will not come, &c.—Doddridge, Campbell, and other critics, point this as two questions, thus: "What think ye? [Do ye think] that he will not come up to the feast?"

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1. Six days before the Passover.—From the account of Matthew, it should seem not to have been more than two days. To us it seems probable, that though Jesus came to Bethany six days before the Passover, yet the entertainment might not be given till four days afterwards.

Ver. 2. Lazarus . . . . sat at the table.—This describes him as a guest, and not as master of the house: for Matthew tells us, it was "in the house of Simon the leper," that is, who had been a leper. If it be asked, "Why was not this entertainment given at the house of Lazarus?" it may be replied, Probably for fear of interruption from the Jews; for John informs us, (ver. 10,) that the chief priests were already plotting to destroy Lazarus also.

Ver. 3. Spikenard.—[Spikenard is a highly aromatic plant growing in India, whence was made a very valuable unguent or perfume, used at the ancient baths and feasts. It is identified by Sir W. Jones with the sumbul of the Persians and Arabs, and jatamansi of the Hindoos; and he considers it a species of the Valerian, of the triandria monogynia class of plants. The root is from three to twelve inches long, fibrous, sending up above the earth between thirty and forty ears or spikes, from which it has its name; stem, lower part perennial, upper part herbaceous, suberect, simple, from six to twelve inches long; leaves, entire, smooth, four-fold, the inner radical pair petioled and cordate, the rest sessile and lanceolate; pericarp, a single seed crowned with a pappus.]—Bagster.

Ver. 4. Judas Iscariot.—See note on Luke vi. 16.

Ver. 6. Had the bag—i. e. he was steward and treasurer to the whole family.

Ver. 10. Consulted that they might.—Campbell, "Determined (or resolved) to put," &c. Compare chap. xi. 49.

Ver. 11. Went away—Namely, from the company of Lazarus. But Campbell renders it, "forsook them;" namely, the Pharisees, and joined themselves to Christ's disciples.

18 For [p] this cause the people also met him, for that they heard that he had done this miracle.

19 The Pharisees therefore said among themselves, Perceive [q] ye how ye prevail nothing? behold, the world is gone after him.

20 ¶ And there were certain [r] Greeks among them that [s] came up to worship at the feast:

21 The same came therefore to [t] Philip, which was of Bethsaida of Galilee, and desired him, saying, Sir, we would see Jesus.

22 Philip cometh and telleth Andrew: and again Andrew and Philip tell Jesus.

23 ¶ And Jesus answered them, saying, The hour is [u] come, that the Son of man should be glorified.

24 Verily, verily, I say unto you, [v] Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit.

25 He [w] that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal.

26 If [x] any man serve me, let him follow me; and where [y] I am, there shall also my servant be: if [z] any man serve me, him will my Father honour.

we shall here add a few others. This event, we have already remarked, was in the fulfilment of an ancient prophecy, (see on Matt. xxi. 1, &c.;) and it has been already shown by an eminent prelate and acute writer, (Dr. Sherlock,) "that the figure of Jesus riding on an ass, was not only not contemptible in any degree, but strongly descriptive of his [Messiah's] character as the King of Israel. He (Bishop S.) observes, that the Israelites, by their law, were forbidden the use of horses, and that this statute was complied with for a long course of time; during which, neither for the purposes of war nor of state, were those animals ever employed. On occasions of the greatest solemnity, we find the Judges and Kings of Israel riding upon asses. We see Absalom, when aspiring to the crown, and in the day of battle, riding upon a mule, the colt of an ass; and Solomon, on the day of his accession, riding through Jerusalem on the King's mule, amidst the joyful acclamations of the people. In many respects this illustrious Prince was a type of the Messiah. In the appearance of Jesus upon this occasion, the resemblance was so very striking, that the multitude could not avoid observing it. Accordingly they saluted him as the Son of David, the King of Israel, that came in the name of the Lord.

"This transaction is dignified by the particular description given of it, long before its accomplishment, and in terms so clear and expressive, as if the prophet kimself had been a spectator. Warmed with the prospect, he breaks out into an exclamation, glowing with the majesty of the person described: 'Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion: behold thy King cometh unto thee,' &c. . . . . The following particulars in the prophecy are clear and determined:—1. That the prophet is describing a King or Prince, the very character in which the Jews expected their Messiah. 2. The peculiar relation of this person to them: 'Thy king cometh to thee.' 3. The distinguishing features of his character and government: 'He is just, and having salvation.' 4. His external appearance; lowly, (or meek,) to correct their notions of a temporal Messiah. And lastly, as a mark of distinction from all other kings, easy to be apprehended, 'Riding on an ass, even a colt, the foal of an ass.' In short, a king, not only superior to their kings, who lived nearest the age of the prophet, but to those of the highest antiquity and renown in their nation."

Several things have been alleged to pour contempt on the acclamations of the multitude: "They are easily attracted by novelty, fickle in their attachment, and tumultuary in their manner." In the present instance they were excited, not by parade or show, but by what they had seen and heard of the miracles of Jesus, and particularly "for that they heard of the miracle of calling Lazarus from the grave." (ver. 17, 18.)

Their language in the present instance had nothing in it either vulgar or profane, but clearly expresses their sentiments:—"1. That Jesus was the Son of David. 2. That he was a king. 3. That he was a king by divine ordination. 4. That he came on purpose to save them. Lastly, we have their wishes and their prayers that the ends of his coming might be accomplished.

"The impression made by this event on the enemies of Jesus, is a circumstance that dignifies it very considerably. When we behold the city of Jerusalem moved, and in some measure alarmed, with his approach—when we see the Pharisees, his watchful enemies, compelled to stand on their defence, diffident of themselves, and jealous of his growing influence, can we allow ourselves to think meanly of the appearance or of the person, whose figure in it is the most considerable? Can we, consistently with common sense, ascribe effects so great to any trivial cause? .... Or must we not rather ascribe it to the presence of him, who is described in the following majestic character—consuming his enemies [with the breath of] his mouth, and destroying them with the brightness of his coming."—Dr. D. Hunter's Observ.

Ver. 20—36. Certain Greeks desire to see Jesus, who predicts his own sufferings and death.—These Greeks, we may reasonably conclude, had forsaken the idolatry of their ancestors, and, as some suppose, had submitted to circumcision; but the latter is by no means certain. They desired, however, to see Jesus, we may hope with the best motives, and Philip and Andrew introduced them to him. He immediately announces to them the necessity of his death and resurrection, by both which he was to be glorified, and to glorify his heavenly Father. He illustrates this by the simile of a grain of corn being cast into the ground, without which it bears no fruit, but on being sown it appears to die, (as St. Paul says, 1 Cor. xv. 36;) but in so doing really vegetates, and, in the end, brings forth much fruit. So Christ dying upon the cross, glorified the divine perfections by his obedience and sufferings; and in like manner his disciples, by resigning the present temporary life, would secure to themselves one, unfading and eternal. His faithful servants in the present world should be honoured by his Father with an admission into the heavenly state—and "so be for ever with the Lord."

Jesus now approaches the last great hour of trial, and begins to feel the bitter pangs of suffering for our sins. "Now is my soul troubled, (exclaims he,) and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour! but for this cause came I unto this hour," and cannot shrink from my covenant engagements. "Father, glorify thy name." therefore, whatever be the expense of suffering I may incur. Upon this, the Eternal Father announced from heaven the acceptance of the Saviour's prayer, in these remarkable words—"I have both glorified it, [by thy entrance into this hour,] and will glorify it again," by thy passing through it. It may reasonably be concluded that St. John, who records these words, heard them distinctly, and perhaps the other apostles with him. To the bystanders, however, it was a sound only. Some said it thundered, and possibly it did; and others took it for the voice of an angel. This Dr. Lightfoot observes, is the third time that Jesus had the sanction of a voice from heaven, the others being at his baptism and transfiguration; and of the others, as well as of this, it might be said, "This voice came, not because of me," or for my satisfaction, "but for your sakes," that is, for the confirmation of their faith.

The salvation of believers implies the condemnation of the world: when Satan, the prince of fallen spirits, is cast down from the throne which he has usurped, then shall the Saviour draw all men (that is, men of all nations) round him; raise them from the degradation into which they have been sunk by

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Jesus washeth the disciples' feet: 14 exhorteth them to humility and charity. 18 He foretelleth, and discovereth to John by a token, that Judas should betray him: 31 commandeth them to love one another, 36 and forewarneth Peter of his denial.

NOW [a] before the feast of the passover, when Jesus knew that his hour [b] was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father, having [c] loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end.

2 And supper being ended, the [d] devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him;

3 Jesus knowing [e] that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that [f] he was come from God, and went to God;

4 He riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments; and took a towel, and girded himself.

5 After that he poureth water into a basin, idolatry and vice, and make them his willing subjects. Christ had many conflicts with the enemy, both before and during his public ministry: but his great triumph was on the cross. Thereon he "spoiled principalities and powers, and made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in (or upon) it." (Col. ii. 15.) The Jews being utterly ignorant, both as to Messiah's death and resurrection, knew not how to reconcile his abiding for ever with the idea of his sufferings; but now those sufferings are accomplished, and succeeded by his ascension to glory, this difficulty is completely solved. "He triumphed when he fell.'

Ver. 37—50. The infidelity of the Jews remarked and accounted for.—The last words of the preceding section were certainly addressed to the Jewish multitude, who, though Christ had done so many miracles before them, "believed not on him." To this, however, we must admit various exceptions. Not only a considerable number of the common people believed on him, but also "many individuals" even among the Sanhedrim, though they had not courage to acknowledge it. How shall we account for these things? 1. As to those who refused to believe upon the testimony of their own eyes and ears, we can only account for their obduracy from the language of the prophet Esaias, (or Isaiah, ch. vi. 9,) which has been already considered in our exposition of Matt. xiii. 14; and which commentators generally explain of a judicial hardening. So Wesley: "By the just judgment of God, for their obstinacy, and wilful resistance of the truth, they were at length so left to the hardness of their hearts, that neither the miracles nor doctrine of our Lord could make any impression upon them." 2. As to the rulers, though it is admitted that many individuals among them were convinced of the truths of Christ's miracles and doctrine, so much were they in love with the praise of men, so much afraid of public censure, that they dared not own their conviction; for they loved the honours which come from men more than those which come from God: in which there is evidently a reference to their fondness for honorary titles, as Rabbi, or doctor; and to their love of greetings, or the flattering notice taken of them in the markets and other public places. So our Lord had remonstrated with them in the early part of his ministry—"How can ye [truly] believe, which receive honour one of another, and seek not the honour that cometh from God only?" (Chap. v. 44: see also Matt. xxiii. 6—10.) They were likewise afraid of persecution, for the Pharisees, who were evidently the ruling party, had threatened that whoever did confess his belief in Jesus, should be put out of the synagogue, (chap. ix. 22;) which certainly implied the loss of many privileges, and seems to have been equally dreaded with excommunication from the Church of Rome in modern times.

The language of the two following verses is evidently elliptical, in which some words must be supplied, as thus: "Jesus cried and said, He that believeth on me, believeth not on me [only,] but [also] on him that sent me: and he that seeth me, seeth [also] him that sent me." (See Mark ix. 37.) This refers not simply to bodily sight, but to a believing view by faith and is a necessary result from the doctrine before laid down, "I and the Father are one," (ch. x. 30;) and which we shall find farther confirmed in the next chapter to which we come.

A like ellipsis to what we have just remarked occurs in verse 47 of this chapter. "If any man.... believe not, I judge him not, [now;] for I came [now] not to judge the world, but to save the world."—Christ shall come again to judge the quick and dead at the last day. (Ver. 48.)

As our Lord Jesus made the commandment of the Father the rule of all his words and conduct, let us imitate him also in all we say or do.

> "Such was thy truth, and such thy zeal,
> Such deference to thy Father's will;
> Such love, and meekness so divine,
> I would transcribe, and make them mine."—Watts.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—17. Jesus, at the Paschal supper, washes the feet of his disciples.—Of the institution of the Passover we gave an account in our exposition of Exod. xii. 1—28; and on this celebration of it, some observations will be found in our exposition of Matt. xxvi. 17—30. We shall here subjoin, in order to throw farther light upon the subject, a few particulars relative to the manner of its celebration, collected by Ainsworth from the most learned Rabbies, and abridged by Doddridge for the same purpose. "The master of the family began the feast with a cup of wine, which being solemnly blessed,.... he divided among the guests, (Luke xxii. 17,) and afterwards washed his hands. Then the supper began with unleavened bread and bitter herbs, which, when the master and the rest of the family had tasted, one of the younger persons present (generally a child) asked the reason of what was peculiar in that feast, (according to Exod. xii. 26,) which introduced the haggadah, that is, the showing forth, or declaration of it, (alluded to 1 Cor. xi. 26.) Then the master rose up and took another cup, and washed his hands again, before the lamb was tasted; and in this interval I suppose (says Doddridge) Christ also washed the feet of his disciples. Then, after eating the Passover, followed another cup, which, after

Ver. 36. Jesus departed, and did hide himself from them.—Campbell, "He withdrew himself privately from them."

Ver. 38. That the saying .... might be fulfilled.—Doddridge, "So that the saying .... might be fulfilled." So Campbell, Wesley, &c.

Ver. 40. He hath blinded, &c.—Dr. Gill explains this of a judicial blindness.

Ver. 42. Among the chief rulers also many.—Campbell, "several;" certainly far from the majority.

Ver. 43. The praise of men, &c.—Campbell, "the approbation." The word is of extensive meaning. Chap. v. 44, it is properly rendered honour, and sometimes glory. Lu. xiv. 10, it is translated worship, meaning high respect, reverence.

Ver. 48. Hath one that judgeth.—Campbell, "Hath what condemneth him:" namely, "the word" or doctrine which Christ delivered. So Doddridge, "That (very word) shall judge him."

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 2. Supper being ended.—Rather, "come." So Drs. Hammond, Doddridge, Guise, and Jennings; but Campbell reads, "while they were at supper," which is to the same effect.—The devil.—The word here is diabolos, meaning Satan; not a demon.

Ver. 4. His garments—[That is, his gown, or upper coat, with the girdle by which it was girded close to his tunic, or inner coat; and instead of this girdle, he tied a towel about him, that he might have it in readiness to dry their feet, and that he might appear as a servant. Indeed the whole action was a servile one; and never performed by a superior to an inferior.]—Baxter.

and began to wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded.

6 Then cometh he to Simon Peter: and [g]Peter said unto him, Lord, [h]dost thou wash my feet?

7 Jesus answered and said unto him, What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter.

8 Peter saith unto him, Thou shalt never wash my feet. Jesus answered him, If [i] I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me.

9 Simon Peter saith unto him, Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head.

10 Jesus saith to him, He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit: and ye are clean, but not all.

11 For [j] he knew who should betray him; therefore said he, Ye are not all clean.

12 So after he had washed their feet, and had taken his garments, and was set down again, he said unto them, Know ye what I have done to you?

13 Ye [k] call me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am.

14 If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet.

15 For [l] I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you.

16 Verily, verily, I say unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord; neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him.

having delivered to each a piece of [unleavened] bread, was the sacramental cup at this supper. Then, after some pious and friendly discourse, the whole family, after having drank at least a fourth cup, sang some Psalms of praise; (see note on Matt. xxvi. 30;) and so the solemnity ended." (Doddridge.) We return now to our evangelist, John.

Jesus knowing that his time on earth was nearly expired, was desirous, by some significant action, to show his unabated love toward his apostles: he therefore rose from table before the feast was concluded, girded himself with a towel, and, according to the ancient laws of hospitality, began to wash his disciples' feet, and wipe them with the towel with which he was girded. On this narrative we subjoin a few remarks.

1. That the love of Jesus was not diminished, either by the cruelty of his enemies or the baseness of his pretended friends, who had gradually deserted him on every appearance of persecution. There were, indeed, still a faithful few who continued steady to him and to his cause; and to these his attachment continued, under every change of circumstances, unabated. He did not show the fickleness common to earthly masters, who often grow weary and change their servants: there is no instance of his dismissing one of them; but having loved them at the first, he loves them to the last: not to the end of his life only, but for ever.

2. So much, however, cannot be said of his servants or disciples. One had even now deserted and betrayed him. Another, he well knew, would not only desert, but deny him in the hour of danger: and he even foresaw that, of the whole twelve, not one of them would have the courage to speak in his behalf, or even to attend him at his trial.

3. The action he fixes upon, as a mark of his continued attachment, and as a model for their conduct towards each other, was that of washing their feet, a well-known instance of hospitality in eastern countries, of which we have several examples in the life of Abraham. (Gen. xviii. 4; xix. 2; xxiv. 32.) It afterwards became the office of the lowest menial servants, (1 Sam. xxv. 41,) but was not wholly discontinued during the times of Scripture, nor is even now in those countries where shoes are not worn.

4. We must notice the conduct of Peter, who thinks the washing of his feet such an act of degradation to his Master, that he determines never to consent to it—"Thou shalt not wash my feet:" yet, when he finds obedience indispensable to his discipleship, his language is instantly changed: sooner than lose his part in Christ, he cries, "Not my feet only, but also my hands and my head." Jesus, however, gives Peter to understand that, as he had doubtless bathed before the feast, he needed to wash only those parts (his feet) which might have contracted defilement since. Peter at length submits, under the assurance, "what I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." A maxim of primary importance to us all; for there are many things in the present state incomprehensible, with which it is yet our duty to comply without inquiring into the reason.

5. We observe a mystical or figurative intention in the sign here used. If Jesus wash us not by his Spirit and by his blood, we have no part in him. Jay justly observes, "Our Saviour was accustomed to teach by facts and imagery; to pass from the body to the mind; to ascend from particular hints to general truths; and to express more than is immediately perceived, in order that it might be discovered by repeated meditation, or illustrated by subsequent events."

6. The action was not merely figurative, it was exemplary. "I have given you an example, that you should do as I have done to you:" that is, condescend to the meanest offices that may contribute to the comfort and the happiness of your brethren, though it were to "wash each other's feet." "Nothing short of perfect affection, (says Ward,) and a disposition to do the meanest offices for each other, comes up to the standard laid down in the New Testament. Nor should these tempers prevail among members of the same society merely, but be cultivated toward all who are in actual communion with the Father and his Son, Jesus Christ."

Ver. 18—38. Jesus predicts the treachery of Judas, and the cowardice of Peter.—It is evident that Jesus suffered much in his own mind from the contemplation of these painful events—"He was troubled in spirit." Both events have been anticipated by the other evangelists; and some observations on them will be found in our exposition of Matt. xxvi. throughout, and Luke xxii. 14—30. We shall therefore only add a few additional remarks on the opposite characters of Judas and of Peter. The crime of the former, no doubt, sprang from covetousness and ambition, as we have already observed; and his treachery was carried on with that secrecy and address, which show him to have been an accomplished villain. Satan seems to have entered first into his heart in the form of Mammon. Hearing that the chief priests and scribes sought life of his Master, it is likely that he expected a much larger reward for his treachery than he obtained; but it was not till he was reproved for his conduct in censuring the sister of Lazarus, for her costly attentions to his Master, that his mind appears to have been fully made up to his crime; then both resentment and covetousness urged him to commit the fatal deed: but this was no sooner completed, than his conscience reproached

Ver. 10 He that is washed.—Doddridge and Campbell, "He that hath been bathing." Yet as the feet might be soiled in going from the bath, they might need washing.

Ver. 13. Master.—(Greek, didaskalos,) i. e. "teacher." So Campbell.

Ver. 19. I tell you before, &c.—Christianity derives much support from a fulfilment of the New Testament prophecies, particularly from those of our Lord respecting the destruction of Jerusalem.

Ver. 23. Leaning on Jesus' bosom.—This was John, who was accustomed to sit next to Jesus, and in the leaning attitude then customary, reclined as it were on his bosom; but in this, as in many other instances, he modestly omits his own name.

Ver. 24. Beckoned.—Doddridge, "nodded." The word implies a motion of the head.

Ver. 26. Dipped the sop.—Buxtorf and others inform us, that at this feast the Jews have a thick kind of sauce, called charoseth, which is made of dates, raisins, and other ingredients, to about the consistence of a thick paste, to represent the clay with which their fathers wrought in Egypt. In this sauce it is supposed that our Lord dipped the sop which he gave to Judas.

28 Now no man at the table knew for what intent he spake this unto him.

29 For some of them thought, [v] because Judas had the bag, that Jesus had said unto him, Buy those things that we have need of against the feast; or, that he should give something to the poor.

30 He then having received the sop went immediately out: and it was night.

31 ¶ Therefore, when he was gone out, Jesus said, Now [w] is the Son of man glorified, and God [x] is glorified in him.

32 If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him.

33 Little children, yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek me: and [y] as I said unto the Jews, Whither I go, ye cannot come; so now I say to you.

34 A new [z] commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.

35 By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.

36 ¶ Simon Peter said unto him, Lord, whither goest thou? Jesus answered him, Whither I go, thou canst not follow me now; but [a] thou shalt follow me afterwards.

37 Peter said unto him, Lord, why cannot I follow thee now? I will [b] lay down my life for thy sake.

38 Jesus answered him, Wilt thou lay down thy life for my sake? Verily, verily, I say unto thee, The cock shall not crow, till thou hast denied me thrice.

him both as a villain and a fool—the former, for betraying "innocent blood;" and the latter, for doing it for a sum so inadequate to his crime!

From this confession, however, an ingenious Scottish clergyman (Bonar, of Perth) derives an important argument in favour of Christianity. His confession that Jesus was innocent, implies his conviction that Jesus was not only a good man, but the character he assumed to be, namely, the Messiah; for an impostor could never be an innocent and good man. It implies, also, that he (Judas) was privy to no design of sedition or rebellion against either the Jewish or Roman government: that Jesus was no magician, and had no dealings with impure spirits, as his enemies had pretended. Had he been guilty of either of these charges, we can hardly think the remorse of Judas would have gone so far as to lead him to hang himself, for bringing a criminal to justice!

But let us turn to Peter. He was naturally impetuous in temper, warm in his attachments, and most sincere in his professions; but weak in faith, and irresolute in action; yet not a little vain and self-confident. In the absence of danger, bold as a lion; but soon as it appeared, timid as a deer. Such was Peter in himself. He sinned awfully—wept bitterly—and was freely pardoned. If we view, however, the sequel of his life, we find what grace can do. No apostle was more courageous, more determined, more faithful. He was faithful unto death, and received the crown of martyrdom and glory.

The new commandment here mentioned (ver. 34) will come more fully under our notice in the following chapters, where it is somewhat amplified, and explained to be founded on, and measured by the Saviour's love to his disciples.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1—14. Jesus encourages and comforts his disciples.—In these last discourses of our Saviour, he endeavours to comfort his apostles by a variety of considerations, at which we can only glance. "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me:" that is, ye believe in the power and goodness of my heavenly Father; rely no less on my promises of grace and mercy: "I and the Father are one."

He then assures them, that though he is about to leave the world, and that in the most awful way, by a cruel and ignominious death, yet will he not finally forsake them. He is only going home to his Father's house, where there are "many mansions" of bliss and glory, that he may prepare a place for them to reside with him for ever. Thomas, with the same difficulty to understand, and reluctance to believe, that he manifested in another case, affects not to know whither his Lord is going, nor yet the way: and Philip, uniting with him, seems to require a corporeal sight of God, and of these heavenly mansions of which he speaks: "Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us." Jesus then exhibits himself as the way to the Father—the true and living way, as he had before taught them, (chap. x. 9, &c.;) the only way by which men can have access to God and heaven.

He farther informs them, (as before,) that such a union subsists between the Father and himself, that whosoever seeth the Son seeth the Father also. There is such an intimate union between these divine persons, that whosoever communeth with the one, communeth with the other also.

Jesus then addresses the twelve, and as Elijah said to Elisha—"Ask what I shall do for thee, before I am taken from thee:" so Jesus says, "If ye ask any thing in my name, I will do it." Let this then encourage us to pray in the name of Jesus, who is not only our intercessor, but our agent. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." This extensive promise, however, must be limited within the boundaries of common sense. It is not to be supposed that our Lord would sanction the extravagancies of enthusiasm, much less of crime: the con-

Ver. 33 Little children.—A term of endearment; dear as if they were his own little children.

Ver. 34. A new commandment.—(The Mosaic law commanded men to "love their neighbour as themselves;" and this implied that reciprocal and social love of believers of which our Lord spake: but this was now to be explained with new clearness, enforced by new motives and obligations, illustrated by a new example, obeyed in a new manner, and carried to a new extent. They were required to love each other for his sake, and in imitation of him,—"even as I have loved you,"—and be ready on all occasions to lay down their lives for each other. By this the primitive Christians were particularly known among the Gentiles; "See, said they, how they love one another: and are ready to lay down their lives for each other." Tertullian in Apol.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1. Believe in God.—The original is ambiguous, and may be rendered either as by our translators, or as by Doddridge and Campbell, "Believe in God, believe also in me;" or, "Ye believe (or believe ye) in God, and ye believe in me."

Ver. 5. We know not whither thou goest.—By this answer of Thomas, it should seem that this apostle thought our Lord was about to retreat to some distant part of the country to avoid his enemies; or, as Doddridge suggests, to some other country, to set up his kingdom.

Ver. 12. Because I go unto my Father.—This refers to the day of Pentecost, when Christ, having ascended up on high, poured forth therefrom the gifts he had received of the Father for that purpose. (See Acts ii.) Archbp. Fenelon beautifully remarks on the simple language Christ here uses. So a prince, educated in his father's palace, would speak of it as perfectly familiar to him,—as going home,—without being dazzled with the contemplation of its splendours.

15 ¶ If [m] ye love me, keep my commandments.
16 And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another [n] Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever;
17 Even the Spirit of truth; whom [o] the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and [p] shall be in you.
18 I will not leave you [q] comfortless: I [r] will come to you.
19 Yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more; but ye see me: because [s] I live, ye shall live also.
20 At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you.
21 He [t] that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him.
22 Judas [u] saith unto him, not Iscariot, Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?
23 Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and [v] we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.
24 He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings: and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me.

CHAPTER XV.

1 The consolation and mutual love between Christ and his members, under the parable of the vine. 18 A comfort in the hatred and persecution of the world. 26 The office of the Holy Ghost, and of the apostles.

I [a] AM the true vine, and my Father is the [b] husbandman.

cluding phrase, indeed, limits it to things in which "the Father may be glorified through the Son." Many "ask and have not, because they ask amiss." (James iv. 2, 3.)

Ver. 15—31. Our Lord enjoins a strict obedience to his commands, and promises another Comforter.—Love is the true source of Christian obedience, and that obedience is the great test of love: "If ye love me, keep my commandments." In that case I will ask the Father, and he will send you another Comforter, Advocate, and Friend, who will more than supply the loss of my bodily presence; and he shall remain with you, not for a few years, as I have been, but for ever. The primary idea of the original term (Paraklete) appears to be that of an Advocate, or a person called upon to plead one's cause in a court of judicature; and as the same is also the adviser or counsellor of his client, and being thus the means of great support and consolation, he may be also called a Comforter. Thus our Lord Jesus, who is the great Advocate, and wonderful Counsellor of his people, is also their Comforter, in all cases of difficulty and affliction; and hence the Holy Spirit here promised is called another Comforter. There is this difference, however, between these illustrious Advocates: Christ is our Advocate with his Father in the court of heaven; but the office of the Holy Spirit is rather to instruct, advise, and assist us here below, and thus he becomes our Comforter on earth. And this he does in perfect harmony with the work of Christ himself; nor is there more harmony in the operations of the Father and the Son, than there is between those of the Son and the Holy Spirit: for as the Son doth nothing of himself, or independent of the Father, so also the Holy Spirit, in all the consolations which he offers, (as it is afterwards expressed,) takes of "the things of Christ," and exhibits them to his people. In fact, all the comforts which the Holy Spirit administers to believers are derived from the doctrine and work of Christ—his obedience and sufferings; his death and resurrection.

This Holy Spirit is also called the Spirit of Truth, because it is his office to reveal truth, and to apply it to the consolation of the human mind, nor is any consolation derived from him but what is founded in truth and righteousness. The Spirit also teaches and instructs us, by bringing to our recollection, and impressing on our minds—not new truths, but those which Christ himself taught: for as Christ himself taught nothing but what he had heard and learned of the Father, (chap. viii. 26, 40,) so, it is said, "the Holy Spirit shall speak nothing of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear" from the Father and from Christ, "that shall he speak," and reveal to men, (ch. xvi. 13.) These things we introduce by way of anticipation, in order to show that there is, in all the operations of the Divine Persons, the most perfect harmony that can be conceived, and even more than creatures can possibly conceive; and yet, in the economy of our redemption, each has a distinct department.

In the eastern countries, on entering a house, (and we believe also in departing,) it is usual to pronounce a Salaam, that is, a wish of Peace; and it is, we presume, in conformity with that custom that our Lord made this his parting blessing: "Peace I leave with you: my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you." How does the world give? In a cold, complimentary, heartless manner. How does Christ give? All the blessings which he bestows are sprinkled with his blood. "He laid down his life" for us. Let not, therefore, our hearts be troubled; neither let us be afraid.

Our Lord proceeds, (ver. 28:) "Ye have heard how I have said unto you I go away, and come again unto you: If ye loved me as ye ought to do, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father; for my Father is greater than I." Far be it from us to attempt to dive into the mysteries of the divine nature, which must necessarily be incomprehensible. That God is greater than man seems a truism unworthy of the occasion: but where there is a perfect equality of nature, we may easily conceive a gradation in rank between a son and his father—between a messenger and him that sent him. In all the offices of Christ, as Prophet, Priest, and King, he evidently sustains a rank below the Father. But what ground of joy could it afford to Christ's disciples that he was going to his Father? Plainly this: That as he was about to be advanced to higher honours, so he had promised to his disciples that they should be with him to behold and partake his glory. "Because I live, ye shall live also." When I am raised from the dead, ye also shall be raised to newness of life. When I am raised to the right hand of God, ye shall sit with me in heavenly places. I will not (long) leave you orphans, without hope and comfort; but will provide you a home in my Father's house, that where I am there shall ye be also. "He that loveth me shall be loved of my Father; and I will love him and manifest myself unto him."

Judas (not Iscariot) saith unto him, "Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?" This is a question that leads us into the very essence of vital religion, into the doctrine of communion with God through Christ. "If any man love me he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." This is what the same Evangelist means, in his Epistles, by "Fellowship with the Father, and with his Son, Jesus Christ." (1 John i. 3.)

Chap. XV. Ver. 1—11. Christ the true Vine, and his disciples the branches.—Dr. Doddridge supposes the following discourse was also delivered in the guest-chamber, where our Lord partook the Passover, and instituted the Holy Supper; others, as Hammond and Guise, suppose it delivered in their way through some vineyards to the garden of Gethsemane; and we know that our Lord was used to converse walking with his disciples. It is very possible, however, on the former supposition, that the guest-chamber might have a view over some neighbouring vineyards, which the Passover full-moon would enable them to contemplate with advantage; and we know that it was our Lord's custom to notice any natural objects which might present themselves, in order to deliver spiritual truths under the most instructive figures.

Ver. 18. Comfortless.—Margin, "Orphans," the most "comfortless" part of society—having none to help, and none to care for them.

Ver. 30. The prince of this world—i. e. Satan, (chap. xii. 31;) elsewhere called "the god of this world." 2 Co. iv. 4.—Hath nothing in me—i. e. according to Doddridge, "No guilt of mine, to give him power over me; nor any inward corruption, to take part with his temptation."

Ver. 31. Arise, let us go hence.—This leads to the supposition, that the following conversation took place on the way to Gethsemane

2 Every [c] branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away: and every branch that [d] beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit.

3 Now [e] ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you.

4 Abide [f] in me, and I in you. As [g] the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me.

5 I am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: [h] for without me ye can do nothing.

6 If [i] a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned.

7 If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye [j] shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.

8 Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples.

9 As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love.

10 If [k] ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love.

11 These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that [l] your joy might be full.

12 ¶ This [m] is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you.

13 Greater [n] love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.

14 Ye [o] are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.

15 Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you [p] friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you.

16 Ye [q] have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained [r] you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever [s] ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you.

17 These [t] things I command you, that ye love one another.

18 ¶ If [u] the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you.

19 If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore [v] the world hateth you.

20 Remember [w] the word that I said unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; if [x] they have kept my saying, they will keep yours also.

21 But [y] all these things will they do unto you for my name's sake, because they know not him that sent me.

23 He that hateth me hateth my Father also.

24 If I had not done among them the works [c] which none other man did, they had not had sin: but now have they both seen and hated both me and my Father.

25 But this cometh to pass, that the word might be fulfilled that is written in their law, They [d] hated me without a cause.

The Old Testament frequently represents to us the Jewish church under this image; but here we are not to understand the church, but Christ himself, as the true Vine; and the members of his Church, including all true believers, as branches of this vine: and as the branches can only live and bear fruit while existing in and deriving sap from the parent vine, so Christ's disciples, whatever they profess, can only bear fruit in virtue of communion with him, and grace derived from him.

Sweetly instructive as is this allegory, it has produced some bitter controversy; but in arguing theological truths from parables, as this is, we should be very cautious not to go beyond first principles. It is very certain that both churches and individuals, though branches of this vine, may need pruning; and some divines, we think too hastily, have inferred the final apostacy of real believers, from the circumstance of branches being separated from this vine, in which we think one material circumstance has been overlooked. Believers are not naturally branches of this vine, but are engrafted into the stock, which is Christ, and form a vital union with him. The grafting of vines, though not usual, is sometimes practised, and probably in the vine countries much more frequently. Now we know that grafting does not always succeed, and the branch grafted can only be considered as stuck on, till it becomes united with the stem. If it do not thus unite in due time, as it can bear no fruit, so it is thrown away as useless, and fit only for the fire: but if it properly unites, then it becomes fruitful; but still is liable to the pruning knife, that it may bring forth more fruit.

But the great doctrine of the parable is, "Without me," that is, severed from or independent of me, "ye can do nothing;" that is, bear no fruit: and the great use of the doctrine is to guard Christians against self-confidence, and its natural effect—apostacy. It is not necessary here to enter far into the doctrine of final perseverance. Three things are certain; first, that we cannot be saved without it: "He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved." 2. That grace to persevere can be derived from Christ only; "Without me ye can do nothing." 3. That it is extremely dangerous to trust our salvation to former experiences, without competent evidence from the fruit we bear, that we still belong to Christ. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bring forth much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples."

Ver. 12—27. The great law of Christianity.—Farther promises respecting the Holy Spirit.—"These things I command you, (says our Saviour,) that ye love one another;" on which passage we offer two brief remarks—the authority enjoining, and the nature of the command. 1. "I command you," says the Saviour: angels and prophets spake "in the name of the Lord;" and nothing like this, in matters of religion, occurs, except when God himself speaks, in all the Old Testament. And not only does Christ command in his own name, but delegates to apostles and evangelists to act and to command in his name, from whom all their authority was derived. Does not this place the authority of Christ above both men and angels? Is it not assuming the style of Deity?

2. The command is also worthy of the authority—a precept the most unexceptionable that heaven ever gave. This, in another place, (chap. xiii. 34,) our Lord calls a new commandment; not that it was absolutely so, for love to God and man, we have seen, was the substance of the ten commands. But, 1. It was a neglected command. Doddridge remarks, (from Raphelius,) that Xenophon calls the laws of Lycurgus very

CHAP. XV. Ver. 2. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit.—By this it is evident, that to be in Christ, implies only a profession; for those who bear no fruit cannot be real Christians: that such are taken away, argues, therefore, nothing against the perseverance of true believers. In allusion to the practice of grafting, it may be observed, that persons may be grafted into the Christian profession, without being vitally united to Christ by faith, though none can be thus united without being grafted, since we are not naturally so. We may be grafted by baptism, or by education, but it requires the quickening influences of the Holy Spirit to produce a vital union and fruitful branches. As to grafting vines, that this was formerly, and still is the practice in certain cases, we may safely infer from the directions given for its performance in works of husbandry.—He purgeth it—i. e. by pruning; the only way in which a vine can be purged.

Ver. 3. Now ye are clean—Or purged: the same word as is used in the preceding verse. The expression may refer to chap. xiii. 10—"Now ye are clean, but not all;" Judas being then present; but now he was gone out, they were all clean.

Ver. 4. Abide in me, and [I will abide] in you.—The expression is evidently elliptical, and must be thus explained.

Ver. 5 Without me.—Doddridge, "Separate from me."

Ver. 6. Cast forth—i. e. thrown away.—And is withered.—Campbell, "which is withered;" a Hebrew idiom, the copulative often supplying the place of the relative.

Ver. 7. Unto you.—Doddridge, "for you."

Ver. 8. So shall ye be—i. e. evidently appear to be.

Ver. 9. Continue ye in my love—i. e. according to Campbell, "Study to maintain your place in my affections."

Ver. 11. That my joy might remain in you.—Doddridge, "That my joy in you might continue." Campbell, "That I might continue to have joy in you."

Ver. 16. That your fruit should remain—i. e. that ye should continue to bear fruit even in old age. Ps. xcii. 14.

Ver. 18. Hated me before it hated you.—Lardner, 'Hated me, your chief;" which Doddridge approves, but Campbell strenuously opposes.

Ver. 20. My saying.—Campbell, "My word."

Ver. 24. But now have they both seen and hated, &c.—Compare chapter xiv. 9.

Ver. 25. But this cometh to pass.—Doddridge, "This is permitted" these words, indeed, are merely supplementary, not being in the original; yet are properly supplied.

26 ¶ But when the Comforter [e] is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he [f] shall testify of me:

27 And [g] ye also shall bear witness, because [h] ye have been with me from the beginning.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Christ comforteth his disciples against tribulation by the promise of the Holy Ghost, and by his resurrection and ascension: 23 assureth their prayers made in his name to be acceptable to his Father. 33 Peace in Christ, and in the world affliction.

THESE things have I spoken unto you, that ye should not be offended.

2 They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, [a] that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service.

3 And [b] these things will they do unto you, because [c] they have not known the Father, nor me.

4 But these things have I told you, that when the time shall come, ye may remember that I told you of them. And these things I said not unto you at the beginning, because I was with you.

5 ¶ But now I go my way to him that sent me; and none of you asketh me, Whither goest thou?

6 But because I have said these things unto you, sorrow [d] hath filled your heart.

7 Nevertheless I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you but if I depart, I will send him unto you.

8 And when he is come, he will [e] reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment:

9 Of [f] sin, because they believe not on me;

10 Of [g] righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more;

11 Of [h] judgment, because [i] the prince of this world is judged.

12 I have yet many things to say unto you, but [j] ye cannot bear them now.

13 Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he [k] will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he [l] will show you things to come.

new laws, several ages after they were made; because, though widely known, they had been little acted upon. So the Scribes and Pharisees had, by their traditions, in great measure made void this first and great command. 2. It was a renewed law: our Lord had largely explained, and amply illustrated it, in his Sermon on the Mount, and on other occasions which we have noticed. 3. It was newly illustrated and enforced by his own example, which was made the future model of their obedience: "This is my commandment, that ye love one another as I have loved you;" namely, by laying down their lives for one another, if required, as he had done for them.

Our Lord then places his attachment to his disciples in another point of view: it was not only compassion, but it was friendship. He had treated his disciples, and particularly the apostles, as friends, to whom he had communicated his mind freely and fully, and not with that reserve which men exercise toward their slaves or servants. "All things which I have heard from my Father I have declared to you." He had recently opened to them the mystery of his sufferings and death, and the glory which should follow, both to him and them. He admonishes them, also, that they were indebted to his grace and favour for all the privileges which they enjoyed. They had not chosen him for a Master or a Saviour; but he had chosen them for disciples, and ordained them to bring forth much fruit, and that in continuance, to the divine glory. He prepares them, however, for the hatred of the world, and for the persecution which would necessarily arise out of it; reminding them that he had sustained and conquered both. The world had hated both him and the Father, which implies not only the absence of love, (as the expression is sometimes used,) but an enmity of heart against those truths and duties which the gospel enjoined upon them. They shut their eyes that they might not see the former, and they hardened their hearts that they might not feel the latter.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1—15. The office of the Holy Ghost—the Comforter.—Our Lord, in the beginning of this chapter, repeats the warning which he had previously given to his apostles against persecution from the world, with this addition: "Yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service." A remarkable instance of this occurs in the case of Paul, who, before his conversion, "verily thought" —that is, conscientiously—that he "ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth," whose disciples he persecuted to prison and to death. (Acts xxvi. 9, 10.) And we doubt not but other Jewish persecutors might be equally conscientious. And, even in more modern times, we are persuaded that many persecutors in the Romish Church thought that they were doing God service when burning his saints under the name of heretics. But it is to be observed that Paul never urges this in apology for his conduct: on the contrary, though one of the most successful and accomplished of the Apostles, he never thought himself worthy of the name, because he had persecuted the church of God. (1 Cor. xv. 9.) Ignorance, arising from depravity, is no excuse for sin.

The predicted sufferings of their Lord, and the persecutions they were warned to expect, having filled their hearts with sorrow, the apostles seem to have sunk into silent grief, asking no farther questions: our Lord, however, recalls their attention to the mission of the Great Comforter whom he had promised to send, but who, according to the economy of redemption, and the tenor of prophecy, could not come till after his death and resurrection. "It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away the Comforter will not come; but if I depart, I will send him unto you." Our Lord then goes on to explain more particularly the office of the Holy Spirit in the conversion of the world. "He will reprove," or, more properly, convince the world (1) of sin—and especially of unbelief, because they rejected the Messiah and Saviour of the world: (2) Of righteousness—that is, of Christ's personal innocence and purity; "because (says he) I go to my Father, and ye see me no more;" intimating that, were he the least defiled with sin, the Father would not accept the sacrifice he offered, nor receive him into glory. (3) Of judgment—i. e. of the divine judgment already inflicted upon Satan, the prince of this world, and soon after to fall upon a guilty nation, who have been led by him into the deepest of all crimes. (See exposition of chap. xii. 31.)

The Holy Spirit is then spoken of as their Guide into "all the truth"—that is, evangelical or divine truth; for this promise hath no reference to other truths, whether natural or scientific. But he endowed them with the spirit of prophecy; and revealed to them the character, the offices, and work of the Saviour, and thus promoted his glory: it being, as the Scriptures assure us, a constant object with the divine persons to promote each other's glory: the Father glorifies the Son, the Son the Father, and the Holy Spirit both.

When our Lord subjoins, "All things that the Father hath are mine," it implies an assumption of the divine perfections utterly unjustifiable in a mere creature; but it has here reference more particularly to the great scheme of human redemption, revealed by the Father to the Son, by both to the Holy Ghost, and by him to the apostles and first preachers, and through their means to all succeeding ages.

But the sanctifying and consoling influences of the Holy Spirit must not be confined to the first preachers only, nor to the apostolic age. The learned Calvin remarks on this passage: "He [the Holy Spirit] shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you:" that "the words imply, that we may receive the Spirit to this end, that we may enjoy the benefits of Christ. And what does the Spirit confer on us? To be washed in the blood of Christ; to have sin removed and abolished in us by his death and passion; to have our old man crucified; and to experience the power of his resurrection, by causing us to walk in newness of life; in short, to be made partakers of all his blessings. The Spirit then bestows nothing on us that was not in Jesus Christ, of whom he receives it to give to us. In the same manner we ought to think of the doctrine; for he does not enlighten us with the view of leading us the least astray from the Son of God; but he displays and opens to us the treasures which are hid in Jesus Christ. In short, the CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1. Not be offended,—Campbell, "ensnared." Literally, "scandalized:" i. e. that persecution should not, by coming unexpectedly, prove a stumbling-block to their faith.

Ver. 2. They shall put you out of—Campbell, "expel you from." This refers to Jewish excommunication.—Whosoever killeth you.—The highest degree of excommunication included a forfeiture both of property and life.—Will think he doeth God service.—Doddridge, "Will think he offereth [acceptable] service to God." Campbell, "Offereth sacrifice to God." This explains Rom. viii. 36: "For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter." Paul says, Acts xxvi. 9—11, "I verily thought I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth, which thing I did in Jerusalem: and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, and when they were put to death I gave my voice against them." (See note, Rev. xvii. 6.)

Ver. 7. It is expedient for you that I go away.—The presence of the Comforter is now more to be desired in a church than the bodily presence of Jesus Christ.

Ver. 8. He will reprove.—Doddridge and Campbell, "Convince." So it often signifies.

Ver. 12. I have yet many things to say—That is, much farther instruction to give; but as you are not yet prepared to receive it, the Holy Spirit shall be given to instruct you after my resurrection.

Ver. 13. When he, the Spirit of truth.—Hervey long since remarked the strong evidence which this passage affords to the personality of the Holy Spirit: for though the Greek word for Spirit (pneuma) is neuter, all the pronouns are masculine—He, himself, &c. which he thinks can only be accounted for by the personality of the Holy Spirit. Letters No. 24. See also Dr Smith's Messiah, where the argument is ably justified.

14 He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you.

15 All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and show it unto you.

16 ¶ A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see me, because I go to the Father.

17 Then said some of his disciples among themselves, What is this that he saith unto us, A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see me: and, Because I go to the Father?

18 They said therefore, What is this that he saith, A little while? we cannot tell what he saith.

19 Now Jesus knew [m] that they were desirous to ask him, and said unto them, Do ye inquire among yourselves of that I said, A [n] little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see me?

20 Verily, verily, I say unto you, That ye [o] shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice: and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy.

21 A [p] woman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour is come: but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world.

22 And [q] ye now therefore have sorrow: but I will see you again, and [r] your heart shall rejoice, and your joy [s] no man taketh from you.

23 And in that day ye shall ask me nothing. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you.

24 Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name: [t] ask, and ye shall receive, that [u] your joy may be full.

25 These things have I spoken unto you in [v] proverbs: but the time cometh, when I shall no more speak unto you in [v] proverbs, but I shall show you plainly of the Father.

26 At [w] that day ye shall ask in my name: and I say not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you:

27 For [x] the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me, and have believed that [y] I came out from God.

28 I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father.

29 ¶ His disciples said unto him, Lo, now speakest thou plainly, and speakest no [z] proverb.

30 Now are we sure that thou knowest all things, and needest not that any man should ask thee: by this we believe that thou camest forth from God.

31 Jesus answered them, Do ye now believe?

32 [a] Behold, the hour cometh, yea, is now come, that ye shall be scattered, every man to [b] his own, and shall leave me alone: and yet [c] I am not alone, because the Father is with me.

33 These things I have spoken unto you, that in [d] me ye might have peace. In [e] the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Christ prayeth to his Father to glorify him, 6 to preserve his apostles, 11 in unity 17 and truth, 20 to glorify them, and all other believers with him in heaven.

THESE words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the [a] hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee:

Holy Ghost bestows on us no other riches than those of Jesus, to the end that he may manifest the glory of Christ, and magnify it in all and by all."

Ver. 16—33. Christ farther discourses of his death and resurrection, and of the trials awaiting his Apostles.—In our last section we affirmed that the gift of the Holy Spirit was by no means confined to apostolic times, but is, and was intended to be continued, so long as Christ shall have a church on earth. We now resume this most important topic, in order to show, by a brief quotation, that this was most decidedly and explicitly the doctrine of the Reformers of the Church of England, to prove which we shall quote one of the Homilies which they published, and ordered to be read in that Church:—

"Our Saviour Christ, departing out of the world unto his Father, promised his disciples to send down another Comforter, that should continue with them for ever, and direct them into all truth; which thing to be faithfully and truly performed, the Scriptures do sufficiently bear witness. Neither must we think that this Comforter was either promised, or else given, only to the Apostles, but also to the universal Church of Christ, dispersed through the whole world. For unless the Holy Ghost had been always present, governing and preserving the church from the beginning, it could never have sustained so many and great brunts of affliction and persecution, with so little damage and harm as it hath. And the words of Christ are most plain in this behalf, saying, that 'the Spirit of Truth should abide with them for ever; that he would be with them always, (he meaneth by grace, virtue, and power,) even to the world's end.'

"Also in the prayer that he made to his Father, a little before his death, he maketh intercession, not only for himself and his apostles, but indifferently for all them that should believe in him through their words, that is, to wit, for his whole church. And again, St. Paul saith, 'If any man have not the spirit of Christ, the same is not his.' Also, in the words following: 'We have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.' Hereby, then, it is evident and plain to all men, that the Holy Ghost was given, not only to the Apostles, but also to the whole body of Christ's congregation, although not in like form and majesty as he came down at the feast of Pentecost."

In the following words our Lord expresses himself somewhat enigmatically: "A little while and ye shall not see me." The meaning of which we take to be, that for a little while he should be taken from their view by death, but soon return; and then they should see him again, after his resurrection: but this also would be only for a little while, because he must go to the Father, and they should see him ascend. This is called a proverb; but more properly a parable, or enigma, which our Lord, finding their minds thus perplexed, elucidates by another. He compares their situation, during the time of his death, to that of a woman in travail, full of anxiety and pain till she is delivered, and then filled with a reverse of joy and transport, which must undoubtedly have been the case, when they beheld their risen Saviour, and saw him ascend to glory. "And in that day ye shall ask me nothing;" that is, after our Lord's resurrection and ascent to glory, they should need to make no more personal inquiries; and so it was: for in a few days afterwards, the miraculous influences of the Holy Spirit were poured down in such a wonderful manner, as to furnish them with all the wisdom and knowledge requisite to their important office.

Previously to this conversation, our Lord had instructed his disciples to offer their petitions to the almighty Father in his name; but it should seem that they had done, as we too often do, neglected to use their privilege; for "hitherto they had asked" little or "nothing" in that name. He therefore now encourages them thus to ask, by assuring them (if we rightly understand the 26th verse) to this effect; that the Father would be so well pleased to receive their petitions in his Son's name, as a proof of their attachment to him, that (if of a proper nature) he would immediately grant them, without any particular application from him to second it. "For the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me." Having said these things for their encouragement, he concludes with telling them—"In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

"Yes: the promis'd tribulation,
Saviour, in the world we find;
Find the pledge of pure salvation
In a patient, cheerful mind.
"We on all our foes shall trample,
Sharers of thy victory;
Followers of thy great example,
Conqueror of the world through thee."—C. Wesley.

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1—12. Christ's prayer, both for himself and his disciples.—Supposing, as we are much inclined to do, that our Saviour left the supper-room, when he said, (chap. xiv. 31,) "Arise, let us go hence," we are not to conceive of the conversation in chap. xv. and xvi. taking place in the streets of Jerusalem; but rather that our Lord hastened without the walls with his disciples, while the Jews were all busily engaged within; and choosing the most retired way, by the side of the brook Kedron, he might walk to some distance before he found it conveniently fordable, (as there was often much rain about this season,) and during that time might hold this conversation with them; and in some secret and retired spot, (possibly in some house of prayer—see Luke vi. 12, expos.) close it with the following prayer, to which, as it was undoubtedly offered in their hearing, and contained much instructive and consolatory truth, they might listen with a pious pleasure.

It has been properly remarked, that our Lord, having in the preceding discourses discharged the office of a prophet, is now commencing his priestly office, by praying for his disciples, previously to offering his atoning sacrifice.

The opening of the prayer shows the earnestness and solemnity with which it was uttered. The Jewish High Priest had to offer, "first for his own sins, and then for the sins of the people;" (Heb. vii. 27;) but our great High Priest had no sins of his own to atone for; yet he prayed for himself as man and Mediator, as well as for his apostles and disciples. Nor must his petitions be confined to his disciples of that age or country, any more than the Holy Spirit which he promised, as we shall find clearly expressed in verse 20. We shall, however, consider the petitions as they occur.

The first petition is, in substance, that as the Son had glorified the Father while on earth, so, that the Father would glorify the Son with the glory which he had enjoyed with him "before the world was," that is, with heavenly glory; for we can no way reconcile this with the notion of Christ having no existence previous to his incarnation. 2. Our Lord prays that he may be glorified on earth also, by the diffusion of his gospel through the world. "As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life"—not to all flesh, but —"to as many as thou hast given him." Calvinistic expositors generally explain this expression of the decree of election; or refer it to the stipulations of the covenant of redemption, as the excellent Dr. Doddridge—"That he may give eternal life to all that thou hast given him by that covenant, to be redeemed and saved." But others think, if we allow our Lord to be his own interpreter, his words may more directly intend, all those who had been "drawn" by the Father's grace to believe on him, chap. vi. 44. This, in the first place, intends the apostles; and in the next, those other disciples who had been drawn by the same grace also to believe on him. To them he had manifested the Father's name, and to them delivered the Father's message, and they had kept his words. But the petition is afterwards extended to all who should believe in him throughout the world, and to the end of time.

Unitarian writers lay great stress upon the third verse, as appropriating the term "true God" to the Father only; but as most of the august epithets applied to God the Father (including every thing great, and wise, and good) are also applied to the Son, (see, for instance, John xxi. 17. Rev. ii. 23. Mat. xviii. 20; xxviii. 20, &c.,) so we conclude that the term only was not intended to exclude the Son of God, but merely the false gods of the Gentiles, who had no just title to the name. This may seem a little strange to us, who "know that an idol is nothing in the world;" but it must have appeared different in that age, when the far greater part of the world were accustomed to apply many of the same epithets to Jupiter, and other "gods major" of the heathen. But, surely, if Jesus Christ be not truly God, to associate the knowledge of him with that of the Father, and to make it equally essential, is highly indecorous; and is, if we may be allowed to use a commercial term, putting the Creator and the creature in the same firm.

But how is this knowledge "life eternal?" Of scientific knowledge it has been said, that "knowledge is power," because it enables men to effect what mere bodily strength never could: much more so is the knowledge of the true God, and Jesus Christ his Son. This directs the conduct and purifies the heart: this guides us in every difficulty, and supports us under every trial; and when death draws his black veil over every object of earthly comfort or enjoyment, this opens to us a view into the celestial world, and points to him that sits upon the throne and to the Lamb. This knowledge prepares us for eternal life, and directs us thither.

In connexion with our Lord's prayer for his disciples, occurs this remarkable expression, which has occasioned much theological debate:—"I pray for them: I pray not for the world; but for them which thou hast given me, for they are thine." The question is, who constitute the world for which Christ did not pray? We apprehend it intends the unbelieving Jewish nation, out of which his own disciples had been selected; and, in this view, we may see a reason why he refused to pray for them, for he had charged them with the sin against the Holy Ghost, which, in its own nature is unpardonable; (Mat. xii. 31, 32, &c.;) and concerning which sin, as many think, the same evangelist (1 John v. 16) has this remarkable expression—"I do not say that he shall pray for it." These men also (many of them at least) had, in the most awful manner, imprecated upon themselves the vengeance of the Almighty—"His blood be on us and on our children;" (Mat. xxvii. 25;) and our Lord accordingly tells them, that upon them should come the punishment "of all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias." (Mat. xxiii. 35.)

This, however, does not exclude from our Saviour's prayers, or from the Father's mercy, all who were then unbelieving, but only the finally impenitent; for we know that he prayed for his murderers while on the cross; and we know also that St. Peter preached the doctrine of pardon to them on the day of Pentecost; when many "looked on him whom they had pierced," and mourned for him, (Zech. xii. 10,) and were consequently forgiven, and received into the bosom of his church; but of the mass of Scribes and Pharisees, and Priests, it is much to be feared that, with few exceptions, they died impenitent, and perished. "Our Lord knew (says Dr. Boothroyd) that they were to be rejected for their hardness of heart, impenitency, and unbelief; and hence submitted to the will of the Father, in this, as on all other occasions."

There is, however, another difficulty in this section of Scripture, which, as it is an essential part of our plan to obviate difficulties, we cannot pass unnoticed. Speaking of his Apostles more particularly, our Lord says, "I kept them in thy name," and none of them is lost but the son of perdition, that the Scripture might be fulfilled. 1. We cannot suppose that this has any reference to the divine decrees, or that any one soul could be lost whom God had predestined to salvation; nor, 2. does it appear that Judas ever gave any proof of being drawn by the Father's grace: his character, though artfully concealed, was perfectly consistent, and was most decidedly that of a worldly-minded man. The text is, therefore, thus judiciously paraphrased by Dr. Doddridge,—"None of them is lost, unless it be counted, as a kind of exception, that the son of perdition perishes by his iniquity—that the Scripture might be fulfilled." (See Ps. cix. 8. Acts i. 20.) For this man, therefore Christ offered up no prayer.

For the faithful eleven, however, and for all other sincere disciples associated with them, our Lord presents this simple and earnest petition: "Holy Father, keep, through thine own name, those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are;" united in heart, in object, and design: but the full import of this prayer we can never comprehend till we understand the union between the Father and the Son. It is enough that we know, that to be like God, and to be conformed to the image of the Saviour, constitute complete and eternal happiness.

CHAPTER XVIII

1 Judas betrayeth Jesus. 6 The officers fall to the ground. 10 Peter smiteth off Malchus' ear. 12 Jesus is taken, and led unto Annas and Caiaphas. 15 Peter's denial. 19 Jesus examined before Caiaphas. 28 His arraignment before Pilate. 36 His kingdom. 40 The Jews ask Barabbas to be let loose.

WHEN Jesus had spoken these words, he went forth with his disciples over the brook [a] Cedron, where was a garden, in the which he entered, and his disciples.

Ver. 13—26. Our Lord continues to pray for his disciples, that they may be preserved in peace, and truth, and love.—Our Lord here gives his disciples to understand that the reason of his praying for them thus audibly was, the comfort and satisfaction they might derive from hearing the interest which they had in his affections and his prayers; that their joy in him might be complete and perfect. (See note on verse 13.)

The term sanctify, (ver. 17 and 19,) as applied to Christ and to his people, must be somewhat differently explained. Christ being himself without sin, could need not to be sanctified, in the usual meaning of the term: but for their sakes, who were sinners as we are, he sanctified, devoted, or (as some express it) consecrated himself as an atoning sacrifice to God in their behalf, that through their cordial belief in this truth, they might be sanctified, both in their personal experience, and in their ministerial character and be devoted to the circulation of the truth and the conversion of the world.

Our Saviour then extends his prayers beyond his present disciples—beyond the limits of the then present age, and beyond the boundary of the Jewish church:—"Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also that shall believe on me through their word: that they be one—that is, perfectly united in heart and affection, in a like holy and mysterious manner as thou, Father, art with me: "that they also may be one in us: that the world [Gentile as well as Jewish] may believe that thou hast sent me."

This passage presents some very interesting inquiries, which we have only room to suggest to the meditations of our readers. 1. How does the word of God become the means or instrument of our sanctification? Undoubtedly by the perusal and contemplation of the Scriptures, under the influences of the Holy Spirit. The doctrines of Scripture show its nature and indispensable necessity; the precepts urge and enforce it on us; the promises animate and encourage us to pursue it; and its histories present us with the purest and most instructive examples. David was sanctified thereby, as he informs us at large in the 119th Psalm. 2. How do love and unity among Christians promote the conversion of the world? Certainly nothing has a more direct tendency thereto, if we consult either reason or matter of fact. Love and union are things in themselves so estimable, that they are readily acknowledged by all men to be divine: and what did the heathen say when they saw this in the lives and conduct of the primitive Christians? "See how these Christians love!" And it is much to be feared that the schisms and animosities among Christians have made more infidels than the writings of all the sceptical philosophers in the world. Few men can argue deeply, but all men can read our lives.

But to proceed with our exposition.—It may be asked, "What is that glory which the Father gave to Christ," and which he in like manner gave to his apostles? (Verse 22.) Some refer this to the miraculous powers with which, as man, Jesus was endued, and which he conferred on his apostles; others to that Christian love and unity spoken of in the preceding verse, and which, wherever they prevail, are truly the glory of Christianity; but we are inclined to think it should be understood more literally, of that glory to which Christ himself was about to be advanced; to which he had promised to advance them, and concerning which he thus speaks in the next verse: "Father, I would that they whom thou hast given me be with me where I am [going,] that they may behold [and participate] my glory." For wherever our Lord speaks of his disciples beholding his glory, it is, we believe, always with the understanding that they were to participate in the glory which they beheld: and this glory is here expressly stated to be that which our Lord himself enjoyed with the Father "before the foundation of the world." This most interesting prayer concludes with requesting that the love which the Father had shown to him, as Mediator, might also be shown to them, and that they might enjoy the indwelling residence both of the Father and of the Son—according to his former promise: "If any man love me he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." (Ch. xiv. 23.)

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1—18. Jesus betrayed, and carried before the High Priest.—Our Lord had no sooner concluded his address to his disciples, and the prayer which followed, than he crossed the brook Kidron, and entered his favourite retreat, the garden of Gethsemane; and as Judas might have heard, or at least strongly suspected, that Jesus was going thither, he thither came with the Jewish officers, who were appointed to apprehend him, and with the Roman guard. Jesus, knowing that his hour was now come, instead of withdrawing, as on former occasions, now came forward and demanded, Whom seek ye? and when they answered, Jesus of Nazareth, he immediately replied, "I am he." Upon this, whether confounded by the courage and majesty with which our Saviour expressed himself, or whether alarmed by suddenly recollecting the conduct of Elijah, who, when Ahab sent to arrest him, suddenly struck the men dead with lightning—so it was, that upon hearing these words, "they drew back, and fell to the ground before him." Jesus then repeating his avowal, that he was the person they sought, added, "If ye seek me, let these go their way." This, it should seem, was acceded to, when Peter rashly drew his sword, and cut off the ear of Malchus, one of the High Priest's servants. This was immediately restored by the miraculous power of our Lord. But the incident probably occasioned some confusion, when the Roman soldiers, who had remained hitherto in the back ground, came forward to assist the Jews; and our Saviour suffered himself to be bound by them, and led away, first to Annas, and then to Caiaphas, who had already predicted that he should die for the people, and who was now active to fulfil his own prediction.

We must not, however, pass over our Lord's reproof of Peter—"Put up thy sword;" which applies, not only to military heroes, who delight in blood; but, more especially to religious zealots, who, like Saul of Tarsus, "breathe out threatening and slaughter" against all who differ from them in religion. It is "the sword of the Spirit" only, which becomes the hand of an apostle, or Christian minister. Our Lord adds these memorable words—"The cup which my Father giveth me, shall I not drink it?" This was the dreadful "cup" from which our Saviour prayed to be, if possible, delivered: but if he had not drank it, the whole human race must have drank it to the dregs, and have drank it in everlasting misery. But what a lesson is this to us, in our comparatively tasteless cup of woe?

Ver. 13. That they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves.—Campbell, "That their joy in me may be complete," or fulfilled.

Ver. 15. From the evil—viz. the evil that is in the world.

Ver. 17. Sanctify them through thy truth.—Some ancient MSS. and versions read, "the truth;" and Mill and other critics reject the pronoun as unnecessary.

Ver. 24. Father, I will.—Campbell "I would." So Beza, Witsius, &c., and compare Mark vi. 25: x. 35. Doddridge includes both senses—"I importunately ask, and in consequence of the mutual transactions between us, am bold to claim." It is a petition founded on a previous engagement.

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1. The brook Cedron.—Kedron, or Kidron, is a rivulet running between Jerusalem and mount Olivet, which empties itself into the Dead sea. It is a narrow stream, with little water, except in the rainy season, when it carried off all the filth of the city and temple into the Dead sea

2 And Judas also, which betrayed him, knew the place: for Jesus ofttimes resorted thither with his disciples.

3 Judas [b] then, having received a band of men and officers from the chief priests and Pharisees, cometh thither with lanterns and torches and weapons.

4 Jesus therefore, knowing [c] all things that should come upon him, went forth, and said unto them, Whom seek ye?

5 They answered him, Jesus of [d] Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them, I am he. And Judas also, which betrayed him, stood with them.

6 As soon then as he had said unto them, I am he, they [e] went backward, and fell to the ground.

7 Then asked he them again, Whom seek ye? And they said, Jesus of Nazareth.

8 Jesus answered, I have told you that I am he: if therefore ye seek [f] me, let these go their way:

9 That the saying might be fulfilled, which [g] he spake, Of them which thou gavest me have I lost none.

10 ¶ Then [h] Simon Peter having a sword drew it, and smote the high priest's servant, and cut off his right ear. The servant's name was Malchus.

11 Then said Jesus unto Peter, Put up thy sword into the sheath: the [i] cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?

12 ¶ Then the band and the captain and officers of the Jews took Jesus, and bound him, 13 And led him away to Annas [j] first; for he was father-in-law to Caiaphas, which was the high priest that same [k] year.

14 Now Caiaphas was he, which gave counsel [l] to the Jews, that it was expedient that one man should die for the people.

15 ¶ And [m] Simon Peter followed Jesus, and so did another disciple: that disciple was known unto the high priest, and went in with Jesus into the palace of the high priest.

16 But Peter stood at the door without. Then went out that other disciple, which was known unto the high priest, and spake unto her that kept the door, and brought in Peter.

17 Then said the damsel that kept the door unto Peter, Art not thou also one of this man's disciples? He saith, I am not.

18 And the servants and officers stood there, who had made a fire of coals; for it was cold: and they warmed themelves: and Peter stood with them, and warmed himself.

19 ¶ The high priest then asked Jesus of his disciples, and of his doctrine.

20 Jesus answered him, I spake [n] openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and [o] in secret have I said nothing.

21 Why askest thou me? ask them which heard me, what I have said unto them: behold, they know what I said.

22 And when he had thus spoken, one of the officers which stood by struck [p] Jesus [q] with the palm of his hand, saying, Answerest thou the high priest so?

23 Jesus answered him, If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil: but [r] if well, why smitest thou me?

24 Now [s] Annas had sent him bound unto Caiaphas the high priest.

25 ¶ And Simon Peter stood and warmed himself. They said therefore unto him, Art not thou also one of his disciples? He denied it, and said, I am not.

26 One of the servants of the high priest, being his kinsman whose ear Peter cut off, saith, Did not I see thee in the garden with him?

Whatever portion of affliction Providence may present to us, shall we not drink it from our Father's, and especially from our Saviour's hand, who drank for us that cup of wrath which our sins had merited? We may pray submissively to have the cup removed, but it is base ingratitude to refuse it.

Peter, it should seem, now put away his sword for ever, and followed his Master in disguise, as though he had been a stranger, with another disciple, who being known at the palace, procured admission; but Peter stood without till that other disciple (supposed to be John himself) interceded for his admission with the woman who kept the door, and who, upon his admission, directly challenged him with being a disciple; but Peter promptly denied this, and, no farther notice being taken for the present, he stood and warmed himself with the servants, at a fire which they had kindled for the occasion.

It is mentioned that the officers first took Jesus to Annas, who had been previously High Priest, and perhaps still acted occasionally in that office for his son-in-law, on whom the office had been since conferred: but Annas seems to have taken no cognizance of the affair, but sent him immediately to Caiaphas, from whom he had the first hearing. In our next section we shall follow them into the hall, and see the Lord of life and glory arraigned before a time-serving Jewish priest.

Ver. 19—28. Jesus examined before Caiaphas.—Of this previous examination the only account is here given by the Evangelist John, and this merely states that he was questioned, by the High Priest, of his disciples and his doctrine; in answer to which he appealed to those who had heard him, denying that he had taught any secret doctrines, (as the Greek philosophers were known to do,) or formed any private faction. But speaking, as the Messiah, with more freedom than the under officers of the Court thought becoming the rank of their master, one of them presumed to strike our Saviour, with this reproof—"Answerest thou the High Priest so?" The reply of our Lord may, perhaps, be thus paraphrased:—"If now, or on any other occasion, I have spoken what is contrary to the law, bear witness against me, (as I just now said;) but if not, why strikest thou me uncondemned?" (See Acts xvi. 37.) Here John closes this part of his narrative; probably because the other evangelists had related the process of our Lord's trial before the Sanhedrim, which immediately followed.

But Peter is here again brought before us, and we see the Ver. 4. Went forth.—[Our Lord not only knew in general, says Dr. Doddridge, that he should suffer some great evil, and even death itself, but was acquainted also with all the particular circumstances of ignominy and horror that should attend his sufferings: which, accordingly, he largely foretold, (see Mat. xx 18, 19,) though many of these circumstances were as contingent as can well be imagined. It is impossible to enter aright into the heroic behaviour of our Lord Jesus Christ, without carrying this circumstance along with us. The critics are in raptures at the gallantry of Achilles in going to the Trojan war, when he knew, according to Homer, that he should fall there: but he must have a very low way of thinking, who does not see infinitely more fortitude in our Lord's conduct on this great occasion, when this circumstance, so judiciously, though so modestly suggested by St. John, is duly attended to.]—B.

It was at the palace of Caiaphus where the chief priests, elders, and scribes, were assembled the whole of the night to see the issue of their stratagem.]—Bagster.

27 Peter then denied again: and [t] immediately the cock crew.

28 ¶ Then [u] led they Jesus from Caiaphas unto [v] the hall of judgment: and it was early; and they themselves went not into the judgment hall, lest [w] they should be defiled; but that they might eat the passover.

29 Pilate then went out unto them, and said, What accusation bring ye against this man?

30 They answered and said unto him, If he were not a malefactor, we would not have delivered him up unto thee.

31 Then said Pilate unto them, Take ye him, and judge him according to your law. The Jews therefore said unto him, It is not lawful for us [x] to put any man to death:

32 That the saying of Jesus might be fulfilled, which he [y] spake, signifying what death he should die.

33 Then Pilate entered into the judgment hall again, and called Jesus, and said unto him, Art thou the king of the Jews?

34 Jesus answered him, Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell it thee of me?

35 Pilate answered, Am I a Jew? Thine own [z] nation and the chief priests have delivered thee unto me: what hast thou done?

36 Jesus [a] answered, My [b] kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews: but now is my kingdom not from hence.

37 Pilate therefore said unto him, Art thou a king then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear [c] witness unto the truth. Every one [d] that is of the truth heareth my voice.

38 Pilate saith unto him, What is truth? And when he had said this, he went out again unto the Jews, and saith unto them, I find in him no fault at all.

39 But ye have a custom, that I should release unto you one at the passover: will ye therefore that I release unto you the King of the Jews?

40 Then cried they all again, saying, Not this man, but Barabbas. Now Barabbas was a robber.

1 Christ is scourged, crowned with thorns, and beaten. 4 Pilate is desirous to release him, but being overcome with the outrage of the Jews, he delivered him to be crucified. 23 They cast lots for his garments. 26 He commendeth his mother to John. 28 He dieth. 31 His side is pierced. 38 He is buried by Joseph and Nicodemus.

THEN [a] Pilate therefore took Jesus, and scourged [b] him.

2 And the soldiers platted a crown of thorns, and put it on his head, and they put on him a purple robe,

3 And said, Hail, King of the Jews! and they smote him with their hands.

4 ¶ Pilate therefore went forth again, and saith unto them, Behold, I bring him forth to you, that ye may know that [c] I find no fault in him.

5 Then came Jesus forth, wearing the crown of thorns, and the purple robe. And Pilate saith unto them, Behold the man!

danger of running uncalled into the way of temptation. Had Peter boldly come forward as a witness to justify his Master, he might probably have died for him, as he proposed; (chap. xiii. 37;) and he would have anticipated Stephen in the honour of being the first Christian martyr; but for this he disqualified himself by his rash attack on Malchus. Had he then staid without, and waited the issue of his Master's trial, he might have avoided the temptation to deny him, which he was not able to resist, and saved himself from many bitter tears.

Ver. 29—40. Jesus examined by Pilate, the Roman governor.—Here the first circumstance which strikes us is the hypocrisy of the priests and other members of the Sanhedrim, who, though (in a body, as it should seem) they led Jesus from Caiaphas to Pilate, dared not enter into the Roman hall of judgment, lest they should be defiled by mixing with the Gentiles. They were not alarmed at the guilt of shedding innocent blood, but they were afraid of entering the house of a Gentile, lest they should be polluted during all the feast. And even here, it is to be remarked, they were not afraid lest they should be incapacitated from offering sacrifices to God; but lest they should be prevented from eating that part of the sacrifices to which they were entitled, which was considerable. (See Numb. xxviii. 19—24.)

Pilate so accommodated himself to their wishes, that he came out to the door of the hall, probably, to hear what they had to say. At this, however, they seem to take offence; for they wish him to take it for granted, that the prisoner was guilty of a capital offence, or they would not have brought him; and therefore, had thought it not necessary (or at least prudent) to bring him any account of their proceedings. On this, Pilate tells them to take him back again, and judge him according to their own law, as he did not wish to interfere. They are now obliged to confess that they wanted not his judgment on the case, but merely that he would order the execution, which they were not allowed to do. Upon this, Pilate went back into the hall, and called Jesus to him, (under custody, doubtless, of their officers,) and began himself to question him.

It is evident that the only charge they had brought against him was, that he made himself "King of the Jews?" and upon this, therefore, he examines him—"Art thou the King of the Jews?" Jesus, wishing to draw from him the fact, that the Jews had reported this, in reply asked, "Sayest thou this thing of thyself, or did others tell it thee of me?"—Pilate rejoins, "Am I a Jew? Thine own nation (the Jews) and the chief priests have delivered thee unto me under that charge: confess what thou hast done to occasion it." Jesus now takes an opportunity to explain the nature of his kingdom, which he does in such a manner as disarms the jealousy of the Roman governor: "My kingdom is not of this world," &c., as if he had said, "I interfere not with your authority, neither am I an enemy to Cesar. I assume no worldly state nor riches: my throne is on high, and surrounded with celestial guards. Were I indeed about to institute a temporal kingdom, these would fight for me, and even Roman legions would in vain oppose celestial hosts. But mine is a kingdom of truth, and righteousness, and peace; and I came from heaven to proclaim this truth on earth, and to prepare the world for its establishment."

Pilate understood enough of this discourse to perceive that Jesus interfered not with his authority, nor with the prerogatives of his royal master. He asks, indeed, "What is truth?" but recollecting he had nothing to do with truth, instead of waiting for an answer, he goes back to the Jewish priests, who were waiting still without, and frankly tells them, "I find no fault in him; but as you have a custom that I should release to you a prisoner at the Passover, will you that I release unto you the King of the Jews, as you call him?" This, however, only made them more clamorous—"Not this man, but Barabbas"—a man convicted both of sedition and murder. To silence their importunity and violence, having heard that Jesus had chiefly preached and wrought his miracles in Galilee, he hopes to get rid of the business by sending him to Herod, whose curiosity Jesus refusing to gratify, he sends him back again to Pilate, without any judgment on the case. Pilate again calls together the chief priests and rulers, and tells them that neither he nor Herod had found him guilty of any capital offence; he proposes, therefore, to scourge him, and let him go.

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 1—15. Christ's last hearing before Pilate.—It appears by St. Luke, (chap. xxiii. 22,) that Pilate proposed to scourge Jesus, and let him go: it has been thought, therefore, that by this severity, and the cruel mockery which

Ver. 28. The hall of judgment.—Campbell, "The Pretorium."—Lest they should be defiled; but that, &c.—Doddridge, "Lest they should be polluted, and prevented from eating the Passover;" i. e. the sacrifices which followed the paschal supper, during the feast of unleavened bread.

Ver. 30. If he were not a malefactor, &c.—"These words import, 1. If the crime he is charged with were not capital, we should have punished him ourselves, and not have come to you. 2. If he were not guilty, we should not have accused him."—Lardner's Cred.

Ver. 31. It is no lawful for us to put any man to death—That is, a criminal we cannot punish according to his deserts. "It is not one of the lesser faults, for which we are wont to scourge men, or to cast out of the synagogue; but he is guilty of blasphemy, which by our law is punishable with death. And since we cannot be permitted to punish any man capitally, we have brought him to your tribunal, where alone we can have satisfaction."—Lardner's Cred.

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 2. A crown of thorns.—[These words, some would render an acanthine crown, or wreath formed out of the branches of the herb bear's foot, a prickly plant, though not like thorns; but this version is solidly refuted by Campbell. The Gr. word akanthinos, in sacred use and classical, plainly denotes thorny, and never made of bear's foot: and it was so understood by all the ancient and modern translators, and by the Greek and Latin Fathers. "The Nabk or Nabkes of the Arabians," says Hasselquist, "is, in all probability, the tree which afforded the crown of thorns put on the head of Christ: it grows very common in the East. This plant was very fit for the purpose, for it has many sharp spines, which are well adapted to give pain; the crown might be easily made of these soft, round, and pliant branches: and what, in my opinion, seems to be the greatest proof is, that the leaves much resemble those of the ivy, as they are of a very deep green."]—Bagster.—A purple robe.—See note on Mat. xxvii. 28. cers saw him, they cried out, saying, Crucify him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Take ye him, and crucify him: for I find no fault in him.

7 The Jews answered him, We [d] have a law, and by our law he ought to die, because [e] he made himself the Son of God. [f]

8 ¶ When Pilate therefore heard that saying, he was the more afraid;

9 And went again into the judgment hall, and saith unto Jesus, Whence art thou? But [f] Jesus gave him no answer.

10 Then saith Pilate unto him, Speakest thou not unto me? knowest [g] thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee?

11 Jesus answered, Thou [h] couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from [i] above: therefore he [j] that delivered me unto thee hath the greater [k] sin.

12 And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release him: but the Jews cried out, saying, If thou let this man go, thou art not Cesar's friend: whosoever [l] maketh himself a king speaketh against Cesar.

13 When [m] Pilate therefore heard that saying, he brought Jesus forth, and sat down in the judgment seat in a place that is called the Pavement, but in the Hebrew, Gabbatha.

14 And [n] it was the preparation of the passover, and about the sixth hour: and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your King!

15 But they cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, Shall I crucify your King? The chief priests answered, We [o] have no king but Cesar.

16 Then [p] delivered he him therefore unto them to be crucified. And they took Jesus, and led him away.

17 ¶ And he bearing his cross [q] went forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew Golgotha:

18 Where they crucified him, and two other with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst.

19 ¶ And [r] Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the cross. And the writing was, JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS.

20 This title then read many of the Jews: for the place where Jesus was crucified was nigh to the city: and it was written in Hebrew, and Greek, and Latin.

followed, that he might hope to impress the Jews with some feelings of humanity, and therefore did he bring forth an object as pitiable as misery, without guilt, could render him—and pointing to him in the robes of mock royalty, covered with blood—he cries, "Behold the man!"—Vain hope! as well might he impress compassion on the marble pavement on which he stood. All they had to say was comprised in two words,—"Crucify him! Crucify him!"

The chief priests aimed, in the first instance, to prejudice the governor against the prisoner, by pretending that he was an enemy to Cesar, for every man that made himself a king, they said, was so. (Verse 12.) But when they saw this had no effect, they said, "We have a law, and by that law he ought to die, because he made (that is, represented) himself to be the Son of God." It is doubtful whether Pilate understood what they meant by this title. Many of the heathen emperors represented themselves as of immortal origin, and it is possible he might think Jesus aimed at such an honour; or, if he understood the term as equivalent to Messiah, he might be aware that all pretenders to that character had hitherto mixed with it more or less of political ambition—"he was (therefore) the more afraid," and thus addressed our Saviour, "Whence art thou?" From our Lord's giving no answer to this question, we conclude that it was improper, though we do not perceive the reason.

When, however, Pilate adds, "Knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee?" Jesus replies immediately, to correct his error; "Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above"—that is, from heaven—"therefore," subjoins our Lord, "he [Caiaphas] that delivered me unto thee hath the greater sin." In this reply our Lord gives the heathen governor a lesson on the doctrine of Providence; that all power is from God alone, who says to governors and kings, as he does to the waves of the sea, "Hitherto shall ye come, but no farther." (Job xxxviii. 11.) Knowing, therefore, what was determined concerning him, and the great object to be accomplished by his sufferings, namely, the salvation of his church and people, he was willing to endure, (as he had undertaken,) whatever might be necessary to accomplish that object, and to satisfy the demands of eternal justice. As to the governor's conduct in this affair, he gives him to understand that, though nothing could justify him in condemning the innocent, the wicked High Priest, and his Jewish confederates, had certainly the greater sin to answer for.

This reply not only softened Pilate's resentment, but led him to make one more effort to save him from crucifixion; but it was a weak one, and shows that he was worried out by the priests, and had not the courage to follow the dictates of his conscience at the expense of his secular interest. We might have pitied this man's weakness more, had we not known that this was not the only instance in which he violated justice. In fact, though he was thus obsequious to the Jews in this instance, they procured from Rome his recal and banishment, for many acts of cruelty and oppression, but a very few years after this; and such was his mortification, that he soon after committed sucide.

We have now closed the trial of our Saviour, and shall conclude this section with two or three brief remarks upon it.

In examining the trial of any person of celebrity, we naturally look to the character of the judges and the witnesses. In this case, the great majority of the members of the Sanhedrim had shown themselves decidedly prejudiced against the prisoner, and they had held repeated meetings to concert his death; and the judge himself (Caiaphas) had openly avowed the necessity of it, as a measure of political expediency. They had even bribed one of his disciples to betray him, and had effectually intimidated any others from speaking in his behalf; while, at the same time, they had suborned false witnesses respecting words uttered three years before, whose evidence they could not reconcile, (Mark xiv. 57—59,) or, if reconciled, it did not amount to any capital charge against him; so that the Roman governor, with the utmost disposition to oblige them, was fully satisfied of his innocence, and would have gladly dismissed the prisoner, but that they threatened to accuse him as an enemy to Cesar. Jesus was not only acquitted by his judge, and justified by the false disciple who betrayed him; but his subsequent resurrection and the triumphs of his gospel put the question out of doubt. Many of those who crucified him repented of their crime, and afterwards became his faithful disciples; and we look with anxious hope for the promised day when the great body of the Jewish nation shall do the same.

Ver. 16—30. The crucifixion and death of Christ.—No sooner had Pilate given the fatal word of consent, than the Ver. 6. Take ye him.—[Pilate neither did nor could say this seriously; for crucifixion was not a Jewish but a Roman mode of punishment. The cross was made of two beams, either crossing at the top, at right angles, like a T, or in the middle of their length, like an X: with a piece on the centre of the transverse beam for the accusation, and another piece projecting from the middle, on which the person sat. The cross on which our Lord suffered was of the former kind, being thus represented in all old monuments, coins, and crosses. The body was usually fastened to the upright beam by nailing the feet to it, and on the transverse piece by nailing the hands; and the person was frequently permitted to hang in this situation, till he perished through agony and lack of food. This horrible punishment was usually inflicted only on slaves for the worst of crimes.]—Bagster.

Ver. 8. He was the more afraid.—Lardner, on this text, quotes Beza, as saying, "He was not without reason afraid, that an open sedition might happen, if he did not comply with the multitude."

Ver. 13. The Pavement.—A curious tesselated pavement, such as are often found among Roman antiquities, formed of small stones, in various forms, on which possibly the seat of judgment might be erected, as the Hebrew name Gabbatha implies elevation.

Ver. 14. The preparation of the passover.—Campbell, "Of the Paschal Sabbath." He says it occurs six times in the New Testament, and always means the day before the Sabbath, (Friday.) So Dr. Jennings.—And about the sixth hour.—We cannot but suspect with Doddridge, and for the reasons which he gives, that a slight error has here crept into the text, and that we should here read with Mark xv. 25, "the third hour," which has the sanction of some good MSS.; otherwise we must suppose the Evangelists used different ways of reckoning, which is very possible.

Ver. 17. Bearing his cross.—Whether the cross was put together, or in two separate pieces, it appears to us, (on mature reflection,) that they compelled Jesus to drag it to the gate of the city nearest Calvary; at which gate they met Simon of Cyrene, and finding Jesus unable to proceed with it, they compelled this countryman to carry it the rest of the way to Calvary. Compare note on Mat. xxvii. 32.—Golgotha.—[Golgotha, of which the Greek Kranion, and Calvaria, are merely translations, is supposed to have been a hill, or a rising on a greater hill, on the north-west of Jerusalem.]—Bagster.

Ver. 19. Wrote a title and put it on the cross.—"This was the usual custom of the Romans, when any were condemned to death, to affix to the instrument of their punishment, or to order to be carried before them, a writing expressing the crime for which they suffered: and this writing was called in Latin, Title.—Lardner's Cred. [The apparent discrepancy between the accounts of this title given by the Evangelists, which has been urged as an objection against their inspiration and veracity, has been most satisfactorily accounted for by Dr. Townson; who supposes, that, as it was written in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, it might have slightly varied in each language; and that, as St. Luke and St. John wrote for the Gentiles, they would prefer the Greek inscription; that St. Matthew, addressing the Jews, would use the Hebrew; and that St. Mark, writing to the Romans, would naturally give the Latin.]—Bagster.

21 Then said the chief priests of the Jews to Pilate, Write not, The King of the Jews; but that he said, I am King of the Jews.

22 Pilate answered, What I have written I have written.

23 ¶ Then the soldiers, when they had crucified Jesus, took his garments, and made four parts, to every soldier a part; and also his coat: now the coat was without seam, [a] woven [t] from the top throughout.

24 They said therefore among themselves, Let us not rend it, but cast lots for it, whose it shall be: that the scripture might be fulfilled, which [u] saith, They parted my raiment among them, and for my vesture they did cast lots. These things therefore the soldiers did.

25 ¶ Now there stood by the cross of Jesus his mother, and his mother's sister, Mary the wife of [v] [w] Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene.

26 When Jesus therefore saw his mother, and the disciple standing by, [x] whom he loved, he saith unto his mother, [y] Woman, behold thy son!

27 Then saith he to the disciple, Behold thy [z] mother! And from that hour that disciple took her unto his own [a] home.

28 ¶ After this, Jesus knowing that all things were now accomplished, that the scripture [b] might be fulfilled, saith, I thirst.

29 Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar: and they filled a sponge with vinegar, and put it upon hyssop, and put it to his mouth.

30 When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar, he said, It [c] is finished: and he bowed his head, and gave [d] up the ghost.

31 ¶ The Jews therefore, because it was the [e] preparation, that the bodies should not remain [f] upon the cross on the sabbath day, (for [g] that sabbath day was a high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away.

32 Then came the soldiers, and brake the legs of the first, and of the other which was crucified with him.

33 But when they came to Jesus, and saw that he was dead already, they brake not his legs:

34 But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came thereout [h] blood and [i] water.

35 And [j] he that saw it bare record, and his record is true: and he knoweth that he saith true, that ye might believe.

36 For these things were done, that the scripture [k] should be fulfilled, A bone of him shall not be broken.

37 And again another scripture [l] saith, They shall look on him whom they have pierced.

38 ¶ And after this Joseph of Arimathea, being a disciple of Jesus, but secretly for [m] fear of the Jews, besought Pilate that he might take away the body of Jesus: and Pilate gave him leave. He came therefore, and took the body of Jesus.

39 And there came also [n] Nicodemus, which at the first came to Jesus by night, and [o] brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about a hundred pound weight.

Priests were ready (notwithstanding it was Passover time) to hurry our Saviour to the dreadful death of crucifixion, which he had himself repeatedly predicted, and which was brought about by a remarkable train of providences. This was not a Jewish punishment, and would hardly have been adopted, had they not been under restraint, as to the power of life and death, which made it necessary to obtain his consent; but for the necessity of which, it is not likely that Pilate would have interfered. This, however, obliged the Jews themselves to confess that the sceptre was indeed departed from Judah, and that Shiloh was now come. (See Gen. xlix. 10.) Another remarkable circumstance is, the title which Pilate put upon the cross, proclaiming him King of the Jews, whom they now crucified. This, indeed, sorely displeased the Jews, who would fain have had it altered: but Pilate, who had sacrificed, as himself owned, an innocent man to please them, would not, from the same motive, alter a line or a letter of what he had himself written; and though the different inscriptions seem in some respects to have varied, they all agreed in this obnoxious sentence, "The King of the Jews," and proclaimed in the three chief tongues of the then known world, that the Jews had crucified their king, for whom they had so long wished and prayed. In this event several remarkable prophecies were fulfilled, as we shall presently observe; in the meantime we must notice the affectionate language which Jesus uses towards his mother and his beloved Apostle John. Though, upon his apprehension, his disciples generally were each scattered to his own home, an exception must be made for Peter and John: the former, indeed, had better have fled with the rest, than have stopped to deny his Master; but the latter, who was the youngest of them, kept hovering about him during the trial, and, when that was over, secured a station as near as he could to the foot of the cross, with our Lord's mother and other pious women, whom neither danger nor disgrace could separate from him. Jesus, in the midst of his acute sufferings, could not contemplate with indifference the forlorn situation of his mother, now a widow, as is generally believed, and a sword having pierced through her own bowels, as had been predicted. (See Luke ii. 35.)

While, therefore, he calls her attention to his own sufferings, he calls also the attention of the young apostle to his mother; and he so well understood the Saviour's hint, that from that hour he took her to his own home: it is also believed, on the authority of an early tradition, that she lived and died with him. Jesus now recollecting that there was one prophecy respecting him yet unfulfilled said, "I thirst;" and the soldiers themselves fulfilled the prediction of the patriarch David, by giving him vinegar to drink. He now said, "It is finished:" and bowing down his head, "gave up the ghost."

Thus closes the awful history of our Saviour's sufferings, in which grief rapidly follows grief, like as wave follows wave in the agitated ocean. Well, indeed, might the Saviour cry, "O my God, my soul is cast down within me. . . . . All thy waves and billows are gone over me." (Ps. xlii. 7.) Let us hastily recount his successive scenes of misery. He celebrated the Passover on the Thursday evening at Jerusalem—at midnight was arrested in the garden, and carried before the High Priest, and then the Sanhedrim—about six in the morning of Friday taken before Pilate, who, after several vain attempts to pacify the Jews, surrendered him to their fury—nailed to the cross at nine—at noon came on the miraculous darkness, which continued till three, when he expired; and the same evening about sunset was entombed. Addison describes the closing scene in the following few, but, striking lines:—"See where they have nailed the Lord and giver of life! How his wounds blacken, his body writhes, and his heart heaves with pity and with agony! O, Almighty sufferer, look down, look down from thy trumphant infamy! Lo, he inclines his head to his sacred bosom!—Hark, he groans!—See, he expires!—The earth trembles; the temple rends; the rocks burst; the dead arise—which are the quick?—which are the dead?—Sure Nature, all Nature, is departing with her Creator."

Ver. 31—42. Circumstances which followed the death of Christ, including his entombment.—We confine our remarks here to the circumstances related by St. John: for those related by the other Evangelists, see our remarks on Matt. xxvii. and Luke xxiii. It was not only by a special Providence, for the fulfilment of prophecy, that the legs of Jesus were preserved unbroken, and his side pierced, but there seems also a mystical design, as our Evangelist afterwards explains it in his first epistle, (ch. v. 6;) "This is he that came by water

Ver. 23. Without seam.—Josephus represents the tunic of Aaron as wove in this manner; nor is this unusual. See Orient. Lit. No. 1376.

But some think the herb itself was mixed with the vinegar upon the sponge, before being raised by a reed. Harris's Nat. Hist.

Ver. 30. It is finished.—These do not appear to have been absolutely the last words of our Saviour, for the three other Evangelists state, "That he cried again with a loud voice, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit," and then gave up the ghost.

Ver. 34. Blood and water.—Blood from the heart itself, and water from the pericardium, or bag which contains the heart. [It appears from this, that the spear went through the pericardium, and pierced the heart; and that the water, or aqueous humour, proceeded from the former, and the blood from the latter. It affords the most decisive evidence that Jesus died for our sins; and thus the conduct of the soldiers was overruled to take away all pretences to the contrary, by which his enemies might have attempted to invalidate the reality of his resurrection; and to accomplish two most important prophecies.]—Bagster.

40 Then took they the body of Jesus, and wound [p] it in linen clothes with the spices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury.

41 Now in the place where he was crucified there was a garden; and in the garden a new sepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid.

42 There [q] laid they Jesus therefore because [r] of the Jews' preparation day; for the sepulchre was nigh at hand.

CHAPTER XX.

1 Mary cometh to the sepulchre: 3 so do Peter and John, ignorant of the resurrection. 11 Jesus appeareth to Mary Magdalene, 19 and to his disciples. 24 The incredulity and confession of Thomas. 30 The scripture is sufficient to salvation.

THE [a] first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre, and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulchre.

2 Then she runneth, and cometh to Simon Peter, and to the other disciple, whom [b] Jesus loved, and saith unto them, They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him.

3 Peter [c] therefore went forth, and that other disciple, and came to the sepulchre.

4 So they ran both together: and the other disciple did outrun [d] Peter, and came first to the sepulchre.

5 And he stooping down, and looking in, saw the linen clothes [e] lying; yet went he not in.

6 Then cometh Simon Peter following him, and went into the sepulchre, and seeth the linen clothes lie,

7 And the [f] napkin, that was about his head, not lying with the linen clothes, but wrapped together in a place by itself.

8 Then went in also that other disciple, which came first to the sepulchre, and he saw, and believed.

9 For as yet they knew not the [g] scripture, that he must rise again from the dead.

10 Then the disciples went away again unto their own home.

11 ¶ But Mary stood without at the sepulchre weeping: and as she wept, she stooped down, and looked [h] into the sepulchre,

12 And seeth two angels in white sitting, the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Jesus had lain.

13 And they say unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? She saith unto them, Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him.

14 And when she had thus said, she turned herself back, and [i] saw Jesus standing, and knew not [j] that it was Jesus.

15 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? whom seekest thou? She, supposing him to be the gardener, saith unto him, Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and [k] I will take him away.

16 Jesus saith unto her, Mary. [l] She turned [m] herself, and saith unto him, Rabboni; which is to say, Master.

17 Jesus saith unto her, Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my [n] brethren, and say unto them, I [o] ascend unto my Father, and [p] your Father; and to my [q] God, and your [r] God.

18 Mary Magdalene [s] came and told the disciples that she had seen the Lord, and that he had spoken these things unto her.

and blood;" on which we shall only at present remark, that we conceive the fact had a figurative allusion to those two great doctrines of the Christian system—atonement by the blood of Christ, and the washing of regeneration and the renewal of our nature by the influences of the Holy Spirit. So Dr. Watts explains it:—

> "Our Saviour's pierced side
> Pour'd out a double flood.
> By water we are purified,
> And pardon'd by the blood."

We have already hinted at the many prophetic allusions accomplished in this great event. "To him give all the prophets witness," (Acts x. 43;) and none more copiously than the patriarch David, who by the prophetic spirit clearly anticipated this day of sorrows, when he cried, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" and when he speaks of himself as exposed to public scorn and ridicule—"I am a worm and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people. All they that see me laugh me to scorn: they shoot out the lip, they shake the head; saying, 'He trusted on the Lord that he would deliver him: let him deliver him, seeing he delighteth in him'.... For dogs have compassed me: the assembly of the wicked have enclosed me: they pierced my hands and my feet. They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture." (Ps. xxii. 1, 6, 7, 16—18.) "They gave me gall for my meat; and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink."

But the most important words of Jesus in this part of the narrative, and nearly the last which he uttered, were, "It is finished"—meaning, not only that his prophetic and mediatorial work, but the whole series of types and prophecies respecting him, was accomplished.

"In this hour the long series of prophecies, visions, types, and figures, was accomplished; this was the centre in which they all met; this the point towards which they had tended and verged throughout the course of so many generations. You behold the law and the prophets standing, if we may speak so, at the foot of the cross, and doing homage. You behold Moses and Aaron bearing the ark of the covenant; David and Elijah presenting the oracle of testimony. You behold all the priests and sacrifices, all the rites and ordinances, all the types and symbols, assembled together to receive their consummation. Without the death of Christ, the worship and ceremonies of the law would have remained a pompous, but unmeaning institution. In the hour when he was crucified, 'the book with the seven seals' was opened. Every rite assumed its significancy, every prediction met its event, every symbol displayed its correspondence." (Blair's Sermons, vol. i. Ser. 5.)

CHAP. XX. Ver. 1—18. Jesus appears to Mary Magdalene at the sepulchre.—Besides Mary Magdalene, Matthew mentions another Mary, (meaning, most probably, Mary the wife of Cleopas, who stood with her at the foot of the cross, chap. xix. 25,) and Mark mentions other women; so that it appears there were at least three: but John's narrative concerns one only, though at the same time her language implies that there was at least another; for she says, verse 2, "We know not," &c. Notwithstanding all that Jesus had intimated about rising from the dead, it does not appear that any one of his disciples, male or female, anticipated such an event; and how they interpreted his language on such occasions, is to us incomprehensible. It should seem as if Providence had cast, as it were, a mist over the eyes of their minds, that they might fall under no suspicion of acting a part to deceive others. Had they but suspected that he were risen, they would not have carried spices to embalm him, nor would they have been under any anxiety about rolling away the stone; much less would they have been alarmed when they found the stone removed, lest the body should have been stolen. Nor does even Mary Magdalene, with all her sanguine attachment to him, seem to have entertained an idea of his resurrection, till Jesus spoke to her; and then, though she did not recollect his person, (perhaps not being dressed as usual,) she in a moment recognised his voice, the well known sound of which vibrated with rapture on her ear, and perhaps she was eager to embrace him; but he desires her not to stop at present, for he was not yet ascended, nor about immediately to leave them. CHAP. XX. Ver. 1. Cometh Mary Magdalene.—[Mary Magdalene, as well as Peter, was evidently at the sepulchre twice on the morning of the resurrection. The first time of her going was some short time before her companions, the other Mary and Salome, (Mat. xxviii. 1;) and observing that the stone had been removed, she returned to inform Peter and John. In the mean time, the other Mary and Salome came to the sepulchre, and saw the angel, as recorded by Matthew and Mark. While these women returned to the city, Peter and John went to the sepulchre, passing them at some distance, or going another way, followed by Mary Magdalene, who staid after their return. This was her second journey, when she saw two angels, and then Jesus himself, as here related; and immediately after, Jesus appeared to the other women, as they returned to the city. (Mat. xxviii. 9, 10.) In the meantime, Joanna and her company arrived at the sepulchre, when two angels appeared to them, and addressed them as the one angel had done the other women. (Lu. xxiv. 1—10.) They immediately returned to the city, and by some means found the apostles before the others arrived, and informed them of what they had seen: upon which, Peter went a second time to the sepulchre, but saw only the linen clothes lying. Ver. 8. Saw, and believed.—Were convinced that he must indeed be risen from the dead.

Ver. 10. Unto their own home.—Doddridge and Campbell, "To their companions."

Ver. 17. Touch me not.—Sherlock, "Hang not about me." Doddridge, "Embrace me not." Campbell says, "The verb (haptesthai) in the use of the LXX., denotes not only to touch, but to cleave to, as in Job xxxi. 7. Ezek. xli. 6, and other places." The sense here plainly is, "Do not detain me at present.... Lose not a moment in carrying the joyful tidings of my resurrection to my disciples."

19 ¶ Then [t] the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

20 And when he had so said, he showed unto them his hands and his side. Then [u] were the disciples glad, when they saw the Lord.

21 Then said Jesus to them again, Peace [v] be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so [w] send I you.

22 And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive [x] ye the Holy Ghost:

23 Whose soever [y] sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained.

24 ¶ But [z] Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came.

25 The other disciples therefore said unto him, We have seen the Lord. But he [a] said unto them, Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe.

26 ¶ And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace [b] be unto you.

27 Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy [c] hand, and thrust it into my side: and be [d] not faithless, but believing.

28 And Thomas answered and said unto him, My [e] Lord and my God.

29 Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed [f] are they that have not seen, and yet have believed.

30 ¶ And [g] many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book:

31 But [h] these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and [i] that believing ye might have life through his name.

ever, he should "ascend to his Father and their Father—to his and their God." The text does not say that she did not touch him; her laying hold of him might be the reason of his desiring her not to hold him at the present.

Ver. 19—31. Jesus again appears to his disciples, and afterwards to Thomas, and shows them his hands and his feet.—It is worthy of observation, that while our Lord Jesus shows the utmost anxiety to satisfy his own disciples of the reality of his resurrection, by repeated appearances and conversations, accompanied by circumstances decidedly miraculous, as in the present instance, he does not in any one instance appear to his enemies, the priests and unbelieving Jews. This has been objected to by infidel writers as a suspicious circumstance: it should be considered, however, that he had in his lifetime, and even at his death, wrought a great number of miracles, the which, when they could not deny their reality, they perversely attributed to demons, though at the same time they were of the most benevolent character: and, after all this, not only refused to credit them, but persecuted him to death on account of them. What claim could these men have to more miracles?

In the next place, it should be considered that this is in harmony with the conduct of God, as respects the principles of what is called natural religion. On the doctrine of a future state, for instance, though reason furnishes a variety of arguments sufficient to convince men who are not unwilling to believe it, yet is the evidence not of that overwhelming nature as to preclude the possibility of doubt, or to counterbalance the influence of the corrupt passions of mankind. As it is hard in secular things to convince a man against his will, so is it difficult to convince a libertine that he will be called to account before the bar of God, when his hopes, his wishes, his passions, all say—No! Those who would not be convinced, were justly left to perish in their sins.

But let us consider the incidents here related. The evening of the same day on which our Lord had appeared early in the morning to Mary Magdalene and others, he appeared to the body of his disciples, who were assembled with closed doors, on account of the Jews. A report had been raised that these disciples had stolen the body of their Master, and it was natural to expect that the Jews would prosecute them with the same virulence as they had done him. The doors being fastened, however, seems mentioned for the purpose of showing that our Saviour's entrance among them was miraculous; and the exhibition of his wounds was evidently designed to demonstrate the identity of his person. The Salaam he pronounced, "Peace be unto you!" was in perfect harmony with his farewell discourse, (chap. xiv. 27,) in which he promises them peace and happiness. At first, however, Luke informs us (ch. xxiv. 37) they were much alarmed, under the idea that it was his ghost, till he allowed them to handle his limbs and inspect his wounds. "A spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have;" and, for their farther conviction, he did eat before them, (Luke xxiv. 42, 43;) for it must be recollected that, though our Lord was raised from the dead as Lazarus and others had been his body, probably, did not undergo its final change, so as to become spiritual and glorified, till the time of his ascension into glory. Then, as St. Paul says of those who shall be found alive at the sounding of the last trumpet, "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," that mysterious change might be induced.

On the same occasion our Lord breathed upon them, as indicative of the gift of the Holy Spirit, which, not many days after this, they were to receive, and whereby they were qualified to "discern spirits," or to read the hearts of men, and to announce their pardon, or otherwise, as the case might be. Farther than as every minister of God's word is authorized to denounce his judgments against all sin, and promise pardon to all penitent believers. This clearly refers to miraculous powers, and is confined to apostolic times.

But to return to our history.—Thomas not being present on the above occasion, was so incredulous as to protest against the truth of what was stated to him by the other apostles; but Jesus, knowing his objection did not arise from infidelity of heart, but from a fear that the news was (as we sometimes say) too good to be true, was pleased to appear to them again on that day week, when Thomas himself was present; and so far was he from persevering in his objection, that he no sooner saw the Lord than he both confessed and adored him—Thomas answered, "My Lord, and my God!"

These words have indeed been variously explained, and to avoid the evidence resulting from them in favour of our Lord's divinity, some have supposed this to be the language merely of surprise and astonishment; a vain, and, indeed, a profane exclamation! But the text says, "Thomas answered and said unto him," that is, unto Christ himself—"My Lord, and my God!" and our Lord himself plainly so understood it, for he replies, "Thomas, because thou hast seen me thou hast believed." So the learned Reformer, Beza: "From the pronoun to him, it appears that the words which follow are not merely the expression of the Apostle's admiration, as the Nestorians used to evade this passage; but the words represent him addressing Jesus himself as the true God and his Lord: . . . . and there is not a more express instance in the Gospels, of the invocation of Christ as the true God." (See Dr. Smith's Messiah.)

It is not necessary to suppose that Thomas's incredulity so far prevailed as to induce him to feel the Saviour's wounds, but rather the contrary; for Jesus adds, "Because thou hast seen me thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed"—that is, as Doddridge judiciously explains it, who "have believed on the credible testimony of others; for they have shown a greater degree of candour and humility, which renders the faith it produces so much the more acceptable."

The chapter closes with stating that Jesus did many more things than are stated in this Gospel, (or indeed in all the Evangelists,) and the end of all is—not to gratify curiosity, or furnish an amusement, as is the case of most other writings; but that we "may believe that Jesus is the Christ, and that believing we may have life through his name;" for "the end" of all true "faith is the salvation of our souls."

Ver. 19. Same day at evening.—This verse, compared with ver. 1, may help to settle the question as to the time when the Christian Sabbath commences. 'Mary went early the first day"—this verse says, evening of the same day: this was the evening of the Christian Sabbath.

Ver. 23. Whose soever sins ye remit.—The ministerial sentence of absolution, except where it relates to ecclesiastical censures, is merely a declaration of what God has done.

Ver. 26. And after eight days—i. e. on the eighth day, or the first of the following week. So "after three days," Mat. xxvii. 63; Mark viii. 31, means evidently on the third day.

Ver. 28. My Lord and my God.—[The disbelief of the apostles is the means of furnishing us with a full and satisfactory demonstration of the resurrection of our Lord. Throughout the divine dispensations, every doctrine and every important truth is gradually revealed; and here we have a conspicuous instance of this progressive system. An angel first declares the glorious event. The empty sepulchre confirms the women's report. Christ's appearance to Mary Magdalene showed that he was alive; that to the disciples at Emmaus proved that it was at least the spirit of Christ; that to the eleven showed the reality of his body; and the conviction given to St. Thomas, proved it the self-same body that had been crucified. Incredulity itself is satisfied; and the convinced apostle exclaims, in the joy of his heart, "My Lord and my God!"]—Bagster

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Christ appearing again to his disciples, was known of them by the great draught of fishes. 12 He dineth with them. 15 earnestly commendeth Peter to feed his lambs and sheep. 18 foretelleth him of his death. 22 rebuketh his curiosity touching John. 25 The conclusion.

A. M. 4033. A. D. 29.

AFTER these things Jesus showed himself again to the disciples at the sea of Tiberias; and on this wise showed he himself.

2 There were together Simon Peter, and Thomas called Didymus, and [a] Nathanael of Cana in Galilee, and the sons [b] of Zebedee, and two other of his disciples.

3 Simon Peter saith unto them, I go a fishing. They say unto him, We also go with thee. They went forth, and entered into a ship immediately; and that night they caught nothing.

4 But when the morning was now come, Jesus stood on the shore: but the disciples knew [c] not that it was Jesus.

5 Then [d] Jesus saith unto them, [e] Children, have ye any meat? They answered him, No.

6 And he said unto them, Cast [f] the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find. They cast therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes.

7 Therefore that disciple whom Jesus loved saith unto Peter, It is the Lord. Now when Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he girt his fisher's coat unto him, (for he was naked,) and did cast himself into the sea.

8 And the other disciples came in a little ship; (for they were not far from land, but as it were two hundred cubits,) dragging the net with fishes.

9 As soon then as they were come to land, they saw a fire of coals there, and fish laid thereon, and bread.

10 Jesus saith unto them, Bring of the fish which ye have now caught.

11 Simon Peter went up, and drew the net to land full of great fishes, a hundred and fifty and three: and for all there were so many, yet was not the net broken.

12 ¶ Jesus saith unto them, Come and dine. And none of the disciples durst ask him, Who art thou? knowing that it was the Lord.

13 Jesus [g] then cometh, and taketh bread, and giveth them, and fish likewise.

14 This [h] is now the third time that Jesus showed himself to his disciples, after that he was risen from the dead.

15 ¶ So when they had dined, Jesus saith to Simon Peter, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more [i] than these? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed [j] my lambs.

16 He saith to him again the second time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my [k] sheep.

17 He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved [l] because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said unto him, Lord, thou [m] knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep.

18 Verily, verily, I say unto thee, [n] When thou wast young, thou girdedst thyself, and walkedst whither thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall [o] gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not.

19 This spake he, signifying [p] by what death

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1—14. Jesus appears again to his disciples at the sea of Tiberias.—This sea was no other than the lake of Gennesareth, so often mentioned in the Gospels. It is evident from this narrative, that the greater part of the disciples had returned to their former occupation, that of fishing, and perhaps were compelled to do so for their support. Their dreams of temporal honour were now vanished, and it does not appear that they yet understood any thing of their future destination or employment. It was a night scene, (or rather very early in the morning,) like that in which Jesus once before appeared to them, walking on the water—now they saw him standing on the shore. The moon beams silvered over the waves, and they were probably lamenting, as they had once done before, that after toiling all night they had caught nothing. A voice from the shore now directed them to cast the net on the right side of the ship, when, lo! they were not able to draw it ashore, from the multitude of fishes which it enclosed. The similarity of these circumstances to those of the former miracle, to which we have above alluded, probably led the beloved disciple, John, to conclude that it was the same voice that had before given them the like success, and he intimated this to Peter, who, with his usual impetuosity, threw an upper garment over him, and, jumping into the water, waded eagerly through it somewhat more than the distance of a hundred yards, while the other disciples in the boat dragged the full net with them to the shore. Upon the land they found a fire with fish laid to broil thereon, and bread with it. They were now directed to bring some of the fresh caught fish, when Peter ran hastily to fetch them from the boat, and though the net was so heavily laden it did not break; another circumstance that must call to mind the former miracle, and confirm the opinion they had formed. This opinion must arrive to certainty when Jesus, in his usual manner, distributed to them food, and ate with them—the great pledge of friendship among the eastern nations. This was as much as to say—You may now rely upon me for the pardon of all your offences, and the continuance of my favour.

Ver. 15—25. Our Lord puts the attachment of Peter to the test, and reproves his curiosity. The conclusion.—Dinner being over, our Lord thus addresses Peter: "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these?" Than these what? The expression has been generally understood as referring to the other disciples; "Simon, lovest thou me more than Thomas, and Nathanael, and the sons of Zebedee?" If so, "feed my sheep." But it may bear another interpretation:—"Lovest thou me more than thy means of livelihood? Canst thou again forsake thy boats and nets, and, abandoning those means of support, devote thyself to feed my scattered sheep?" And Peter's reply may be thus understood: "Lord, notwithstanding my cowardice and ingratitude, in forsaking and denying thee, thou knowest that I love thee." The repetition of this question seems designed to give him time to reflect on his former conduct. Thrice had he denied his Master, thrice therefore is he put upon considering: as if his Lord had said—"Simon, be not hasty in thy reply—consider what it may cost thee to be my disciple." Peter was now wounded to the quick, and replied, with all his energies, "Lord, thou knowest all things—thou knewest that I should deny thee; and now thou knowest, notwithstanding all my cowardice—thou knowest that I love thee."—"Jesus saith unto him, (again,) Feed my sheep."

Our Lord then adds this alarming prediction: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, When thou wast young, thou girdedst thyself and walkedst whither thou wouldest: but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldest not. This spake Jesus Christ testifying by what death Peter should glorify God." Ecclesiastical History informs us that this was fulfilled in Peter's crucifixion, about A.D. 68; and that, by his own request, he was executed with his head downward, con-

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1. After these things.—Grotius and Le Clerc have a strange notion, that this chapter was written by some elders of the Church of Ephesus, from a verbal relation they had received from the apostle. But Dr. Mill has refuted this notion, which seems sufficiently contradicted by verse 24 of the text itself.—After these things, does not mean immediately, but some days after.

Ver. 5. Children.—Doddridge and Campbell, "My lads."—Have ye any meat?—Campbell, "victuals." Doddridge, "any thing to eat?" i. e. have ye caught any fish?

Ver. 7. His fisher's coat.—Doddridge, "his coat." Campbell, "upper garment;" we might say more characteristically, "his jacket."—He was naked—[That is, he was only in his vest, or under garment; for gumnos, naked like the Hebrew, arom, is frequently applied to one who has merely laid aside his outer garment. To which may be added what we read in the LXX. Job xxii. 6: "Thou hast taken away the covering of the naked," the plaid or blanket, in which they wrapped themselves, and besides which they had no other. In this sense Virgil says, Nudus ara, sere nudus, "plough naked, and sow naked." i. e. strip off your upper garments.]—Bagster.

Ver. 9. And fish laid thereon.—"It was common to dress fish on the sea shore."—Harmer.

Ver. 12. Come and dine.—Bishop Pearce prefers, "Come (and) breakfast," because it was early in the morning. Doddridge, "Come, refresh yourselves." Wesley, "Come, eat." The ancients had usually but two meals, dinner and supper; the word here used strictly means the former, whether taken sooner or later. Times change; "Our ancestors," says Campbell, "dined at eleven, and supped at five."

Ver. 14. The third time.—Grotius understands this of the third day of our Lord's appearing; Doddridge, of the third time of his appearing to such a number of disciples.

Ver. 18 Stretch forth thy hands.—It was customary in the ancient combats sidering himself unworthy to suffer in the same manner as his Lord. (Cave's Lives of the Apostles, and Milner's Church Hist.)

Peter being ordered to follow Jesus, turned round and saw John also following with him, and had the boldness to ask, "Lord, and what shall this man (do)?" or, as Dr. Campbell translates it, "Lord, what shall become of this man?" which certainly better suits the answer, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me." We need not wonder, however, if this saying be now misunderstood, since it was so at the time by those who heard it; for "then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die;" yet Jesus said not so. By tarrying till Christ should come, is generally understood, till the destruction of Jerusalem. This is sometimes called Christ's coming, which the apostle John is believed to have survived many years.

The last verse—the world itself "could not contain the books that should be written," to record every minute circumstance of the Saviour's life, is generally considered as a strong hyperbole, and expressions of the like kind may be found in Nu. xiii. 33. Ju. vii. 12. 1 Ki. x. 27. Matt. xix. 24. Jn. xii. 19, &c. The words are, however, capable of a more literal interpretation, and are thus explained by Dr. Doddridge:—"The world itself (that is, its inhabitants) would not receive them;" that is, they would neither purchase nor read the voluminous records, much less could we expect them to be believed.

for the vanquished person to stretch out his hands to the conqueror, signifying that he declined the battle, acknowledging that he was conquered, and submitting to the direction of the victor. Orient. Cust. No. 1308.

Ver. 25. The world could not contain, &c.—[This is a very strong eastern expression to represent the number of miracles which Jesus wrought. But however strong and strange it may appear to us of the Western world, we find sacred and other authors using hyperboles of the like kind and signification. See Nu. xiii. 33. De. i. 28. Dan. iv. 11. Eccle. lxvii. 15. Easnage gives a very similar hyperbole taken from the Jewish writers; in which Jochanan is said to have "composed such a great number of precepts and lessons, that if the heavens were paper, and all the trees of the forests so many pens, and all the children of men so many scribes, they would not suffice to write all his lessons."]—B.

"Could we with ink the ocean fill,
And were the skies of parchment made:
Were every stalk on earth a quill,
And every man a scribe by trade;
To write the love of God above,
Would drain the ocean dry;
Nor could the scroll contain the whole,
If stretch'd from sky to sky."

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE GOSPEL OF ST. JOHN.

[ST. JOHN is generally considered, with respect to language, as the least correct writer in the New Testament. His style indicates a great want of those advantages which result from a learned education; but this defect is amply compensated by the unexampled simplicity with which he expresses the sublimest truths. Though simplicity of manner, says Campbell, is common to all our Lord's historians, there are evidently differences in the simplicity of one compared with that of another. One thing very remarkable in John's style, is an attempt to impress important truths more strongly on the minds of his readers, by employing in the expression of them, both an affirmative proposition and a negative. It is manifestly not without design that he commonly passes over those passages of our Lord's history and teaching, which had been treated at large by the other Evangelists, or, if he touches them at all, he touches them but slightly, whilst he records many miracles which had been overlooked by the rest, and expatiates on the sublime doctrines of the pre-existence, the divinity, and the incarnation of the Word, the great ends of his mission, and the blessings of his purchase.]—Bagster.

The leading facts are here reduced to seven, which are marked with numerical letters, I. II., &c. On No. I. it may be proper to remark, that, on comparing the different Evangelists, it seems that the women did not come all to the sepulchre at one time, but some at day-break, and the other women not till sun-rise. None of them seem to have been aware, that Nicodemus had brought spices on the night before, or that the sepulchre had been sealed and guarded.

On Fact III. we may remark, that Matthew and Mark mention the appearance of one angel—Luke and John, two. Perhaps one only spoke, and appeared the principal.

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

THIS is the last of the historical books of the New Testament, and forms a link of connexion between the Gospels and Apostolical Epistles. The Acts, or transactions of the Apostles, is the title given to this book in the Codex Beza, and in all the modern versions or editions.

That St. Luke was the author of this Book, as well as of the Gospel which bears his name, "is evident," as Hartwell Horne remarks, "both from the introduction, and from the unanimous testimonies of the early Christians. Both are inscribed to Theophilus, and, in the very first verse of the Acts, there is a reference made to his Gospel, which he calls the former Treatise. . . . . From the frequent use of the first person plural, it is clear that he was present at most of the transactions he relates. He appears to have accompanied St. Paul to Philippi; he also attended him to Jerusalem, and afterwards to Rome, where he remained two years during that Apostle's first confinement. Accordingly we find St. Luke particularly mentioned in two of the Epistles written by St. Paul, from Rome, during that confinement. And as the Book of Acts is continued to the end of the second year of St. Paul's imprisonment, it could not have been written before the year 63; and as the death of that Apostle is not mentioned, it is probable that the book was composed before that event, which is supposed to have happened A. D. 65." Michaelis, Dr. Lardner, Dr. Benson, Rosenmuller, Bp. Tomline, and the generality of critics, therefore, assign the date of this book to the year 63 or 64. The history, as it gives the only credible account of the rise and spread of Christianity, furnishes, at the same time, abundant evidence of its truth, and of its happy effects wherever it was received, in raising and improving the character of man.

CHAPTER I.

1 Christ preparing his apostles to the beholding of his ascension, gathereth them together into the mount Olivet, commandeth them to expect in Jerusalem the sending down of the Holy Ghost, promiseth after few days to send it: by virtue whereof they should be witnesses unto him, even to the utmost parts of the earth. 9 After his ascension they are warned by two angels to depart, and to set their minds upon his second coming. 12 They accordingly return, and, giving themselves to prayer, choose Matthias apostle in the place of Judas.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—11. Our Lord's ascension.—The excellent M. Claude remarks, that here "the Evangelist [Luke] speaks of the things that 'Jesus began both to do and to teach.' Now he says the same of Moses: 'He was mighty in words and in deeds,' (Acts vii. 22.) . . . . These two things joined together, doing and teaching, are distinguishing characters of a true prophet, who never separates practice from doctrine." We may remark, however, that there was a great difference between Moses and Jesus, both in their teaching and doing. "One taught justice, the other mercy; one abased, the other exalted; one terrified, the other comforted. There was also a great difference between the deeds of the one and of the other. Most of the miracles of Moses were miracles of destruction, with which he chastised the Egyptians: but the miracles of Jesus Christ were always miracles of benevolence, raising the dead, giving sight to the blind," &c. (Claude's Essay.)

This practice of teaching and working miracles our Lord continued through the whole course of his ministry, "going about" preaching and "doing good," "until the day that he was taken up" to heaven; which, however, was not until "after that he, through the Holy Ghost, had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen," relative to their conduct after his departure. "To whom also (says Luke) he showed himself alive, after his passion, by many infallible proofs; being seen of them" at different times for "forty days," and at each time speaking to them "of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." He particularly commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but "wait for the promise of the Father,"—the baptism of the Holy Ghost,—till they should receive it. In one of his last interviews with them (within about ten days of the day of Pentecost) the eleven seem to have agreed to ask him, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" and assume thy throne among them as the Messiah?

As this was a question rather of curiosity than of any practical utility, it receives a gentle reproof instead of a direct answer. "It is not for you to know the times, or the seasons, which the Father hath put (or reserved) in his own power." In this question of the disciples, as Calvin remarks, "There are as many errors as words. They dream of an earthly kingdom—they assign the time, this time—they shut out the Gentiles, restraining the kingdom to Israel. Again, they would fain know what was not revealed; whereas, true wisdom is to stop in learning where Christ, our Master, pauses in teaching. Hence we see the absurdity of aiming to be 'wise above what is written;' or to deal in mysteries, which are either not revealed at all, or but doubtfully and obscurely."

Our Lord Jesus, though he refused to gratify the curiosity of his apostles, gave them to understand that, in a very short time, they should be properly instructed in their duty; and, by the effusion of the Holy Spirit, be fully qualified to become witnesses for him, not only "in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria," but also among the Gentiles, even unto the uttermost parts of the earth.

We now come to another most interesting scene, that of the Saviour's ascension into heaven. After the conversation above referred to, and the commission given to the apostles, as related by St. Matthew, ch. xxviii. 18—20, which evidently took place at or near Jerusalem, St. Luke informs us he led them out as far as the boundaries of Bethany, which was by the foot of Olivet, or the Mount of Olives, (Luke xxiv. 50,) and there "he blessed them;" and probably from that side of the Mount nearest to the village, which was the eastern side, he gradually ascended in a cloud sent down to receive him, while his disciples stood below, lost in wonder and admiration. Dr. R. Richardson, a pious physician, who has lately visited the Holy Land, and particularly this mountain, offers the following excellent remarks on this event:—

"What a dreadful separation—Christ and his disciples! No parting on earth was ever like unto this. Those who enjoyed his visible presence, and heard the heavenly instruction that flowed from his lips, could best describe their bereavement; but they were stunned and speechless; and who shall attempt to take up the theme? It is like the interruption of the divine intercourse in Paradise, the greatest privation that ever was sustained by man. Yet how unlike! The separation in Paradise left wrath and tribulation, and the curse of a broken law; . . . . but the separation on the Mount of Olives left peace and blessing, and the promises of consolation—a restoration of the intercourse with God, since Christ had healed up the breach by which they were divided. The eyes of the apostles gaze up into heaven; the eye of the body is speedily obscured in a heavenly pursuit; but for the spirit of the Christian, in this line of vision there is no vanishing point; it shoots along the tract with its ascending Saviour, enters in his presence the mansions of the blessed, and appears, for the first time since the fall, in the presence of a reconciled God. This was an ecstasy not soon to be recovered from; the spirit enjoyed it, but the flesh was unconscious. The apostles stood gazing up into heaven, till two of its messengers in white apparel recalled their spirits to the scene of their terrestrial operations: 'Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him

CHAP. I. Ver. 1. The former treatise.—Or, as logos may be rendered, account, history, or narration; which most evidently refers to the Gospel written by St. Luke, which he also inscribed to his friend Theophilus.

Ver. 4. Being assembled together.—Margin, "Eating together with them;" and we know that our Lord did eat with his disciples, even after his resurrection. (Luke xxiv. 42.) But the original word seems applicable to any friendly or social meeting.—Saith he.—These words, though not in the original, are evidently implied. See Doddridge.

Ver. 6. Wilt thou at this time restore.—From our Lord's promise, that the Holy Spirit should convince the world of sin, &c., (John xvi. 8,) it is possible that the apostles expected that this effect would immediately follow the gift of the Holy Ghost. See Doddridge.

13 And when they were come in, they went up into an upper room, where abode both [s] Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, Philip, and Thomas, Bartholomew, and Matthew, James the son of Alpheus, and Simon Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James.

14 These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the [t] women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with his brethren.

15 ¶ And in those days Peter stood up in the midst of the disciples, and said, (the number of the names together were about a hundred and twenty,)

16 Men and brethren, this scripture must needs have been fulfilled, which [u] the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas, which was guide [v] to them that took Jesus.

go into heaven.' He shall not come as the avenging God, that planted the flaming sword to keep the way of the tree of life in Paradise; but as a reconciled and a blessing God, for he was taken up into heaven in the act of bestowing his blessing, and in like manner we are assured he is to return. Such heavenly strains did not fall ineffectual; the apostles worshipped their God and Saviour, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy."—(Dr. Richardson's Travels in the Mediterranean.)

Archbishop Tillotson beautifully "considers the cloud in which Jesus ascended as a designed contrast to the fiery chariot of Elijah; as an emblem of that mildness which distinguished the character and ministry of the one, in opposition to the boldness and rudeness of the other. But we suspect it was chiefly intended to convey an idea of that divine majesty which Jesus chose to exhibit to his disciples, when about to part with them, and to preserve that idea lively upon their minds."

The connexion of this event with the second coming of Jesus, is also a circumstance which exhibits its majesty; a connexion not wholly formed by the present juncture, nor by the authority of the heavenly messengers; but by the purpose of God, and by the repeated affirmations of Jesus: "The Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment to the Son. The Son of man shall come in all his glory, and his holy angels with him." The two events are described to be similar in several circumstances, and they reflect a lustre upon each other. Indeed, nothing could give a more grand idea of the ascension to the admiring spectators, than the following address of the angel: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye see him go." (Dr. D. Hunter's Observations.)

"Surely as he shall come, so he went," says Bishop Hall: and we know that, when he ascended up on high, he was attended by "thousands of angels, as at Sinai," though only two of them might appear to his disciples. (See Ps. lxix. 17.) As it was at Sinai, so was it at Olivet, and so shall it be at the last day. Behold, he cometh with clouds—and with ten thousands of his holy ones. (Rev. i. 7. Jude 14.)

Ver. 12—26. Matthias chosen into the Apostleship.—After reading of our Lord's leaving his disciples and ascending up to heaven, we are naturally prepared to hear of their lamentation and regret: but no such thing occurred—"they returned to Jerusalem with great joy." (Luke xxiv. 52.) How shall we account for this? During the period of his crucifixion, and until they were satisfied of his resurrection, they seem to have sunk into sullen grief and disappointment—"We trusted (said they) that it had been he that should have redeemed Israel." How, then, shall we account for this reverse of feeling? Oh, now they found it was him; that he had redeemed them by his death, and, as he had promised, that he had not only risen from the dead, but was gone to take possession of his kingdom; and that not for himself only; but that he was gone "to prepare a place for them, that where he is they might be also."

When arrived at Jerusalem, in an upper room probably of some friend, they all assembled for devotional purposes, together with the holy women, and especially Mary, the mother of Jesus, amounting to 120 persons of both sexes. On one of these occasions Peter stood up and addressed the meeting, relative to the apostacy of Judas, and the necessity of appointing some other person to succeed him in the apostleship. On the character of Judas we have already offered some remarks in our exposition of Mat. xxvii., Luke xxii., and John xiii. We shall endeavour to avoid repetition, but three things now demand our notice—the miserable fate of Judas—the Scriptures which predicted it—and the means by which his place was here supplied:

1. We advert to the death of Judas; but when and where did this take place? It was not till Jesus had been condemned by the Jews, and delivered over to Pilate, when it was very natural to suppose his death certain, (as he had himself predicted,) that Judas repented, and returned the money he had received; but if we may be allowed such a conjecture, he probably did not actually hang himself till the awful hour when "the sun was turned into darkness"—a darkness which made even the heart of a Roman centurion tremble. This awful phenomenon, which must have thrown the whole city into confusion and alarm, might probably appear, both to him and others, as the approach of the day of judgment, and he might seek to hide himself in death from the presence of his judge. Whether the cord itself, or the projection to which it was fastened, now gave way, we presume not to determine; if his fall were from the walls of the city or the battlements of the temple, as has been supposed, the dreadful effect here mentioned might very naturally occur.

2. The Scriptures here quoted have been already considered in our exposition of Psalms lxix. and cix. We only here add, that we consider David's imprecations of judgment on his enemies (some of whom, indeed resembled Judas) as predictive of the judgments which befell Judas, and those priests and Pharisees who acted with him; and not them only, but likewise all those who involved themselves in the same guilt, by their awful imprecations—"His blood be upon us and upon our children!"

Ver. 12. A sabbath day's journey—[Was seven and a half furlongs from Jerusalem; and the town of Bethany was fifteen. But the first region or tract of mount Olivet, called Bethphage, extended from the city a sabbath day's journey, where the tract called Bethany began; and from this place our Lord ascended. See Lightfoot.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. An upper room.—This was either a room in the temple, or (more likely, as we think,) in the house of some friend. Upper rooms were generally large, and adapted for social meetings; and often used, according to Lightfoot, for religious purposes. See note on chap. ii. 46.

Ver. 15. The number of the names—i. e. of the persons. So Rev. iii. 4. and xi 13. Greek.

Ver. 16. Men and brethren.—This phrase, Dr. Campbell remarks, is used thirteen times in this book, and always without the copulative, which he thinks should always be omitted in the translation, together with the word men, which he thinks merely idiomatic. He would translate only "brethren," or "brethren and fathers," as the words may be. See note on chap. iii. 14.

Ver. 18. This man purchased a field.—It is true that he was not the purchaser, but it was purchased with his money, and at his expense. So persons in scripture are often charged with the evils which their conduct had occasioned; as for instance, Zedekiah with the burning of Jerusalem Je. xxxviii. 23.

——Falling headlong.—The Greek (prenes) strictly means, to fall forward, or on the face. Raphelius, Elsner, Parkhurst.

Ver 19. And it was known, &c.—Both Doddridge and Townsend consider this as a parenthesis, and the language of the Evangelist. From an ancient inscription, it seems that the fate of Judas became a proverbial form of uttering. See Doddridge.——Aceldama—[Also called the Potter's Field, is situated about half way down the ravine between mount Zion, and the Hill of Evil Counsel, on the side of the hill, and south of Jerusalem. It is described by Maundrell, (Journey, April 6,) as "a small piece of ground, not above thirty yards long, and half as much broad. One moiety of it is taken up by a square fabric, twelve yards high, (an oblong square cavern, about twenty-six paces long, twenty broad, and about twenty feet deep, says Pococke,) built for a charnel house. The corpses are let down into it from the top, there being five holes left open for that purpose. Looking down these holes, we could see many bodies under several degrees of decay; from which it may be conjectured, that this grave does not make that quick despatch with the corpses committed to it, which is commonly reported."]—Bagster.

Ver. 20. His bishoprick.—(Greek, Episcope.) Our translators, who use Bishopric in the text, put "office," or "charge," in the margin, which Ainsworth gives as the sense of the Hebrew here quoted. A bishop, according to its derivation, he says, is the common name of all overseers. Hammond shows it was applied to any persons in authority, civil as well as ecclesiastical, and here means "apostolic power."

Ver. 23. Joseph, called Barsabas.—Supposed to be the Joses (for it is the same name) mentioned Mat. xxvii. 56, the brother of at least two apostles Doddridge

24 And they prayed, and said, Thou, Lord, which [e] knowest the hearts of all men, show whether of these two thou hast chosen,

25 That he may take part of this ministry and apostleship, from which Judas by transgression fell, that he might go to his own place.

26 And they gave forth their lots, and the lot fell upon Matthias; and he was numbered with the eleven apostles.

CHAPTER II.

1 The apostles, filled with the Holy Ghost, and speaking divers languages, are admired by some, and derided by others. 14 Whom Peter disproving, and showing that the apostles spake by the power of the Holy Ghost, that Jesus was risen from the dead, ascended into heaven, had poured down the same Holy Ghost, and was the Messias, a man known to them to be approved of God by his miracles, wonders, and signs, and not crucified without his determinate counsel, and foreknowledge: 37 he baptizeth a great number that were converted. 41 Who afterwards devoutly and charitably converse together: the apostles working many miracles, and God daily increasing his church.

AND when the day of Pentecost [a] was fully come, they [b] were all with one accord in one place.

2 And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled [c] all the house where they were sitting.

3 And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them.

4 And they were all [d] filled with the Holy Ghost, and began [e] to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

5 And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven.

6 Now [f] when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together, and were [g] confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language.

7 And they were all amazed and marvelled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak [h] Galileans?

8 And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born?

3. We are to notice the means taken to fill up the vacancy which the apostacy and death of Judas made among the apostles. When it is said, "Let another take his bishoprick," the margin reads, consistent with the Psalm from which the words are quoted, "office" instead of bishoprick, (compare with Ps. cix. 8,) for Judas was not a bishop, but an apostle; and the former term can only be applied to him in its general signification, as an "overseer." But by what means was this choice to be determined? It should seem that the eleven, or perhaps the body of believers present, pointed out two persons who had accompanied our Lord and his apostles during the whole of his ministry, and who had doubtless also seen him since his resurrection, as proper persons to fill the vacancy; and then, after solemn prayer to God for his interference, they appealed to the lot, as an ancient and solemn mode of deciding in such cases. By lot, the expiatory goat was chosen, and the other dismissed. (Levit. xvi. 8, 10.) By lot, the land of Canaan was divided, and the Levites had their cities assigned, and their turns of service regulated, &c. The lot was considered by the Jews as an appeal to God, equally solemn with an oath; and was regarded as no less sacred by the Greeks, as appears by various parts of Homer. The primitive church, therefore, forbade games of chance or hazard, as calculated to lessen our reverence for divine Providence; God himself claiming it as his prerogative to decide the lot: "The lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord." (Prov. xvi. 33.) But it is not on this account only that we think idle games of all sorts ought to be discountenanced among Christians; it is a waste of time, when we know not that we have an inch of time left; for who can say that he has yet an hour to live? And as to relaxation from business or study, reading and the liberal arts afford far better relaxation, without either debasing the mind or wasting time—for they improve both.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—13. The gift of tongues on the day of Pentecost.—"The next thing to be observed, (says Pres. Edwards,) is the enduing the apostles and others with the extraordinary and miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost; such as the gift of tongues, the gift of healing, of prophecy, &c. The Spirit of God was poured out in great abundance in this respect: so that not only ministers [of the Gospel] but a great number of [private] Christians through the world, were endued with them, both old and young; not only officers and more honourable persons, but the meaner sort of persons, servants and handmaids, agreeable to Joel's prophecy, of which the Apostle Peter takes notice, that it is accomplished in this dispensation. . . . . This was a great means of the success of the Gospel in that age, and of establishing the Christian church in all parts of the world; and [that] not only in that age, but in all ages to the end of the world: for Christianity being by this means established through so great a part of the known world by miracles, it was after that more easily continued by tradition: and then by means of these extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost, the apostles, and others, were enabled to write the New Testament, to be an infallible rule of faith and manners to the church to the end of the world. Furthermore, these miracles stand recorded in those writings, as a standing proof and evidence of the truth of the Christian Religion to all ages." (Hist. of Redemp.)

The manner in which this miracle was effected next demands our notice. When the day of Pentecost was fully come, that is, fifty days after the Passover, and being the first day of the week, the apostles, with doubtless all the disciples which could possibly attend, "were all with one accord in one place," which was probably the upper room before mentioned, (chap. i. 13,) when suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a mighty rushing wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting, and there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, resembling a divided flame, and it (i. e one of these flames) "abode upon each of them." The tongues being emblematic of the gift of languages with which they were now endowed—the wind being our Lord's established emblem of the Holy Spirit, (John iii. 8,) and the fire expressive of the extraordinary zeal and energy with which they were henceforward animated.

An event like this was not to be long kept secret. The "mighty rushing wind" probably first excited attention to the place, when the tongues of fire (or divided flame) would naturally increase the surprise of the spectators; and when the pious Jews were collected together, who came to the feast from "every nation under heaven"—(for so widely were the Jews scattered)—and heard the apostles speak, each "in his own language," they were "all amazed, and marvelled, saying, Behold! are not all these which speak Galileans? and how hear we every man in our own tongue wherein we were

Ver. 24. Thou, Lord.—Burgh (a learned layman) gives several reasons for believing that this prayer was addressed personally to the Lord Jesus; but that the case should be doubtful, from the same language being indiscriminately addressed to both the Father and the Son, is with us a most decisive argument for the divinity of the latter. "That Lord here means the Lord Jesus, seems evident from verses 21, 22. It is the usual appellation, moreover, which the book of Acts gives to the Saviour."—Stuart's Letters.

Ver. 25. That he might go to his own place.—"If we are right," says Preb. Townsend, "in interpreting the language of the New Testament in the same sense as it was understood by those to whom it was addressed, and no canon of criticism seems more certain, we must adopt the common rendering of this passage. It was a common sentiment among the Jews, that 'he that betrayeth an Israelite hath no part in the world to come.' And Lightfoot quotes a similar expression from Baal Turim, in Nu. xxiv. 25: 'Balaam went to his own place, i. e. into hell.'" After various other quotations, Mr. T. adds, 'After such evidence, we may agree with Doddridge, that the interpretation of Hammond, Le Clerc, and Œcumenius, is very unnatural, when they explain it of a successor going into the place of Judas." New Testament Arrangement.

Ver. 26. The lot fell.—According to Grotius, the method was, to put their lots into two urns, one of which contained the names of Joseph and Matthias, and the other a blank, and the word "apostle." In drawing these out of the urns, the blank came up with the name of Joseph, and that on which was written "apostle," with Matthias.—Orient. Cust. No. 485. On the lawfulness of Lots, see Pike's Cases of Conscience, No. 3.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. Pentecost—Or feast of weeks, was observed the 50th day after the 2d of the feast of unleavened bread, which, being a week of weeks, or 49 days, occasioned its being called feast of weeks, one of the three great Jewish festivals, in which all the males were required to appear before God, at the tabernacle or temple. It was a festival of thanks for the harvest, which commenced immediately after the passover.—Fully come.—The day began on the evening preceding; but on the morning following it was fully come.—In one place.—This place has been much disputed, many supposing that they obtained an apartment of the temple; but we conceive that they neither dared to ask such a favour, nor would they by any means be so indulged, as they lay at this time under the charge of having stolen the body of their Master. See Mat. xxviii. 11—15.

Ver. 3. Cloven tongues—i. e. (says Doddridge) "bright flames in a pyramidical form, which were so parted as to terminate in several points, and thereby to afford a proper emblem of the marvellous effect—a miraculous diversity of languages."

Ver. 4. With other tongues—i. e. with foreign tongues, to which they had not been accustomed.

Ver. 5. Dwelling at Jerusalem—i. e. during the feast.—Of every nation under heaven.—This is evidently spoken hyperbolically, and is exactly parallel to Deut. ii. 25. The western hemisphere, it may be recollected, was not then discovered; but there were individuals present from all the countries here named, and probably many more.

Ver. 6. When this was noised abroad.—Greek, "When the voice was made;" i. e. when it was reported.—Every man heard them speak in his own language.—From this expression, some have supposed that the miracle consisted in these different persons hearing in their own language what was spoken only in the Syro-Chaldaic, or vulgar Hebrew of that age. But this, besides multiplying the miracle more than twenty-fold, would be the gift of ears, and not of tongues.

Ver. 9. In Judea—Where the popular dialect is thought to have been very different from that of Galilee.

Ver. 10. Of Rome, Jews and proselytes.—"It appears from Josephus, &c that great numbers of Jews dwelt at Rome about this time, and made many proselytes."—Doddridge.

speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God.

12 And they were all amazed, and were in doubt, saying one to another, [j] What meaneth this?

13 Others mocking, said, These men are full of new wine.

14 ¶ But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice, and said unto them, Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken to my words:

15 For these are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing [k] it is but the third hour of the day.

16 But this is that which was [l] spoken by the prophet Joel;

17 And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out [m] of my Spirit upon all flesh: and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams:

18 And on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they [n] shall prophesy:

19 And I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath: blood, and fire, and vapour of smoke:

20 The [o] sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come:

21 And it shall come to pass, that whosoever [p] shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved.

22 Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by [q] miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye [r] yourselves also know:

23 Him, being [s] delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye [t] have taken, and [u] by wicked hands have crucified and slain:

24 Whom [v] God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death: because it was not possible [w] that he should be holden of it.

25 For David speaketh [x] concerning him, I foresaw the Lord always before my face, for he is on my right hand, that I should not be moved:

26 Therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also my flesh shall rest in hope:

27 Because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thy Holy One to see corruption.

28 Thou hast made known to me the ways of life; thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance.

29 Men and brethren, [y] let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day.

30 Therefore being [z] a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn [a] with an oath [b] to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne;

born—the wonderful works of God?"—It is no wonder, therefore, that they were amazed, and said one to another, "What meaneth this?" But at the same time that the more religious Jews were thus struck with admiration, others, doubtless "of the baser sort," exclaimed, "These men are full of new (or sweet) wine;" that is, they are intoxicated. Thus it is that strangers to vital religion, burlesque it under the name of fanaticism and enthusiasm:—"They speak evil of things which they know not," (Jude 10,) nor can they understand till enlightened from the same divine source.

Various opinions have been advanced respecting this miracle of Pentecost. The most rational, and the most general is, that the gift of tongues lasted during the ministry of the apostles, and was gradually withdrawn towards the close of the first century; but on this subject we take leave to transcribe the following passage from Mr. Prebendary Townsend's New Testament arranged.

"The extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit being vouchsafed for one especial purpose only, the benefit of the Christian church, as soon as that church was established, and the canon of Scripture completed, they were gradually withdrawn; while the ordinary operations, without which no child of Adam can 'be renewed unto holiness,' are to be continued for ever, 'even unto the end of the world.' This was the consoling and gracious promise our Lord gave to his disciples before he was visibly parted from them. . . . . 'Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.' This most merciful promise was at first given to the apostles, and through their ministry to the Universal Church; Christ himself having appointed outward means of grace, by which he has engaged to maintain a constant communion with his church, through the operations of the Holy Ghost. . . . .

"Every amiable feeling and affection, every virtue, and every grace, are the fruits of the Holy Spirit. He alone, by a secret and internal operation, changes and transforms the 'spirit of our mind,' and enlarges and improves every faculty of our soul. . . . . 'He,' to use the words of the eloquent Barrow, 'sweetly warmeth our cold affections, inflaming our hearts with devotion towards God; he qualifieth us, and encourageth us to approach the throne of grace, breeding in us faith and humble confidence, prompting in us fit matter of request, becoming our advocate and intercessor for the good success of our prayers.'"

Ver. 14—36. The Apostle Peter's sermon on the day of Pentecost.—Without repeating any part of this extraordinary discourse, we shall offer two or three general remarks.

1. The texts on which St. Peter discourses have been already noticed in our exposition on the second chapter of Joel, and of the 16th and 110th Psalms. It may be seen in our notes, that the Jews themselves applied the former to the days of the Messiah, which, as we have repeatedly remarked, they called the latter or last days; and one in particular asserts—"In the days of the Messiah all the house of Israel shall prophesy, as it is said in Joel ii. 28." But it is on the inspired authority of our apostle only that we refer the latter to him, for it does not appear that the Jews so understood it: we are not, however, to go to the avowed enemies of our Lord to learn the interpretations of the prophecies respecting him and his kingdom, though, at the same time, we may justifiably quote them when consistent with the New Testament, as concessions in his favour.

2. This extraordinary effusion of the Holy Spirit, accompanied with the miraculous gift of tongues, is here stated as the fulfilment, not only of Old Testament prophecies, but of our Lord's promise of sending them another Comforter.—"Having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear." (Verse 33.) And in this promise both the ordinary and extraordinary gifts of the Spirit must be included; since we find that, while the apostles were by the latter enabled to address the people in their various languages, the great truths which they delivered were applied with a saving efficacy to their minds, so that no less than 3000 persons were converted under this sermon.

3. We see how well adapted are the means used by Divine

Ver. 19. I will show wonders.—See Mat. xxiv.

Ver. 20. Notable.—Doddridge, "illustrious."

Ver. 23. Foreknowledge.—"Grotius, as well as Beza, observes, that prognosis must here signify decree; and Elsner has shown that it has the same signification in approved Greek writers." Doddridge.

Ver. 25. I foresaw.—Ps. xvi. 8, "I set." Doddridge, "I have regarded the Lord as always," &c.

Ver. 27. My soul in hell.—The apostle Peter here, and Paul in Acts xiii. 35—37, explain these words of David, found in the 16th Psalm, as applicable exclusively to our Saviour Christ. In the present translation there is some ambiguity. The word rendered Hell is in the Hebrew Sheol, and means both the grave and the invisible world. Our translators frequently render it by the former word, as Gen. xlii. 38; xliv. 31. 1 Kings ii. 9. Job xvii. 13, 14, and often Hell, as here, Job xxvi. 6. Psalms ix. 17. But it is generally admitted to include (like Hades) the invisible world in general. Bishop Pearson says, "It appeareth that the first intention of putting these words into the Creed was only to express the burial of our Saviour, or the descent of his body into the grave." It is most certain, however, that the phrase was afterwards explained, even by the Christian fathers, of Christ's descent into the place of punishment. See 1 Peter iii. 18. "But that it was actually so, or that the apostle intended so much," the Bishop confesses is "not manifest." See also Professor Witsius, who contends, "that Christ descended into hell, (the place of torment,) is no where expressly affirmed in Scripture, nor in the most ancient creeds. The creeds which mentioned the descent, were generally silent with respect to the burial; nor was it without some mistake that both were afterwards joined together." Dr J. P. Smith renders the first clause of Ps. xvi. 10, "Thou wilt not leave my life in the grave;" which nearly corresponds with Dr. Kennicott's version, "Thou wilt not abandon my life to the grave."—[The word hell, from the Saxon hillan or helan, to hide, or from holl, a cavern, though now used only for the place of torment, anciently denoted the concealed or unseen place of the dead in general.]—Bagster.

32 This [d] Jesus hath God raised up, whereof [e] we all are witnesses.

33 [f] Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having [g] received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth [h] this, which ye now see and hear.

34 For David is not ascended into the heavens: but he saith himself, The LORD [i] said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, 35 Until I make thy foes thy footstool.

36 Therefore let all the house [j] of Israel know assuredly, that [k] God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both [l] Lord and [m] Christ.

37 ¶ Now when they heard this, they were pricked [n] in their heart, and said unto Peter and to the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what [o] shall we do?

38 Then Peter said unto them, [p] Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.

39 For the promise [q] is unto you, and to your children, and [r] to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

40 And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation.

41 ¶ Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls.

42 And [s] they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers.

43 And fear came upon every soul: and many [t] wonders and signs were done by the apostles.

Providence to effect the designed end. The end was to convert the nations, the means employed was preaching; but as it was quite useless to preach to any in an unknown tongue; so, in the then state of learning, it must have been the work of many years, for the preachers to acquire a knowledge of all the languages of those whom they would have to address. At present the case is somewhat different. Such facilities have been afforded for acquiring languages, that miraculous powers seem no longer necessary; unless it be considered as a miracle that God has raised up men with such extraordinary abilities for acquiring new languages, as in the instances of Carey, Morrison, Martin, Lee, and others; who have already been able to translate the Scriptures into the languages of more than half the globe. This circumstance, in connexion with many others, as the invention and recent improvements in printing and navigation, has already performed wonders, and shows in how many unexpected ways, God is able to effect his designs, and fulfil his promises.

4. This leads us to notice a remark of the Apostle Peter in the sermon now before us, relative to the mysterious fulfilment of the divine councils in the sufferings and death of the Lord Jesus. He was "delivered" up to his enemies "by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God," as himself said to the Roman governor, "Thou couldest have no power against me, except it were given thee from above." (John xix. 2.) But being so delivered, they took him, and "by wicked hands" he was "crucified and slain;" so that neither God's foreknowledge, nor decree, in any degree lessened the wickedness of those who acted in this dreadful tragedy. They fulfilled the divine purposes unintentionally; yea, contrary to their intention; and were fighting against God with all their might and malice, while (poor, feeble creatures) they were in every instance fulfilling his decrees. "He doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth." (Dan. iv. 35.)

Ver. 37—47. The happy effects of Peter's sermon.—Though we would be far from condemning a sermon from its not producing any sensibly good effects upon the hearers, for our Lord himself often "stretched forth his hands in vain;" yet when a sermon is eminently blessed, as God seldom blesses the ministry which he disapproves, it seems justifiable for preachers themselves to look back on such discourses as models for their own future ministry. In looking at Peter's sermon in this point of view, the following particulars strike us as its prominent characteristics.

1. It is full of Christ:—His divine mission—his holy character—his extraordinary powers—his vicarious sufferings—his meritorious death—his triumphant resurrection, and exaltation to the right hand of the Majesty on high, where he receives the adoration of his people, and whence he bestows his blessings on them. 2. It is full of the doctrine of divine influences—that Holy Spirit promised by the Saviour, and now poured out upon his hearers; and that, as every other blessing, by the gift of the Father and the Son. 3. These and every other point of doctrine incidentally stated, are urged with energy, and in reference to its practical tendency and effects. Thus, for instance, the death of Christ is not merely a fact; it is a crime which the preacher charges home upon the consciences of his hearers: "Him YE have crucified and slain, and that with wicked hands." Again, the Spirit is poured out from on high. This also is a fact; but it is not to be considered as a fact only. Here are divine influences poured around, and every man is invited to partake of them. "If any man thirst, let him come and drink." Nor is this all: the Spirit is compared, not only to a spring rising up unto everlasting life, but to a stream perpetually flowing; and it is required of every one that partakes of these blessings, that he should himself labour, by prayer and exhortation, to communicate them to others; for the promise is to you and to your children, and to all that are afar off—either in respect of situation or date—though it be to the end of the world, or to the end of time.

Nor is this all: there is a harmony in these truths that connects and combines them in the Christian system. "If you stand self-convicted as murderers of the Lord of Glory, repent, fall before him, and implore his mercy. He prayed for his murderers on the cross, and you may claim an interest in that prayer. Present yourselves to be baptized in his name, and you shall receive remission of sins, and the gift of the Holy Ghost. For whosoever calleth on the name of the Lord [Jesus] shall [through grace] be saved."

Such is the strain in which they were addressed, and what was the effect? They were "pricked," or pierced, to the heart, and cried out, "Men, brethren! what shall we do?" The advice and encouragement which Peter gave them, we have already considered; but we have only an outline of his discourse; for "with many other words did he exhort [them,] saying, Save yourselves," or rather, "Be ye saved, from this untoward or perverse generation;" that is, from the awful judgments about to come upon them.

Such were the wonderful effects of Peter's sermon, or rather of the divine influences which attended it, that nearly three thousand persons were thereby converted, and united to the church by Christian baptism. As, however, Peter could speak but in one language at a time, and was evidently addressing the Jews of Jerusalem in the Syriac tongue, it is well conjectured by Dr. Doddridge, that other apostles or disciples might be at the same time employed either in translating Peter's sermon, or in giving similar addresses to the Jews of other countries,

Ver. 37. They were pricked in their heart.—Doddridge, "pierced to the heart." If Christ and his Apostles believed and taught the salvation of all men, how account for the fact, that their preaching so much alarmed the fears and awakened the enmity of wicked men. The fact is unquestionable. Christ rarely preached a sermon, which did not excite uneasiness in the minds of sinners, and send them away dissatisfied and murmuring against the preacher. The same is true of the Apostles. Under their preaching sinners were "pricked in their hearts."

Ver. 38 Repent, and be baptized.—They could only prove the sincerity of their repentance by a public profession, of which baptism was the appointed sign.

Ver. 41. Three thousand souls—i. e. persons; so ver. 43.

Ver. 44. Were together.—Doddridge, "In the same;" certainly not in the same room, nor the same house, but in a quarter of the town probably where their friends chiefly resided.

Ver. 45. And sold their possessions.—"That this unbounded liberality was not commanded by St. Peter, is evident from his address to Ananias, chap. v. 4. And that it was not intended as a precedent, is equally clear from all the Epistles, in which frequent mention is made of the distinction between rich and poor," &c.—Townsend's New Test. Arr.

Ver. 46. They, continuing daily—That is, they daily visited the temple.—Breaking bread from house to house.—Lightfoot, Pearson, and others, understand this phrase, "breaking bread," as signifying the Eucharist, or Lord's Supper; but the words following, "did eat their meat," &c. strongly inclines us to refer the expression to their social meals, as in Luke xxiv. 35. So Doddridge. The learned Joseph Mede translates the Greek phrase (kat' oikon,) "on the house," meaning, in the upper room; and supposes that, after the death of Christ, the apostles held their religious meetings in the room where Jesus had kept the Passover &c.—that there our Lord repeatedly met with house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, 47 Praising God, and having [x] favour with all the people. And [y] the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved.

CHAPTER III.

1 Peter preaching to the people that came to see a lame man restored to his feet, 12 protesteth the cure not to have been wrought by his or John's own power, or holiness, but by God, and his Son Jesus, and through faith in his name: 13 withal reprehending them for crucifying Jesus. 17 Which because they did it through ignorance, and that thereby were fulfilled God's determinate counsel, and the scriptures, 19 he exhorteth them by repentance and faith to seek remission of their sins, and salvation in the same Jesus.

NOW Peter and John went up together into the temple at [a] the hour of prayer, being the ninth hour.

2 And a certain man lame from his mother's womb was carried, whom they laid daily at the gate [b] of the temple which is called Beautiful, to ask alms of them that entered into the temple;

3 Who seeing Peter and John about to go into the temple asked an alms.

4 And Peter, fastening his eyes upon him with John, said, Look on us.

5 And he gave heed unto them, expecting to receive something of them.

6 Then Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: In [c] the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk.

7 And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up: and immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength.

8 And he leaping [d] up stood, and walked, and entered with them into the temple, walking, and leaping, and praising God.

9 And all the people saw him walking and praising God:

10 And they knew that it was he which sat for alms at the Beautiful gate of the temple: and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him.

11 And as the lame man which was healed held Peter and John, all the people ran together unto them in the porch [e] that is called Solomon's, greatly wondering.

12 ¶ And when Peter saw it, he answered unto the people, Ye men of Israel, why marvel ye at this? or why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own [f] power or holiness we had made this man to walk?

13 The God [g] of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our [h] fathers, hath glorified [i] his Son Jesus; whom ye delivered up, and denied [j] him in the presence [k] of Pilate, when he [k] was determined to let him go.

16 And his name through faith in his name hath made this man strong, whom ye see and who would naturally form themselves into different parties, according to their different languages.

What follows also evidently refers to successive days—"they continued steadfast in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship;" which seems to imply, that they met with some temptations to the contrary, probably from unbelieving Jews. Commentators are not exactly agreed, whether by breaking of bread is here to be understood the observance of the Lord's Supper, or their eating together in a friendly way at their devotional assemblies, to which the words following strongly incline us; "they did eat their meat with gladness," &c. Their meals seem to have been provided at the common charge.

As to the community of goods, we apprehend it originated in the poverty of some, and the benevolence of others. Many poor Jews and proselytes who came from far, and were detained by the extraordinary things they saw, and desirous to see and hear more, probably found their money exhausted, and knew not what to do, as there was no hope of their receiving from the priests, who had the command of the public treasury, any of that friendly assistance or accommodation which had at other times been granted: the more wealthy converts therefore generously came forward, and shared their property with them; and those who had not money sold their goods, and in some cases, as we shall presently see, their possessions or estates, to enable them to supply the necessities of their poorer brethren. Thus did they eat together as they needed, "with gladness and singleness (or simplicity) of heart; praising God, and having favour with all the people; and the Lord added to the church daily such as should be," or rather, "such as were saved," by the grace of God, "from the wrath to come."

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—11. A lame man healed by Peter and John, in the name of Jesus.—Peter and John going up to the temple at the usual hour of evening prayer, which at this season (the latter end of May) must have been about four o'clock in the afternoon, they found there a poor lame man, whose friends daily carried him to lie by the side of the beautiful brazen gate which Herod had presented to the temple, to receive the alms of the charitable and religious. Peter and John performed on him a perfect cure, as the Lord Jesus had done some time before on the paralytic and the impotent man at Bethesda, in like circumstances.

On this miracle we remark:—1. That there is no ground for the infidel insinuation, that the apostles enriched themselves by the sale of the property of their converts; for, immediately after that sale, we see that two of the chief of them had neither gold nor silver. 2. We notice the similarity between this miracle and some wrought by our Lord Jesus, particularly the paralytic in Mat. ix., and the impotent man in John v., to both whom our Lord addressed the same words—"Arise, take up thy bed and walk!" and was instantly obeyed. 3. Yet we may remark also a striking difference in the manner of address. Jesus wrought all his miracles in his own name; but the apostles in his name—"In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, (saith Peter,) rise up and walk." How shall we account for this, but on the principle of our Lord's divinity? It is the duty of a mere creature, however elevated, to render glory to his Maker; and of a sinner to render honour to his Saviour. Peter and John did both, and were particularly careful to take no honour to themselves: "Why look ye upon us, (said Peter,) as though by our own power we had made this man to walk!" But when did Jesus express a fear lest his disciples should do him too much honour? 4. We remark the attachment of this poor healed cripple to the instruments of his cure, and his gratitude to the author. He held Peter and John that they might not leave him, and seems to have been active in collecting the people around him, that they might see what God had done for him: and at the same time, that they might not confine their attention to the instruments, he "entered with them into the temple, walking, leaping, and praising God." (Ver. 8.) While we feel due gratitude to those by whom we receive our blessings, at the same time we should not forget the great Author, from whom they ultimately come.

Ver. 12—26. Peter's second sermon.—What we have said respecting Peter's first sermon, in the preceding chapter, will in great measure apply to this. He was a most ardent and zealous preacher, and his heart was full of the great subject of his ministry, "Christ, and him crucified." The present discourse, as the reader will observe, arises out of the miracle wrought on the man lame from his birth, and the amazement excited by that event: and from the important circumstance of the miracle being wrought in "the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth," he presses upon them the enormity of their guilt, in having rejected, persecuted, and finally crucified this illustrious person; for, after all, had it not been for the clamour of the multitude, "Crucify him, crucify him," Pilate would certainly have released him, (ver. 13.) And their guilt in this is highly aggravated by the consideration that the man whom they preferred, and of whom they obtained the release, was a notorious murderer, (Luke xxiii. 19;) whereas him whom they virtually crucified, was the Author and Prince of Life—the Captain of our Salvation. (See note, ver. 15.)

The apostle, indeed, admits that they sinned through igno them, and that there they assembled on the day of Pentecost, and afterwards. See Townsend's New Test. Arr.

Ver. 47. Such as should be saved.—Doddridge, "Those who were saved." Dr. J. Edwards, "The saved."

CHAP. III. Ver. 1. Together.—[Rather, "at the same time," or "at that time," referring to the time when the transactions took place, which are mentioned at the close of the preceding chapter.]—Bagster.——The ninth hour—i. e. (with us) about four in the afternoon. "The Jews divided the time, from the rising to the setting of the sun, into twelve hours, which were consequently, at different times of the year, of unequal length. The third hour was (therefore) the middle space between sun-rise and noon;" (Doddridge;) the ninth was consequently the medium point between noon and sunset, which at this time of the year (the latter end of May, when the sun does not set till near eight) must have been about four. P. M. The passover full moon fell this year April 3, according to Sir I. Newton, and the Pentecost, seven weeks after.

Ver. 2. The gate . . . . called Beautiful.—This gate, which was added by Herod to the Court of the Gentiles, was 30 cubits high, and 15 broad, and made of Corinthian brass.

Ver. 14. A murderer.—Gr. "a man, a murderer." So Luke xix. 7, "a man, a sinner;" xxiv. 19. (Gr.) "a man, a prophet."

Ver. 15. The Prince of life.—The original term is variously used; for Prince, chap. v. 31; Captain, Heb. ii. 10; Author, Heb. xii. 2.

Ver. 16. And his name, through faith, &c.—That is, by virtue of his name, and through faith therein; meaning, the faith not only of the apostles, but also of the man on whom the miracle was wrought, who himself doubtless became a believer in the Lord Jesus know: yea, the faith which is by him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all.

17 And now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance [q] ye did it, as did also your rulers.

18 But those [r] things, which God before had showed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled.

19 Repent ye [s] therefore, and be [t] converted, that your sins may be [u] blotted out, when the times of refreshing [v] shall come from the presence of the Lord;

20 And he [w] shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you:

21 Whom the heaven must receive until the times [x] of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken [y] by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.

22 For Moses truly said unto the fathers, A [z] prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you.

23 And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people.

24 Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days.

25 Ye [a] are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And [b] in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed.

26 Unto [c] you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you, in turning away [d] every one of you from his iniquities.

CHAPTER IV.

1 The rulers of the Jews offended with Peter's sermon, 4 (though thousands of the people were converted that heard the word,) imprison him and John. 5 After, upon examination, Peter boldly avouching the lame man to be healed by the name of Jesus, and shewing the same lesson, 13 they command him and John to preach no more in that name, adding also threatening. 23 Whereupon the church flieth to prayer. 31 And God, by moving the place where they were assembled, testifies that he heard their prayers, confirming the church with the gift of the Holy Ghost, and with mutual love and charity.

AND as they spake unto the people, the priests, and the [a] captain of the temple, and the [b] Sadducees, came upon them,

2 Being grieved that they taught the people, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead.

3 And they laid hands on them, and put them in hold unto the next day: for it was now even-tide.

4 Howbeit many [c] of them which heard the word believed; and the number of the men was about five thousand.

5 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, that their rulers, and elders, and scribes,

6 And Annas [d] the high priest, and Caiaphas, and John, and Alexander, and as many as were of the kindred of the high priest, were gathered together at Jerusalem.

7 And when they had set them in the midst, they asked, By [e] what power, or by what name, have ye done this?

8 Then Peter, filled [f] with the Holy Ghost, said unto them, Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Israel,

9 If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man, by what means he is made whole;

rance, for, "had they known, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory:" but it was a most culpable ignorance; for they shut their eyes against evidence, arising both from Scripture and from fact. They were grossly ignorant of the writings of their own prophets, and they were wilfully blind with respect to the miracles wrought before their own eyes. The Saviour, however, had prayed for his murderers, who knew not what they did: there was, therefore, "hope in Israel concerning this matter." "You have the Scriptures of the prophets still before you, which you have fulfilled in his cruel sufferings and death; and you have the evidence of miracles renewed, which, being wrought in his name, give no less evidence to the divinity of his character than if you saw them wrought by himself."

Upon these grounds, therefore, does the apostle urge his hearers to repentance, that their sins might be blotted out, and that "times of refreshment" and seasons of consolation might be experienced by them, through the effusion of the Holy Spirit, as refreshing to the soul as cooling breezes to the body, which are peculiarly desirable in warm climates. Nor are such seasons to be confined to the apostolic age, since ecclesiastical history records many similar periods of divine influence, (as, for instance, the Reforma ion,) and we look forward to many more prior to his second coming, to regulate all the affairs of his kingdom upon earth, and to judge the world in righteousness.

This coming of Jesus Christ, first to save and then to judge the world, God had predicted by the mouth of all his holy prophets, from Samuel to John the Baptist; and, as he has accomplished the former, so certainly will he do the latter. In the mean time the great object of this glorious dispensation, the Messiah, is to free them from their iniquities, first, by the atonement offered in his death; and, secondly, by the gift of his Holy Spirit, to renew their hearts and minds.

Upon this discourse of Peter we offer only one farther observation, namely, that it affords a fine model of the most direct and pointed application to the consciences of his hearers, blended with the most affectionate solicitude for their salvation. Here many fail. Some thunder the denunciations of God's wrath against sinners, but they merely terrify them; others, on the contrary, are so fearful of offending, that they deal only in gentle admonitions and consolations. The former probe the wound, but apply no balm: the latter apply the balm before the wound is probed. The latter fault may proceed from want of courage, but both discover want of skill.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—22. Peter and John arrested, and examined by the rulers.—While Peter was preaching to the people, as reported in the preceding chapter, information was sent to the priests and rulers of his proceedings, who accordingly sent a military party to arrest him and his brother apostle, John. They were accordingly committed for trial on the next day. Before we attend to their trial, however, we may remark the party by whom they were arrested and imprisoned—the Sadducees. These men, we have seen in the Gospels, were a sort of half infidels, who indeed professed to believe the five books of Moses, but neither a separate state nor resurrection, (Matt. xxii. 23.) Much has been said formerly of infidel liberality; but the events that followed the French Revolution have, we believe, completely settled this point. Neither Pope nor Turk was ever more intolerant. They have also boasted much of their love of science and of useful knowledge; and so far as would promote their secular interests, they might be

Ver. 17. I wot—i. e. "I know."——That through ignorance—Namely, of the true character of Jesus. See 1 Co. ii. 8.

Ver. 19. When.—Doddridge and others, "that;" as the same word is rendered in Luke ii. 35. Acts xv. 17, &c.——The times of refreshing shall come.—Perhaps we might be justified in supplying the adverb farther—"that [farther] times of refreshing may come;" referring back to the outpouring of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, (which was introduced by a "mighty rushing wind,") and forward, to other similar dispensations of divine grace, as in chap. x.

Ver. 20. And he shall send.—Hammond and Doddridge, "and that he may send;" that is, again send.——Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you—That is, in the types and prophecies. But Hammond, Doddridge, Wesley, and many others, read, "That he may send unto you Jesus Christ, who was before appointed," or "designated,"—namely, to be our Saviour. So read the Alexandrian and many other valuable MSS. and ancient versions; some Christian Fathers, Beza, Vitringa, &c.

Ver. 21. The times of restitution of all things.—That the word means to restore, or regulate, is indisputable, and in this sense we have properly applied it to Elias, Mat. iii. 3; xvii. 11. But in all languages there are many words which, in different connexions, require to be differently rendered; and, on mature consideration, in this place we prefer the rendering of Hammond and Campbell. "The completion," or rather, "the consummation," (i. e. the fulfilment,) of all things which God hath spoken, &c. "The restitution here spoken of," says Dr. Hawes, "does not mean the restoration of all men to holiness and happiness, but simply the completion, accomplishment, fulfilment, (so the word is rendered by the best Greek scholars) of all that God has predicted by his prophets respecting the kingdom and glory of Messiah. The passage does not say a word respecting the salvation of all, or of any of mankind. It only asserts the completion of all the predictions contained in the ancient prophecies. But whether the restoration of all men to divine favour is one of those predictions, remains to be proved."

Ver. 22. For Moses truly said, &c.—Doddridge remarks, that both Dr. Bullock and Mr. Jeffery have excellently shown, that this promise does indeed primarily refer to the Messiah. See Bp. Chandler's Defence of Christianity.

Ver. 26. To bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities.—Doddridge, "To bless you, every one of you turning from his iniquities."

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1. Captain of the temple.—A Jewish officer, who had the command of the division of Levites then in waiting. "The temple had always a guard of Levites, who kept watch in it by turns, day and night." Campbell. Compare note on Luke xxii. 52.

Ver. 4. About five thousand.—Doddridge includes those before converted in this number.

Ver. 6. Annas the high priest.—Campbell thinks it probable that at this time Annas and Caiaphas might hold the office by turns annually. Campbell in Luke iii. 2.——John.—[Dr. Lightfoot supposes, with much probability, that this was Jochanan ben Zaccai, (i. e. John the son of Zaccai,) who was very famous at that time in the Jewish nation. He was a scholar of the celebrated Hillel, and was president of the Sanhedrim after Simeon the son of Gamaliel, and lived to be 120 years old. It is said that a little before this time when the gates of the temple flew open of their own accord, he foretold its destruction; which he lived to see accomplished.——Alexander.—This was probably, as several learned men suppose, Alexander Lysimachus, alabarch or governor of the Jews at Alexandria, and brother of the famous Philo Judæus. He was 10 Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that [g] by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole.

11 This is the stone [h] which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner.

12 Neither is there salvation in any other: for [i] there is none other [j] name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.

13 ¶ Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were [k] unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus.

14 And beholding the man which was healed standing with them, they could say nothing [l] against it.

15 But when they had commanded them to go aside out of the council, they conferred among themselves,

16 Saying, [m] What shall we do to these men? for that indeed a notable miracle hath been done by them is manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem; and we cannot deny it.

17 But that it spread no farther among the people, let us straitly threaten them, that [n] they speak henceforth to no man in this name.

18 And they called them, and commanded them not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus.

19 But Peter and John answered and said unto them, Whether it be right in the sight of God to [o] hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye.

20 For [p] we cannot but speak the things which [q] we have seen and heard.

21 So when they had farther threatened them, they let them go, finding nothing how they might punish them, because [r] of the people: for all men glorified God for that which was done.

22 For the man was above forty years old, on whom this miracle of healing was showed.

23 ¶ And being let go, they went [s] to their own company, and reported all that the chief priests and elders had said unto them.

24 And when they heard that, they lifted up their voice to God with one accord, and said, Lord, [t] thou art God, which hast made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is:

25 Who by the mouth of thy servant David hast said, Why [u] did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things?

26 The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against his Christ.

27 For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both [v] Herod, and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, 28 For [w] to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined [x] before to be done.

29 And now, Lord, behold their threatenings: and grant unto thy servants, that with all [y] boldness they may speak thy word, 30 By stretching forth thy hand to heal; and that [z] signs and wonders may be done by the name of thy holy child Jesus.

31 ¶ And when they had prayed, [a] the place was shaken where they were assembled together; and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and [b] they spake the word of God with boldness.

32 And the multitude of them that believed were of one [c] heart and of one soul: neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but [d] they had all things common.

33 And with great power [e] gave the apostles witness [f] of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace [g] was upon them all.

34 Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, 35 And [h] laid them down at the apostles' feet: and [i] distribution was made unto every man according as he had need.

friends to learning; but they were grieved that these men taught the common people; and particularly, that they preached "Jesus, and the resurrection from the dead." Jesus they hated equally with the Pharisees, and the resurrection from the dead formed no part of their creed. They therefore laid hands on the preachers, and the evening now drawing on, they were committed till the next morning. In the mean time we may remark, the Church continued to increase. Previous to the day of Pentecost we hear of only 120 believers in Jerusalem, though it is probable there were many more in Galilee: 3000 were at that time added, and 2000 more soon after.

Next morning the High Priest, with his relations and friends, (for he seems to have secured all the votes he could,) assembled in the council chamber, and called Peter and John before them, and demanded of them, "By what power, or by what name have ye done this?" Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, and armed with Christian courage, boldly answered, "Be it known unto you all, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand before you whole." Thus did Peter not only preach the same doctrine to the High Priest and the Sanhedrim that he had before preached to the common people, but he applied it in the same pointed terms—"Jesus of Nazareth, whom YE crucified, whom God raised from the dead. . . . He is become the head of the corner, (a phrase which they must, or at least ought, to have understood,) neither is there salvation in any other."

And is this Peter, who was but lately so alarmed at the question of a servant-maid, that he denied his Master? Yes; but he had now been filled with the Holy Ghost, and affords a happy example of what a change grace can make in men's characters and tempers. "Now, when they saw the boldness of Peter and John," well might they marvel; and especially when they "perceived that they were illiterate men," who had received no learned education; and persons "in private stations:" plain fishermen, the disciples of no Rabbi. But they recognised them as the disciples of Jesus Christ, who had been with him during the whole course of his ministry; and, as they doubtless stated, had seen him since he was risen from the dead. They beheld also the man which was healed standing before them, and they could say nothing against it. They were therefore puzzled and confounded; and, when they had sent them out of court, they considered among themselves what they should do; and resolved, as their only resource, to threaten and command them to speak no more in this name.

To this Peter and John nobly replied, as a model to all innocent and persecuted men, "Whether it be right in the sight of God, to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye For we cannot but speak the things which we have both seen and heard." This was an appeal to justice and to common sense that could not be denied, and it may afford a lesson to all the disciples of the same Master, that they ought by no means to conceal or disguise the truth—

> "But tell to all the nations round,
> What a great Saviour they have found."

CHAPTER V.

1 After that Ananias and Sapphira his wife for their hypocrisy at Peter's rebuke had fallen down dead, 12 and that the rest of the apostles had wrought many miracles, 14 to the increase of the faith: 17 the apostles are again imprisoned, 19 but delivered by an angel bidding them to preach openly to all: 21 when, after their teaching accordingly in the temple, 29 and before the council, 33 they are in danger to be killed, through the advice of Gamaliel, a great counsellor among the Jews, they be kept alive, 40 and are but beaten: for which they glorify God, and cease no day from preaching.

BUT a certain man named Ananias, with Sapphira his wife, sold a possession,

2 And kept back part of the price, his wife also being privy to it, and [a] brought a certain part, and laid it at the apostles' feet.

3 But Peter said, Ananias, why hath Satan [b] filled thy heart [c] to lie to [d] the Holy Ghost, and to keep [e] back part of the price of the land?

4 While it remained, was it not thine own? and after it was sold, was it not in thine own power? why hast thou conceived this thing in thy heart? thou hast not lied unto men, but [f] unto God.

5 And Ananias hearing these words [g] fell down, and gave up the ghost: and great [h] fear came on all them that heard these things.

6 And the young men arose, wound [i] him up, and carried him out, and buried him.

7 And it was about the space of three hours after, when his wife, not knowing what was done, came in.

8 And Peter answered unto her, Tell me whether ye sold the land for so much? And she said, Yea, for so much.

9 Then Peter said unto her, How is it that ye have agreed [j] together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord? behold, the feet of them which have buried thy husband are at the door, and shall carry thee out.

return to the church than they unite together in a hymn of praise, doubtless dictated to them by the Spirit of inspiration, and in which, therefore, they were unanimous—a hymn particularly worthy our attention, and on which we therefore proceed to remark—

1. That the apostles, in all their devotional exercises, recur to the Old Testament as their only model, both of sentiment and expression; and we have no hesitation in saying, that the more our prayers are imbued with Scripture sentiment and language, the more sublime and beautiful will they be in themselves, and, if uttered from the heart, the more acceptable to God. 2. In the time of our Saviour's incarnation, there was a grand confederacy against him, both of Jews and Gentiles; Caiaphas and the Priests, with Herod and Pontius Pilate, all conspired against him. 3. That the very object of their combination, though they knew it not, was the matter of the divine decrees, namely, the sufferings and death of the Lord Jesus; and all they did was but an undesigned fulfilment of the divine predictions.

"Look round, (says Bp. Hurd,) look round on the shifting scenes of glory which have been exhibited on the theatre of this world, and see the success of mighty conquerors, the policy of states, the destiny of empires, depend on the secret purpose of God in his Son Jesus; before whom all the achievements and imaginations of men must bow down; and to whose honour all the mysterious workings of his providence are now, have hitherto been, and will for ever be directed."

But to return to the contemplation of this primitive and parent church at Jerusalem: its distinguishing internal characteristics were unanimity and charity. "This section (says Preb. Townsend) presents us with a picture of what every Christian church ought to be, ... and probably will be, when the fulness of the Spirit shall be poured out in the last days. ... Here we meet with no factions or divisions on the part of the people: no jealousy—no party spirit—no desire of distinction disturbed the pure harmony of the primitive church. The apostles, as the spiritual fathers of God's household, without opposition, superintended all things, and directed the disposal of the extensive and benevolent contributions of the faithful. The first law of their divine Master was fulfilled—mutual and holy love was the sacred bond of their union, the ruling principle of their life and actions."

As to the community of goods, mentioned in chap. ii. 44, &c., and again here, it by no means appears to have been intended for a standing practice in the Christian church, for it is no where enjoined: nor is it desirable, for it would supersede the exercise of the most amiable grace of charity: for if the members of the church were all alike, rich or poor, they would have no opportunity to relieve each other; but our Lord told his apostles, "The poor ye have with you always, and, whensoever ye will, ye may do them good." (Mark xiv. 7.)

On the present case, Mr. Scott observes, that "Many of the converts were strangers, [as we before hinted,] who probably were detained at Jerusalem longer than they intended, in order to get a farther insight into the religion which they had embraced; and others were poor: the more affluent, therefore, of the company, were contented to share their abundance in common with their poorer brethren. This was a remarkable evidence of their indifference about the world; of their joy and confidence in the Lord; in his providential care, as well as in his mercy and grace; of their love and gratitude to him, and of their cordial affection to one another, though just before they had been strangers. ..... What a lovely exhibition [does this give us] of genuine Christianity, when applied and blessed by the Spirit of God! What excellent, and what happy characters does it form!" (Comm. in Acts ii. 44—47.)

Among the most liberal on this occasion was a Levite, afterwards known as the friend and companion of St. Paul, and who was surnamed Barnabas, which is rendered "a son of consolation;" but which, according to the Hebrew idiom, we should be inclined to explain "a kind-hearted man." This he evinced in being one of the first and most liberal contributors to this charitable fund, and it often, doubtless, appeared in his subsequent conduct. The estate he sold, however, could not be his patrimony as a Levite, but probably some estate in Cyprus, which he now left to devote himself to the ministry of the Gospel.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—16. The sin and punishment of Ananias and Sapphira, with the consequences thereof.—The opening of this chapter furnishes us, in the instance of Ananias and Sapphira, with a distressing contrast to the pious liberality of Barnabas, in the close of the preceding. From the distinct notice taken of his donation to the church, it is naturally supposed that the estate which he sold was somewhat considerable, and excited much attention. There are many professors who love applause, and when they find it excited by acts of generosity, will endeavour to ape them by an appearance of charity, without the principle; by certain acts of liberality adapted rather to draw the admiration of their brethren, than to relieve the necessities of the poor. This is hypocrisy; but hypocrisy was not the only crime of this unhappy pair; they also "lied to the Holy Ghost:" for, knowing that the apostles were inspired and acted under his influence, the deception which they attempted to practise upon them, was virtually an attempt to deceive Him, under whose influence, and by whose authority they acted. Therefore, said Peter, "Why hath Satan filled thy heart, to lie to the Holy Ghost?" That is, "Why hast thou suffered Satan thus to fill thy heart? for he is an enemy to be resisted, and ought to be resisted." The crime is then clearly stated. It was keeping back part of the purchase-money, and tendering the other part as the whole, in order to excite commendation. He was not obliged to sell: those who did, acted voluntarily, and from a principle of charity and kindness: when he had sold, he was not required to bring the money; or if he had brought part of it as a part, the rest would not have been required; it was bringing a part as the whole, and thereby attempting to deceive men who acted under the immediate influence of the Holy Spirit, that constituted the essence of their crime.

Ananias, who took the lead in this crime, was first punished, and in the most exemplary manner, for the deterring of others. He, in whose hands our life and breath is, has certainly the right to withdraw them when he pleases. O that we might think of this whenever Satan comes to tempt us: Sapphira coming in soon after her husband's death, (of which she was plainly ignorant,) had an opportunity to save herself, had she confessed the truth; but by confirming his falsehood, she participated in his crime.

> "Nothing but truth before his throne
> With honour can appear;
> The painted hypocrites are known
> Through the disguise they wear."—Watts.

Ver. 36. Joses (Heb. Joseph) . . . surnamed Barnabas. . . . . . The son of consolation.—But "the son of consolation" needs also interpretation; and we think the Heb. idiom will justify us in explaining, "a kind-hearted man." So on the other hand, "a son of Belial" is a morose and wicked man. 1 Sam. xxv. 17.——Cyprus.—[Cyprus is one of the largest islands of the Mediterranean, distant from the main land of Syria about 100 miles, and about 60 from Cilicia; extending in length from east to west about 200 miles, and in breadth 60; between lat. 34° 30′ and 35° 30′ N. and lon. 32° and 34° 35′ E. It was celebrated for its fertility, being, say Strabo and Ammianus, sufficiently provided with all things within itself; but it was as infamous for the worship of Venus, hence called Kypris, or Cypria, and for the luxury and debauchery of the inhabitants. The Jews were very numerous in this island.]—Bagster.

CHAP. V. Ver. 3. To lie to the Holy Ghost.—Marg. "to deceive." Doddridge, "To impose on the Holy Spirit." But this attempt to impose (or deceive) was by telling a falsehood: we therefore prefer the common rendering.

Ver. 4. Unto men—i. e. "unto men only." Compare Exod. xvi. 8. 1 Sam viii. 7.

Ver. 5. Gave up the ghost.—Doddridge, "Expired." So ver. 10. Voltaire so celebrated for wit and vice, has dressed up the story to make it ridiculous just as Nero did some of the Christians in pitch jackets, to burn them. If any

11 And [l] great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard these things

12 ¶ And by the hands of the apostles were [m] many signs and wonders wrought among the people; (and they were all with one accord in Solomon's porch.

13 And [n] of the rest durst no man join himself to them: but [o] the people magnified them.

14 And believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes [p] both of men and women.)

15 Insomuch that they brought forth the sick [q] into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that at the least the shadow of Peter passing by might overshadow some of them.

16 There came also a multitude out of the cities round about unto Jerusalem, bringing [r] sick folks, and them which were vexed with unclean spirits: and [s] they were healed every one.

17 ¶ Then the high priest rose up, and all they that were with him, (which is the sect of the [t] Sadducees,) and were filled with [u] indignation, 18 And laid their hands on the apostles, and put them in the common [v] prison.

19 But the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors, and brought them forth, and said, 20 Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all [w] the words [x] of this life.

21 And when they heard that, they entered into the temple early in the morning, and taught. But [y] the high priest came, and they that were with him, and called the council together, and all the senate of the children of Israel, and sent to the prison to have them brought.

22 But when the officers came, and found them not in the prison, they returned, and told,

23 Saying, The prison truly found we shut with all safety, and the keepers standing without before the doors: but when we had opened, we found no man within.

24 Now when the high priest and [z] the captain of the temple and the chief priests heard these things, they doubted of them whereunto this would grow.

25 Then came one and told them, saying, Behold, the men whom ye put in prison are standing in the temple, and teaching the people.

26 Then went the captain with the officers, and brought them without violence: for [a] they feared the people, lest they should have been stoned.

27 And when they had brought them, they set them before the council: and the high priest asked them,

28 Saying, Did not we [b] straitly command you that ye should not teach in this name? and, behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine, and intend to bring this man's blood [c] upon us.

29 ¶ Then Peter and the other apostles answered and said, We [d] ought to obey God rather than men.

30 The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye slew and hanged [e] on a tree.

31 Him hath God exalted [f] with his right hand to be a [g] Prince and a [h] Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins.

The consequences of these awful judgments from God were such as might naturally have been expected. "Great fear fell upon all the church," and not upon them only, but also "upon as many (others) as heard these things;" none of "the rest," therefore, who were not sincere converts, dare unite themselves with the believers. Another effect of this awful judgment was, that the people, fully satisfied of the miraculous powers of the apostles, brought their sick and demoniacs for cure, and, consequently, many signs and wonders were wrought among the people—all contributing to the enlargement and glory of the Christian church, which by this time was increased to 5000, or more persons, as stated in the preceding chapter, (verse 4.)

Ver. 17—42. The Apostles again imprisoned, and called to account before the Sanhedrim.—It is shocking to learn from Josephus himself, that many of the high priests were Sadducees; and from this man being surrounded with persons of that sect, it is very natural to suppose that this High Priest was one of them—God's high priest, believing neither in angel nor spirit, nor in the resurrection from the dead! (Acts xxiii. 8.) "The Sadducees (says the late excellent Milner) appear at this time to have had the chief sway in the Jewish state. These formed a licentious, worldly-minded sect; and in their opinions, they were the most corrupt of all those which at that time were maintained in Judea. The High Priest and his party were of this sect, and were filled with indignation to see the progress of the gospel. Their first step was to imprison the apostles, who by night, through the ministry of an angel, were set free, and ordered to preach in the temple. The next morning a full Sanhedrim was convened, and the apostles were ordered to be brought into court. An angel had opened the prison doors, and the court was astonished to find that the prisoners had escaped: they were, however, informed, that they were preaching in the temple. The favourable regard of the common people obliged the Sanhedrim to use some address in conducting their prisoners in a gentle manner before the court. The High Priest upbraids them with their disobedience to the former injunction of silence; to whom they returned their former answer, that they "ought to obey God rather than men." They bore witness to the resurrection of Christ, and declared that "God had exalted him with his right hand, to be a prince and a Saviour, to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins;" and that the Holy Ghost, "whom God bestows on those who obey him, witnessed" the same thing. With such plainness did these first Christians lay open the real nature of the gospel, and exhibit it as something extremely different from a mere system of morals, though it included all good morality in its nature. The testimony of Jesus, the forgiveness of sins through his blood, and the operations of the Holy Ghost, as they were doubtless the peculiarities of Christianity, so they were those things which most offended the Jewish rulers; and have been, indeed, the chief object of the enmity of unconverted men in all ages."

"The spirit of persecution was proceeding to exercise itself in violent counsels. There was, however, one Gamaliel among them, a Pharisee; of a sect not, indeed, inimical to the doctrine of a resurrection, and by no means so heterodox, in general, as the Sadducees, though, on the whole, agreeing with them in the hatred of Christianity. This man was judicious, learned, and respectable, and possessed much worldly prudence. Providence made an important use of him at this time, to prolong twelve most valuable lives, who were designed to spread the gospel through the world; and by their inspired writings (not one of which was yet published) to speak to us at this day. Gamaliel, by some authentic historical precedents, instructed the members of the court, that persons who rose up to propagate new sects, if not sent of God, were soon annihilated. He wished them to exercise forbearance persons wish to see his misrepresentations exposed, they may see this completely done in Dr. Finday's Vindication of the Sacred Books.

Ver. 11. And great fear.—There is some difficulty and obscurity in the arrangement of this and the following verses, to ver. 17. Doddridge, following our translators, places a part of verse 12, ("And they were all," &c.) to the end of verse 14, in a parenthesis, connecting verse 12 with verse 15, thus: "And by the hands of the apostles were many signs and wonders wrought; insomuch that they brought," &c. Dr. A. Clarke, and Preb. Townsend, arrange the verses thus:—11, 13, 14, 12, 15, &c. Bishop Sherlock, thus:—Verse 11 to 14, 12 part 2, 13, 12 part 1, 15, &c.

Ver. 12. Solomon's porch.—[Josephus informs us, that Solomon, when he built the temple, finding the area of Mount Moriah too small to answer his magnificent plan, filled up a part of the adjacent valley, and built an outward portico over it toward the east. This is what was called Solomon's Porch: it was a most noble structure, supported by a wall 400 cubits high, and consisting of stones of a vast bulk, being 20 cubits long, and six cubits high. It was probably left standing because of its grandeur and beauty; and Josephus speaks of it as continuing even to the time of Albinus and Agrippa.]—B.

Ver. 16. Them which were vexed with unclean spirits.—See note on Luke iv. 33.

Ver. 17. The sect of the Sadducees.—Are there now none, high in the church, and yet infidel in heart?

Ver. 20. The words of this life—i. e. of the eternal life they were commissioned to preach.

Ver. 23. We found no man within.—This shows that the apostles were put into a part of the prison by themselves.

Ver. 29. We ought to obey God.—[There is a passage, says Doddridge, on chap. iv. 19. which bears some resemblance to this, in the apology of Socrates, as recorded by Plato, which appears to me among the finest of antiquity. When they were condemning him to death for teaching the people, he said, "O ye Athenians, I embrace and love you; but I will obey God rather than you; and if you would dismiss me, and spare my life, on condition that I should cease to teach my fellow-citizens, I would rather die a thousand times than accept the proposal." What are ten thousand subtleties of the ancient philosophers, when compared with a sentiment like this!]—Bagster

Ver. 31. With his right hand.—Doddridge, "At his right hand."

32 And we are his witnesses [1] of these things; and so is also the [j] Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him.

33 ¶ When they heard that, they [k] were cut to the heart, and took counsel to slay them.

34 Then stood there up one in the council, a Pharisee, named [l] Gamaliel, a doctor of the law, had in reputation among all the people, and commanded to put the apostles forth a little space;

35 And said unto them, Ye men of Israel, take heed to yourselves what ye intend to do as touching these men.

36 For before these days [m] rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody; to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themselves: who was slain; and all, as many as [n] obeyed him, were scattered, and brought to nought.

37 After this man rose up Judas of Galilee in the days of the taxing, and drew away much people after him: he [o] also perished; and all, even as many as obeyed him, were dispersed.

38 And now I say unto you, Refrain from these men, and let them alone: [p] for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought:

39 But if [q] it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight [r] against God.

40 And to him they agreed: and when they had called the apostles, and [s] beaten them, they commanded [t] that they should not speak in the name of Jesus, and let them go.

41 ¶ And they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing [u] that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name.

42 And daily [v] in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER VI.

1 The apostles, desirous to have the poor regarded for their bodily sustenance, as also careful themselves to dispense the word of God, the food of the soul, 3 appoint the office of deaconship to seven persons chosen from 5 of whom Stephen, a man full of faith, and of the Holy Ghost, is one. 12 Who, by reason of those, whom he confoundeth in disputing, 13 and after falsely accused of blasphemy against the law and the temple.

AND in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians [a] against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in [b] the daily ministration.

2 Then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them, and said, It [c] is not reason that we should leave the word of God, and serve tables.

3 Wherefore, brethren, look [d] ye out among you seven men of [e] honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business.

4 But we will [f] give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word.

5 ¶ And the saying pleased the whole multitude: and they chose Stephen, a man full [g] of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and [h] Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and [i] Nicolas a proselyte of Antioch:

6 Whom they set before the apostles: and when [j] they had prayed, they [k] laid their hands on them.

7 ¶ And [l] the word of God increased; and the number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests [m] were obedient to the faith.

8 ¶ And Stephen, full of faith and power, did great wonders and miracles among the people.

9 Then there arose certain of the synagogue, which is called the synagogue of the Libertines, and Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, and and moderation towards the apostles, whose influence would soon come to nothing, if it were merely human; if divine, to attempt its destruction would be equally foolish and impious. This sage advice was followed, and the apostles were dismissed; but not without stripes, and a severe charge given them, no more to preach in the name of Jesus. They ceased not, however, to "teach and preach Jesus Christ; and rejoiced that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name."

We must not here forget to remark, that this Gamaliel was the tutor of St. Paul, who was brought up at his feet, and perhaps had not yet finished his Jewish studies: but how little did this man think that he was now training up a youth, who, but in little more than a year, should come forward as the champion of that Jesus, and that Gospel, which they were now considering the best means to suppress. Perhaps even Saul himself was now present, attending on his master: perhaps in his own mind censuring his cautious coolness, and anticipating the day when he might be at liberty to persecute the professors of this new sect. But Jesus was exalted on high, "to give repentance to Israel;" and the hour of Saul's conversion was fast approaching.

Though Gamaliel was evidently an enemy of Jesus, yet the temper and moderation of his advice, in this instance, has been commended more frequently than copied; but we have more to admire in the providence of God, who now raised up to the disciples of Jesus an unexpected advocate, and one who, by his prudence, for a while checked the fury of his brethren. "So does God sometimes use the good sense and temper of those who do not themselves receive the Gospel, for the protection of those who are faithfully devoted to his service." Doddridge.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—15. Seven deacons chosen, and why.—Stephen (one of them) falsely accused.—The church was now much enlarged, consisting partly of native, and partly of foreign Jews, who used the Greek language, (and were) on that account called Hellenists, or Grecians. These supposed that, in the daily supply of the poor, the apostles had not ministered equal relief to their widows as to those of the Hebrews. Men who know any thing of the work of God, in the visitation of his Holy Spirit, and have any acquaintance with the fulness of employ, which Christian ministers have in great and populous cities, in instructing, warning, consoling, and directing awakened and serious minds, will not wonder, if, through inadvertence, some temporary neglects might have taken place. The apostles, however, with great mildness and wisdom, soon regulated this affair. They informed the disciples that the ministry of the word of God must be attended to in the first place, and must not be neglected for the sake of providing for the poor. They therefore advised the disciples to look out for seven holy and wise men, to whom this business should be committed. "But we (say they) will give ourselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the word." . . . . . The whole multitude consented with pleasure, and seven deacons were amicably elected, who are above enumerated, and who, from their Greek names, are

Ver. 33. They were cut to the heart—i. e. with vexation; not pierced to the heart with conviction, as those in chap. ii. 37, but as it were sawn (to the heart) with vexation. (See Parkhurst in Diaprio.)

Ver. 34. Gamaliel.—The elder of that name, a man in so high honour among the Jews, that Onkelos (author of the Targum) is said to have burnt 70lbs. weight of perfumes at his funeral. Nay, it is said, the honour of the law failed in him.—Doddridge.

Ver. 36. Theudas.—[This was probably the same with the Judas, (for Jude is called Thaddeus, Mat. iii. 18.) of whom Josephus says, that "a little after the death of Herod the great, he raised an insurrection in Galilee, and aimed at getting the sovereignty of Judea," and that he was defeated and put to death.]—Baxter.

Ver. 37. Judas of Galilee.—[Judas the Gaulonite, as he is termed by Josephus, opposed the levying of taxes by Cyrenius; but he was soon cut off, and all his followers dispersed.]—Baxter.

Ver. 42. In every house.—It was long after this before any places of worship were expressly built for Christians; but in every house there was a worshipping family; frequently several of them united, and thus, by degrees, the house became a church. See 1 Co. xvi. 19.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1. The Grecians—Commonly called Hellenists; namely, foreign Jews, who used the Greek language, both in their synagogues, and in their common conversation; whereas those called Hebrews used the then Hebrew, or Syro-Chaldaic. So Doddridge, Campbell, Scott, and most others.

Ver. 3. Among you—i. e. among the body of believers: so Drs Hammond and Whitby; but Preb. Townsend and others think they were chosen from the seventy disciples, of which, however, we have no decisive proof. We incline to think, they were chosen specially from among the complaining Hellenists, since the names seem all of Greek extraction.

Ver. 5. Nicolas, a proselyte of Antioch—Might be chosen to gratify certain proselytes among those who had complained.

Ver. 6. Laid their hands on them—As expressive both of their approbation, consecration, and their blessing; not of conferring on them the Holy Spirit; the electors were to choose only men "full of the Holy Ghost." Verse 3.

Ver. 7. A great company.—The priests, on their return from captivity, were between four and five thousand; Ezra iii. 36—39; and the number was probably much increased.

Ver. 8. Full of faith, &c.—Doddridge, "Full of grace," &c.; who adds, "so many valuable copies, read grace instead of faith, that I thought myself obliged to follow them." So Boothroyd.

Ver. 9. The synagogue of the Libertines, &c.—This appears to us to be a synagogue for foreigners of the different countries here named. The Libertines are admitted to be liberated slaves, or their children, at Rome, of which there appear to have been so great a number, that 4000 were sent to Sardinia, others to different parts, and the rest banished to Judea; but the synagogue does not appear to have been restricted to these, but was frequented by Cyrenians, Alexandrians, &c., some of whom had probably a taste for the Greek philosophy. Lardner thinks that each of these parties had a synagogue, which is not unlikely, if, as the Jews say, they had 480 synagogues in Jerusalem of them of Cilicia and of Asia, disputing with Stephen.

10 And they were not able [n] to resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he spake.

11 Then they suborned [o] men, which said, We have heard him speak blasphemous words against Moses, and against God.

12 And they stirred up the people, and the elders, and the scribes, and came upon him, and caught him, and brought him to the council,

13 And set up false witnesses, which said, This man ceaseth not to speak blasphemous words against this holy place, and the law:

14 For [p] we have heard him say, that this Jesus of Nazareth shall [q] destroy this place, and shall change the [r] customs which Moses delivered us.

15 And all that sat in the council, looking steadfastly on him, saw his [s] face as it had been the face of an angel.

CHAPTER VII.

1 Stephen, permitted to answer to the accusation of blasphemy, 2 showeth that Abraham worshipped God rightly, and how God chose the fathers, 20 before Moses was born, and before the tabernacle and temple were built: 37 that Moses himself witnessed of Christ: 41 and that all outward ceremonies were ordained according to the heavenly pattern, to last but for a time: 51 reproveth their rebellion, and murdering of Christ, the just One, whom the prophets foretold should come into the world: 54 Whereupon they stone him to death, who commendeth his soul to Jesus, and bowing by prayeth for them.

THEN said the high priest, Are these things so?

2 And he said, [a] Men, brethren, and fathers, hearken; The God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran,

3 And said [b] unto him, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I shall show thee.

4 Then [c] came he out of the land of the Chaldeans, and dwelt in Charran: and from thence, when his father was dead, he removed him into this land, wherein ye now dwell.

5 And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on: yet he promised [d] that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child.

6 And God spake on this wise, That [e] his seed should sojourn in a strange land; and that they should bring them into bondage, and entreat them evil four [f] hundred years.

7 And the nation to whom they shall be in bondage will I judge, said God: and after that shall they come forth, and serve [g] me in this place.

8 And [h] he gave him the covenant of circumcision: and so [i] Abraham begat Isaac, and circumcised him the eighth day; and Isaac [j] begat Jacob; and Jacob [k] begat the twelve patriarchs.

9 ¶ And the patriarchs, moved with [l] envy, sold Joseph into Egypt: but [m] God was with him,

10 And delivered him out of all his afflictions, and gave him favour and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and he [n] made him governor over Egypt and all his house.

11 Now [o] there came a dearth over all the land of Egypt and Canaan, and great affliction: and our fathers found no sustenance.

12 But [p] when Jacob heard that there was corn in Egypt, he sent out our fathers first.

13 And at the second time Joseph [q] was made known to his brethren; and Joseph's kindred was made known unto Pharaoh.

14 Then sent Joseph, and called his father Jacob to him, and all [r] his kindred, threescore and fifteen souls.

15 So Jacob went down into Egypt, and died, he, and our fathers, supposed to have been all (or most of them) Hellenists. "In this easy way (says Milner) the first appearances of contention were blasted in the church; and seven coadjutors were appointed to the apostles, some of whom, at least, were of signal service, not only in temporal, but also in spiritual things."

It has been doubted whether these were all employed in the Christian ministry. Those who think so, consider them as chosen from among "the seventy," of which, however, there is no direct proof: others observing them as chosen expressly to "serve tables" and provide for the poor, consider them as merely laymen, though some of them were afterwards called to the exercise of the Christian ministry, particularly Stephen and Philip.

Wishing, as we do, to avoid all unnecessary controversies, we shall merely observe, that, in this age of inspiration, the Holy Spirit was so generally poured out on believers, that we feel it difficult to conceive of any persons eminent for wisdom and piety, not being employed, more or less, in the edification of the church and the propagation of the Gospel; but we shall not take upon us to say how far this is to be considered as a model to present times.

Stephen, however, one of the deacons, was evidently endowed with the talents and spirit of an apostle, which exposed him, not only to a share in their persecutions, but raised him to the honour of being the first Christian martyr.

We now find the church of God rapidly increasing, particularly at Jerusalem, where a great (or considerable) number of the priests believed, which has been thought incredible. But "why should it be thought incredible that God should raise the dead" spiritually, any more than literally? (Acts xxvi. 8.) Indeed, the manner in which the apostles were enabled to explain the prophecies, in which we may naturally suppose the priests to be conversant, would naturally lead to such an expectation, especially when all the discourses of the apostles were confirmed by miracles, and miracles generally of the same benevolent character as those of their divine Master.

Stephen also, though not an apostle, we have remarked, ranks in every point of view on a level with them; for he was "full of faith and power, and did great wonders and miracles among the people." There was, however, in the city, a synagogue, or perhaps several synagogues, of foreign Jews, some of whom (particularly those from Alexandria) might have a fondness for dispute, and therefore eagerly engaged in controversy with St. Stephen; but, being foiled, were so aggravated, that they sought revenge in charging him with blasphemy in predicting the ruin of the temple and city; but were probably guilty of the same kind of misrepresentation as those who accused our Lord himself before Caiaphas. (See Mat. xxvii. 61.) When men are determined, right or wrong, to make good a charge, it is not difficult to put their own construction on almost any thing. But they must have been sadly disconcerted, when, "looking steadfastly on his countenance," they saw in it a sweet and divine placidness, like that of a celestial being; in addition to which, some have supposed it to have been surrounded with a heavenly radiance.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—29. Stephen's defence before the sanhedrim.—Stephen being now called upon to make his defence before the highest court of the Jews, proceeds as follows:

First, he begins by endeavouring to convince the Jews of their mistake relative to the promise given to Abraham and his seed, which they interpreted solely in relation to temporal blessings; but he endeavours to demonstrate to them, by "a recapitulation of the history of the patriarchs, that such could not have been the meaning of the prediction; for even their father, Abraham, (he argues,) to whom the land [of Canaan] was first promised, had none inheritance in it; no, not so much as to set his foot on." The other patriarchs, in the same manner, passed a life of pilgrimage and affliction, and never attained to the blessed inheritance. Abraham, the father of the faithful, and the friend of God, had no possession till his death; then only he began to take possession of his purchase, [i. e. "the grave which he had bought." Gen. xxv. 9:] clearly intimating the spiritual signification of the promised Canaan. Moses had a prospect of that land, but he

Ver. 11. Blasphemous words.—Campbell, would render it, "reviling words," as they did not amount to blasphemy. True; but they might represent them as such in aggravation.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 2. When he was in Mesopotamia.—[Both Ur of the Chaldees, and Haran, were, properly speaking, in Mesopotamia, though Haran was much nearer to Canaan than Ur was.]—Bagster.——Charran—Or "Haran," Gen xi. 31, 32.

Ver. 4. When his father was dead.—[From Ge. xi. 26, it appears that Abraham was born when Terah was 70 years of age; and he departed from Haran when 75, (Ge. xii. 4;) while Terah lived to the age of 205 years, (Ge. xi. 32.) Instead of 205, however, the Samaritan has 145, which reconciles this discrepancy; but it is not improbable, that Abram was in reality born when his father Terah was 130 years old; and that he is merely mentioned first in Ge. xi. 26. by way of dignity.]—Bagster.

Ver. 5. So much as to set his foot on.—To this it is objected, that he purchased a family grave of the sons of Heth; Gen. xxv. 17. True; but, 1. A grave is a place for a man to lay his bones, and not to set his feet. 2. Even this he bought, notwithstanding the whole country had been made over to him by Divine promise. 3. The expression is evidently proverbial, and means that he had no ground whereon he might either build or walk.

Ver. 6. Four hundred years.—[Stephen here uses the round number 400, leaving out the odd tens; for it is evident, from the parallel passages, as well as Josephus, that the real number of years was 430.]—Bagster.

Ver. 14. Threescore and fifteen.—[In the Hebrew text, the number of per-

16 And [s] were carried over into Sychem, and laid in the sepulchre that Abraham bought for a sum of money of the sons of Emmor the father of Sychem.

17 ¶ But when the time of the promise drew nigh, which God had sworn to Abraham, the people [t] grew and multiplied in Egypt, 18 Till another king arose, which knew not Joseph.

19 The same dealt subtly with our kindred, and evil entreated our fathers, so [u] that they cast out their young children, to the end they might not live.

20 In which time Moses [v] was born, and was [w] exceeding fair, and nourished up in his father's house three months:

21 And when he was cast out, Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and [x] nourished him for her own son.

22 And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and [y] was mighty in words and in deeds.

23 And [z] when he was full forty years old, it came into his heart to visit his brethren the children of Israel.

24 And seeing one of them suffer wrong, he defended him, and avenged him that was oppressed, and smote the Egyptian:

25 [a] For he supposed his brethren would have understood how that God by his hand would deliver them: but they understood not.

26 And the next day he showed himself unto them as they strove, and would have set them at one again, saying, Sirs, ye are brethren; why do ye wrong one to another?

27 But he that did his neighbour wrong thrust him away, saying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us?

28 Wilt thou kill me, as thou didst the Egyptian yesterday?

29 Then fled Moses at this saying, and was a stranger in the land of Madian, where he begat two sons.

30 And [b] when forty years were expired, there appeared to him in the wilderness of mount Sina an angel of the Lord in a flame of fire in a bush.

31 When Moses saw it, he wondered at the sight: and as he drew near to behold it, the voice of the Lord came unto him, 32 Saying, I am the [c] God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. Then Moses trembled, and durst not behold.

33 Then said the Lord to him, Put [d] off thy shoes from thy feet: for the place where thou standest is holy ground.

34 I have seen, I have seen the affliction of my people which is in Egypt, and I have heard their groaning, and am come down to deliver them. And now come, I will send thee into Egypt.

35 This Moses whom they refused, saying, Who made thee a ruler and a judge? the same did God send to be a ruler and a deliverer by the hand of the [e] angel which appeared to him in the bush.

36 He brought them out, after [f] that he had showed wonders and signs in the land of Egypt, and in the Red sea, and in the wilderness forty [g] years.

37 ¶ This is that Moses, which said [h] unto the died before he could attain to it; and all those who came out of Egypt with him, without even a glimpse of it, fell through unbelief in the wilderness. The righteous only hath hope in his death. The eminent characters here brought forward by Stephen, may be considered (as Mr. Jones, of Nayland, remarks) as signs so exactly suited to the thing signified, as if the truth itself had been acted beforehand. In Joseph, says Preb. Townsend, we see a man wise, innocent, and great, hated by his brethren, and sold for a slave to heathen Egyptians. In his humiliation he was exalted. Heathens, to whom he had been given over, bowed the knee before him—his own family were preserved from perishing—he became the Saviour of all—administering to them bread, the emblem of life; and to him every knee bowed, both of his own kindred and of strangers. He was tempted, and triumphed; he was persecuted and imprisoned under a malicious and false accusation; he was not actually crucified, but he suffered with two malefactors, and promised life to one of them, and delivered himself by the Divine Spirit that was given to him. He was seen twice by his brethren: the first time they knew him not, but the second he was made known unto them. And thus, we trust, it will be at some future day, when the brethren of Jesus Christ shall become like the brethren of Joseph, sensible of their crime, and say with them, in the bitterness of their souls, "We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul.... and we would not hear: therefore have all our evils come upon us."—(Townsend's New Test. Arr.)

This strain of typical reasoning may seem strange to us, but was perfectly familiar to Jewish Priests and Rabbies, and would have been received as demonstration on any point that did not oppose their worldly prejudices and preconceived opinions. Of this we have sufficient evidence in what follows respecting Moses; for when he avenged his countryman in Egypt, and smote the offender, "He (Moses) supposed his brethren would have understood, how that God by his hand would deliver them." He intended it as an allegorical and prophetic action, such as was common among the Hebrews; "but they," having lost their Hebrew notions and modes of reasoning, "understood not" his design, but said, "Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us?" as the Jews did virtually to the Messiah; and thus the fathers protracted their deliverance, as their descendants have since done, to a long future day. For though the Jews who crucified their Lord, as a nation "brought upon themselves swift destruction;" yet is there hope in Israel "concerning this matter: for the Lord hath not" finally nor totally "cast away his [ancient] people." (Rom. xi. 1, &c.)

Ver. 30—53. The continuation of Stephen's defence.—Taking up this discourse where we left it, Stephen now comes to the delivery of the law at mount Sinai—their passage through the wilderness, and their entrance on the promised land; and he endeavours to prove to his persecutors, that they were following the same perverse course by which their fathers had formerly brought the most awful judgments upon themselves. This they did in rejecting him whom God had sent to be "a Prophet like unto Moses"—"a Prince and a Saviour," to deliver them from their sins. And whereas their fathers were perpetually falling back into idolatry, making to themselves gods of their own choice to worship; and this both when they knew Moses was gone up into the divine presence on mount Sinai, and even during all the forty years they were wandering through the wilderness; when, it seems, they secretly carried their idols with them, even as their mother Rachel had formerly done, unknown to Jacob, when she left her father's house. (Gen. xxxi. 19, &c.)

"It is evident (says Preb. Townsend) that, through every part of this discourse, the object Stephen had in view was, to represent to his countrymen the nature of Christ's religion, and to set before them, in the most touching manner, his sufferings, and their own conduct, which was an aggravated completion of the crimes of their ancestors. For which, says the martyr, with indignant eloquence, 'Which of the prophets have not your fathers persecuted? and they have slain them sons is threescore and ten; but Stephen quotes from the Septuagint, which adds the five sons of Ephraim and Manasseh to the account.]—Bagster.

Ver. 16. That Abraham bought.—[Of the two burying places of the patriarchs, one was at Hebron, the cave and field which Abraham purchased of Ephron the Hittite, (Gen. xxiii. 16, &c.;) the other in Sychem, which Jacob (not Abraham) bought of the sons of Emmor, (Gen. xxxiii. 19.) To remove this glaring discrepancy, Markland interprets para, from, as it frequently signifies with a genitive, and renders, "And were carried over to Sychem; and afterwards from among the descendants of Emmor, the father, or son, of Sychem, they were laid in the sepulchre which Abraham bought for a sum of money." This agrees with the account which Josephus gives of the patriarchs; that they were carried out of Egypt, first to Sychem, and then to Hebron, where they were buried.]—Bagster.

Ver. 20. Moses—The illustrious legislator and prophet of the Hebrews, who led the Israelites to the borders of the promised land.—Exceeding fair.—"Fair to God:" where the name of God is considered as an adjective, and might perhaps be rendered "divinely fair." See Exod. ii. 2.

Ver. 22. All the wisdom of the Egyptians.—This may be fairly inferred, from his being educated as the son of Pharaoh's daughter. See Heb. xi. 24.

Ver. 23. Forty years old.—[This was a general tradition among the Jews:—"Moses was forty years in Pharaoh's court, forty years in the land of Midian, and forty years he served Israel."]—Bagster.

Ver. 29. Madian—Or, "Midian." Ex. ii. 16.

Ver. 30. Mount Sina—Or "Sinai." See Ex. iii. 2, &c.; called also Horeb, a famous mountain of Arabia the Rocky, thought to be about 10,000 feet in height.

children of Israel, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, [i] like unto me; him [j] shall ye hear.

38 This [k] is he, that was in the church in the wilderness with the angel [l] which spake to him [m] in the mount Sina, and with our fathers: who [n] received [o] the lively oracles to give unto us:

39 To whom our fathers would not obey, but thrust him from them, and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt,

40 Saying [p] unto Aaron, Make us gods to go before us: for as for this Moses, which brought us out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him.

41 And they made a calf [q] in those days, and offered sacrifice unto the idol, and rejoiced in the works of their own hands.

42 Then God turned, and gave [r] them up to worship the [s] host of heaven; as it is written [t] in the book of the prophets, O ye house of Israel, have ye offered to me slain beasts and sacrifices by the space of forty years in the wilderness?

43 Yea, ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your god Remphan, figures which ye made to worship them: and I will carry you away beyond Babylon.

44 ¶ Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness, as he had appointed, [u] speaking unto Moses, that [v] he should make it according to the fashion that he had seen.

The truth and justice of the dying Stephen's appeal was too severely .... felt, for the Jews not to have a perfect knowledge of its intention and individual application; and unless it is considered in this light, it will be difficult to account for the powerful sensation it occasioned."

The holy martyr having adverted to the temple built by Solomon; reminds them, that the Most High confines not his presence to temples made with hands; as he has said, "Heaven is my throne, and earth is my footstool: what house will ye build me, saith the Lord, and where is the place of my rest?" Intimating that he was under no obligation to them for their temple, though it had been as splendid as that of Solomon; nor must they trust to it for protection, since it was built by human hands, and might be shivered to atoms in a moment, by Him who made "the earth his footstool."

"The destruction of the Jewish temple imparts this impressive lesson to every christian nation and individual, that the trueness of a church does not constitute its safety; but that the continuance of the divine blessing is only secured by the maintenance of a pure faith and consistent conduct. The temple itself was to be esteemed and valued as the habitation of the divine presence, making the building holy—in the same way that our bodies are sanctified and purified, and are made the temples of the Holy Ghost, by the Spirit of grace within us. If, with the Jews, ... we resist the holy influences of God, his presence will be withdrawn from us, and we shall bring down upon our earthly tabernacle the same fearful and inevitable destruction which was poured down upon the temple of Jerusalem. We shall be delivered over to the hand of the enemy." (New Test. Arr.)

Ver. 54—60. The death of Stephen.—The last sentence Stephen was allowed to utter was in connexion with the charge of murdering the Son of God; and this was done by you (as if he had said) who "received the law by the disposition of angels, and (yet) have not kept it."—That is, though the law was delivered with so much awful majesty that Moses "exceedingly quaked and trembled;" (Heb. xii. 21;) yet no sooner had the thunder ceased and the lightnings been withdrawn, than they totally neglected the commands that had been delivered. And thus, at the death of our Lord, though the most stout-hearted must have been appalled, as the Roman centurion was, at the earthquake and the thick darkness; yet, perhaps, they so far misinterpreted the signs of heaven, as to consider these indicative of the frowns of God upon the illustrious sufferer. However this might be, no sooner was the awful scene closed, than these hardened priests went to Pilate, to obtain means to secure the body which they had crucified. This charge of obduracy and rebellion against God, roused all their evil passions. They were "sawn (as it were) to the heart, and gnashed on him with their teeth;" while he, "full of the Holy Ghost," and favoured with a celestial vision, calmly said—"Behold! I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God!"

They could now refrain no longer, but with a loud voice, and stopping their ears against reply, rushed upon him with one accord, and driving him without the gates of the city, stoned him. So "they stoned Stephen, calling upon, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit!" and then kneeling down, he added, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge:" after this he fell asleep, and thus died, in the very act of worshipping Jesus Christ.

The eccentric, but admirable Lavater, thus depicts the feelings of Saul on this occasion:—

"Stephen, I confess, was such a man as I never before beheld: he appeared as innocent as a child, wise as gray-headed age, courageous as a hero, and true to what he deemed the truth as a prophet of old. His learning was great, his eloquence powerful, his conviction inflexible, his fortitude unshaken. His love for Jesus, the Son of man, (as he called him,) was most pure. Could I have forgotten he was a Nazarene, I would have fallen on his neck and kissed him. What most affected me (I tell thee all, even what appears to make against me) was his look in the assemblies of priests; still more when he was led out to death: but, above all, when the witnesses against him took off their garments; that look which he cast on those, who, as I believe, were with justice most inveterate against him. On me, in particular, he turned his eyes more than once with such affection, so sorrowfully tender, so tremblingly compassionate, as if he would have called me, with his looks, from the brink of an abyss. I cannot, I will not deny, that this look pierced me to the heart; that for a moment I seemed to forget myself, and shuddered, while the thought darted like a flash of lightning through my mind: 'Thus a holy one of God might look: thus one of the prophets, whom Israel put to death!' But as we instantly draw back our foot when we see an adder in the path, I shuddered at these thoughts and feelings, the natural effects of humanity. I collected all the strength of religion and virtue I possessed, to quell whatever might move me toward the worshipper of one who denied God: for a mere man, who makes himself a god, denies God." (Lavater's Letters of St. Paul.)

If such were the feelings of Stephen's persecutors, they

CHAPTER VIII.

1 By occasion of the persecution in Jerusalem, the church being planted in Samaria, 5 by Philip the deacon, who preached, and miracles, am i baptized many, among the rest Simon the sorcerer, a great seducer of the people. 14 Peter and John come to confirm and enlarge the church, where, by prayer and imposition of hands giving the Holy Ghost, 18 when Simon would have bought the gift of it, 20 Peter sharply reproving his hypocrisy and covetousness, and exhorting him to repentance, together with 25 him preaching the word of the Lord, return to Jerusalem. 26 But the angel sendeth Philip to teach and baptize the Ethiopian eunuch.

AND [a] Saul was consenting unto his death. And at that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and they were all scattered [b] abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles.

2 And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him.

3 As for Saul, he [c] made havoc of the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women committed them to prison.

4 Therefore they that were scattered abroad went every where preaching the word.

5 Then Philip [d] went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them.

6 And the people with one accord [e] gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, [f] hearing and seeing the miracles which he did.

7 For [g] unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with [h] palsies, and that were [i] lame, were healed.

8 And there was great joy in that city.

9 ¶ But there was a certain man, called Simon, which beforetime in the same city used [j] sorcery, and bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out [k] that himself was some great one:

10 To whom [l] they all gave heed, from the least to the greatest, saying, This man is the great power of God.

11 And to him they had regard, because that of long time he had bewitched [m] them with sorceries.

12 But when they believed [n] Philip preaching the things [o] concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women.

13 Then Simon himself believed also: and when he was baptized, he continued with Philip, and wondered, beholding the [p] miracles and signs which were done.

14 ¶ Now when the apostles which were at must naturally consider him as a blasphemer, when they heard his prayer to the Lord Jesus. "I shall always insist (says Bp. Horsley in his answer to Priestley) that the blessed Stephen died a martyr to the Deity of Christ. The accusation against him was 'his speaking blasphemous things against the temple and the law.' You have forgotten to add the charge of blasphemy 'against Moses and against God.' The blasphemy against the temple and the law, probably consisted in a prediction that the temple was to be destroyed, and the ritual law, of course, abolished. The blasphemy against Moses was, probably, his assertion that the authority of Moses was inferior to that of Christ. But what could be the blasphemy against God? What was there in the doctrine of the apostles which could be interpreted as blasphemy against God, except it was this, that they ascribed divinity to one who had suffered publicly as a malefactor? That this was the blessed Stephen's crime, none can doubt who attends to the conclusion of the story:—'He looked up steadfastly into heaven,' says the inspired historian, 'and saw the glory of God, (that is, he saw the splendour of the Shechinah; for that is what is meant when the glory of God is mentioned, as something to be seen,) and Jesus standing on the right hand of God.' He saw the man Jesus in the midst of this divine light. His declaring what he saw, the Jewish rabble understood as an assertion of the divinity of Jesus. They stopped their ears; they overpowered his voice with their own clamours; and they hurried him out of the city, to inflict upon him the death which the law appointed for blasphemers. He died as he had lived, attesting the Deity of our crucified Master. His last breath was uttered in a prayer to Jesus; first for himself, and then for his murderers. 'They stoned Stephen, calling upon (God) and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit: and he cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge.'"

Only one other circumstance in this chapter calls for our remark, namely, the vision which Stephen had of the Lord Jesus, which we consider of a nature similar with those of the prophets Isaiah and Ezekiel, and certainly intended for his support and encouragement in the hour of death; and it is remarkable that, in this instance, the Lord Jesus is not represented in the usual posture of sitting, but as standing, as if in the act of intercession; or, perhaps, as intimating to the dying martyr, that he was ready to receive the precious deposit he was committing to his hands.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—25. The church being dispersed by persecution, carry the gospel with them. The sin and danger of Simon Magus.—It may appear paradoxical, but there seems truth in the intimation of Milner, that this persecution was, in great measure, owing to the Romans having taken off all restraint from the priestly government of the Jews, who seem now to have vented their rage against the Christians without control. Among the agents in this cruel business, the most active and zealous was a young man already mentioned, whose name was Saul; and though, perhaps, he was not actually engaged in stoning Stephen, as not being one of the witnesses; yet he took care of their clothes while so engaged, and was not only content, but well pleased with the execution. So much so, that he now signalized himself as the chief persecutor of the time, and made havoc of the church, as a wild beast does of a flock, when he breaks into a sheep-fold. He entered into every house he could find where the Christians held their assemblies, and "haling" thence "men and women," without regard to age or sex, committed them. The prisons would, however, at this time, contain only a small part of the Christians; but the others being threatened, were scattered abroad throughout the surrounding country. Thus the wrath of man fulfilled the purposes of God; and the very means used to suppress the gospel contributed to its wider propagation.

Among others, Philip, one of Stephen's fellow-deacons, went down into Samaria, and there preached and wrought miracles, which occasioned great joy in that city. A certain man, called Simon Magus, (or the Magician,) had resided there some time, and by practising the arts of sorcery, had so far bewitched the people, that he was considered by them an extraordinary person—"the great power of God!" When, however, they heard Philip, they soon perceived a vast difference; and the spirit of God attending his ministry, they were converted, and then baptized. Even Simon himself was so

Ver. 59. They stoned Stephen.—Dr. Lardner, whose opinion we have before cited, John xviii. 31, considers this and all other similar instances, as riotous and unlawful acts. He says, "The Jewish people, at this time, seem to have made no scruple of stoning a man immediately, without any trial." Mr. Milner accounts for their conduct in the following manner. He says, "Pilate having been disgraced, Judea seems at this time to have been without a procurator; and Vitellius, the governor of Syria, was a man of great moderation toward the Jews . . . . . who were now left to themselves, at least in religious concerns, and Stephen was their first Christian victim."

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1. And Saul.—[This clause evidently belongs to the conclusion of the preceding chapter: there is scarcely a worse division of chapters than this.]—Bagster.

Ver. 3. He made havoc of the church.—The word which our translators have rendered "made havoc," properly signifies to ravage as a wild beast. It is thus used in the Septuagint, Dan. vi. 22, of lions; and in Ps. lxxix. 14, of the wild boar.—Townsend.

Ver. 5. The city of Samaria.—[Rather, "To a city of Samaria," for the city of Samaria had been utterly destroyed by Hyrcanus, and the city built by Herod on its site was called Augusta, in honour of Augustus. Samaria comprised the tract of country formerly occupied by the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh west of Jordan, lying between Judea and Galilee; beginning, says Josephus, at Ginea in the great plain, and ending at the toparchy of Acrabateni.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Unclean spirits, crying, &c.—Compare Matthew x. 1. Mark iii. 11, &c.

Ver. 9. And bewitched—Rather, "astonished." This is the same word that, in ver. 13, is rendered, "wondered," and implies, that he excited great astonishment, as magicians and conjurors are wont to do. Simon was affected by Philip's miracles, as the people had been by Simon's wonders; and perhaps thought him a practitioner in the same art, but of higher attainments. See ver. 19.—Some great one.—Probably wishing it to be understood, that he was the Messiah, in opposition to Jesus. Some of the fathers say, that to different characters he represented himself under the names of the three persons of the Trinity: but this, we conceive, must have been after his apostacy. See Doddridge.

Ver. 13. Then Simon.—[This Simon was probably, as several learned men suppose, the same who is mentioned by Josephus, as persuading Drusilla to leave her husband, and live with Felix.]—Bagster.

A. M. 4036. A. D. 32.

Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John:

15 Who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost:

16 (For as [q] yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were [r] baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.)

17 Then laid [s] they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.

18 ¶ And when Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them [t] money, 19 Saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost.

20 But Peter said unto him, Thy money perish with thee, because [u] thou hast thought that the gift [v] of God may be purchased with money.

21 Thou hast neither part [w] nor lot in this matter: for [x] thy heart is not right in the sight of God.

22 Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if [y] perhaps the thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee.

23 For I perceive that thou art in the gall of [z] bitterness, and in the bond [a] of iniquity.

24 Then answered Simon, and said, Pray [b] ye to the Lord for me, that none of these things which ye have spoken come upon me.

25 And they, when they had testified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans.

26 ¶ And the angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise, and go toward the south unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto [c] Gaza, which is desert.

27 And he arose and went: and, behold, a man of [d] Ethiopia, a [e] eunuch of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, and had come [f] to Jerusalem for to worship, 28 Was returning, and sitting in his chariot read Esaias the prophet.

29 Then [g] the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot.

30 And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read the prophet Esaias, and said, Understandest [h] thou what thou readest?

31 And he said, How [i] can I, except some man should [j] guide me? And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him.

32 The place of the scripture which he read was [k] this, He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth:

33 In his humiliation his judgment was taken away: and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth.

34 And the eunuch answered Philip, and said, I pray thee, of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?

35 Then Philip opened his mouth, and began overwhelmed with the evidence of a truly divine power in Philip, that he was convinced of the truth of the gospel, and became one of his followers. What, however, most surprised him, and eventually discovered his hypocrisy, was, that when the apostles Peter and John came to visit Philip and the new converts, upon their praying for, and laying their hands upon them, the same extraordinary gifts were bestowed on others also. Astonished at this, anxious to possess these gifts, and finding that the apostles did not offer to do the same for him, (being probably suspicious of him,) he offered money to be endowed with the like powers that the apostles were; intending, no doubt, to make thereof a profit. Peter, on hearing this, exclaimed with a holy indignation, "Thy money perish with thee! because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money! . . . . I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and bond of iniquity;"—or, in other words, that thou art a hypocrite. And yet, notwithstanding this, he exhorts him to penitence and prayer, with a "perhaps the thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee." On this Simon very properly replies, "pray for me, that no awful judgments come upon me;" but that he was ever truly converted, we have no account; indeed, on the contrary, ecclesiastical history describes him as having become decidedly an apostate, and bitter enemy to the gospel.

"From this infamous attempt [of Simon] to bargain for the power of conferring the Holy Spirit, (says Scott,) all mercenary contracts for church benefices, and other methods of turning the concerns of religion into a lucrative trade, are called Simony; of which there have been, and are, a great variety of species; and will be, so long as men continue covetous and ambitious, and verily suppose that gain is godliness." But there is a species of Simony, or, at least, according to an eminent and learned prelate, it borders on it, against which all ministers, and even students, should be guarded.

"It was Simon Magus's error (says Bp. Sanderson) to think that the gift of God might be purchased with money; and it hath a spice of his sin, and so may go for a kind of Simony, to think that spiritual gifts may be purchased with labour. You may rise up early and go to bed late, and study hard, and read much, and devour the marrow of the best authors, and, when you have done all, unless God give a blessing unto your endeavours, be as thin and meagre in regard of true and useful learning, as Pharaoh's lean kine were after they had eaten the fat ones. It is God that both ministereth seed to the sower, and multiplieth the seed sown; the principal and the increase are both his."

"It is clear that all Christian virtues and graces, though wrought immediately by us, and with the free consent of our own wills, are yet the fruit of God's Spirit working in us. That is to say, they do not procced originally from any strength of nature, or any inherent power in man's free-will; nor are they acquired by the culture of philosophy, the advantages of education, or any improvement whatsoever of natural abilities, by the helps of art or industry; but are, in truth, the proper effects of that supernatural grace which is given unto us by the good pleasure of God the Father, merited for us by the precious blood of God the Son, and conveyed into our hearts by the sweet and secret inspirations of God the Holy Ghost. Love, joy, and peace, are the fruits, not at all of the flesh, but merely of the Spirit."

Ver. 26—40. The conversion of an Ethiopian eunuch of great rank.—"It is well known, that persons attached to the Jewish religion were found in all the countries around Judea, and that among these were many persons of considerable distinction. In this way the Old Testament scriptures were extensively known, and we may hope that their influence was not inconsiderable. These persons often came to Jerusalem, (as others go on pilgrimage,) especially at the great festivals. We have before us an interesting narrative of an Ethiopian eunuch, treasurer to the queen of Ethiopia, who had been to Jerusalem to worship the one God: he was returning home in his chariot through a desert place, and was reading, as he

Ver. 16. Baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.—So ch. ii. 38. Commentators are not agreed whether this is an abridged form of expression, instead of naming the three persons of the Trinity; or an abridged form of administering the ordinance to Jews, who had already been initiated into the doctrine of the Trinity in the Old Testament. (See exposition of Gen. i. 24—31.) It is observable, that where the command is given to baptize in the name of the three persons, it seems to have particular reference to the Gentiles—"all nations." Mat. xxviii. 19.

Ver. 20. Thy money perish with thee.—Doddridge, "Thy money go with thee to destruction." Not an imprecation, wishing it might do so, which he knew to be impossible, but an expression of alarm and danger. See note on Mark ii. 7.

Ver. 22. If perhaps.—This expression is thought to intimate, in Peter, a fear lest Simon should have committed the unpardonable sin—the sin against the Holy Ghost. See 1 John v. 16.

Ver. 23. The gall of bitterness.—This is bitterness, or misery itself.—The bond of iniquity—is slavery to lust, particularly the lust of covetousness, called the lust of the eye. (1 John ii. 16.) The bond of iniquity is explained by Hammond of a league with Satan, probably referring to the magical arts which he had practised.

Ver. 24. None of these things.—Peter probably enlarged upon the awful consequences Simon might expect.

Ver. 26. Which is desert—i. e. the way through the desert, or wilderness of Judea. Doddridge. It is probable, that we should refer desert, not to Gaza, but to the way; though Gaza was situated at the entrance of the desert, and the ancient city was in ruins, being destroyed by Alexander. Strabo, l. xvi.

Ver. 27. A eunuch.—A term of office. See note on Gen. xxxvii. 36.—Candace, queen of the Ethiopians.—"Candace" is said to be a name common to the queens of Ethiopia, as Cæsar was of the Roman emperors.—Ethiopia, —from Aithomai, to burn, and ops, the face. The Ethiopia here mentioned is upper Ethiopia, or Habesch, lying south of Eygpt, on the Nile, and including the island Meroë.

Ver. 30. Heard him read.—A late respectable traveller, in allusion to this very passage, remarks, that in Syria "they usually go on reading aloud, with a kind of singing voice; moving their heads and bodies in time, and making a kind of monotonous cadence at regular intervals." Jowett's Christian Researches. The ancient chariots were generally open, like our common chaises.

Ver. 33. In his humiliation his judgment was taken away.—This, which is quoted from the Septuagint version of these verses, seems to mean, "In his degraded state, justice was denied:" but compare Isaiah as above. Prebend. Townsend proposes a change in the punctuation of the original, connecting verses 32 and 33 thus:—"Like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth because of affliction; and his just judgment was taken away." The learned reader will judge of this matter for himself. See New Test. Arr 37 And Philip said, If [o] thou believest with all thy heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I [p] believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.

38 And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him.

39 And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the [q] Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way [r] rejoicing.

40 But Philip was found at Azotus: and passing through he preached in all the cities, till he came to Cesarea.

CHAPTER IX.

1 Saul, going towards Damascus, 4 is stricken down to the earth, 10 is called to the apostleship, 18 and is baptized by Ananias. 20 He preacheth Christ boldly. 23 The Jews lay wait to kill him: 29 so do the Grecians, but he escapeth both. 31 The church having rest, Peter healeth Eneas of the palsy, 36 and raiseth Tabitha to life.

AND Saul, yet [a] breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest,

2 And desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of [b] this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem.

3 And [c] as he journeyed, he came near Damascus: and [s] suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven:

4 And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou [d] me?

5 And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick [e] against the pricks.

6 And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what [f] wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do.

7 And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, [g] but seeing no man.

8 And Saul arose from the earth; and when his eyes were opened, he saw no man: but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus.

9 And he was three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink.

10 ¶ And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named [h] Ananias: and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord.

11 And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and inquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul of Tarsus: for, behold, he prayeth, 12 And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight.

13 Then Ananias answered, Lord, I have heard by many of this [i] man, how much evil he hath done to thy saints at Jerusalem:

14 And here he [j] hath authority from the chief priests to bind all that call [k] on thy name.

15 But the Lord said unto him, Go thy way: for [l] he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before [m] the Gentiles, and [n] kings, and the [o] children of Israel:

passed along, a part of the prophecies of Isaiah; but he read it as a sealed book: he knew not the person of whom the prophet spake. But God, who accepts all in every nation who fear him and work righteousness, did not permit him to remain ignorant of Christ; though it does not appear that his late journey to Jerusalem had made him acquainted with any of the disciples of our Saviour. How many, who have some correct views, and some appearances of good desire, are kept from the knowledge of real Christians by their peculiar situations or prejudices! By an extraordinary commission, Philip, the deacon, was sent to this Ethiopian; and, beginning at the 53d of Isaiah, he explains to him the whole doctrine of Christ: the eunuch listens, believes with all his heart, is baptized, and goes on his way rejoicing. What a vast body of new and most interesting facts had been made known to him in one short hour! He is going into a dark region; he is a man of influence; perhaps he may be able to lead his queen and her court to the knowledge of Jesus, and their example may have vast influence on the future spread of the gospel in Ethiopia. Surely here was enough to fill his mind with gratitude, and make him go on his way rejoicing." (Ward's Reflections.)

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1—22. Saul's miraculous conversion.—"Saul yet breathing:" this represents to us Saul, as it were, panting with zeal and fury, breathing out threatenings and slaughter!—The Christians in consequence of Stephen's death, had fled to all the surrounding countries; and Saul, by some means, obtained intelligence that many had fled even to Damascus, where a great number of Jews resided, who were under control of the sanhedrim of Jerusalem. Saul, therefore, obtained letters from Caiaphas, the High Priest, to pursue the Christians thither, and bring all that he could find unto Jerusalem in bonds. By great exertions, he probably soon got within sight of this famous city, said to be founded by Abraham himself; and this circumstance might animate his zeal, and make him the more eager to clear the city from the pestilent heresy of the Nazarenes, as he called them. For we must by no means consider him as actuated by a disposition naturally cruel; but (as he told king Agrippa) he verily thought that he "ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth." (Acts xxv. 9.) He, therefore, acted from a principle of duty, as other persecutors have doubtless done; and this shows that good motives will not justify bad actions, and that no motives will justify persecution. It was, perhaps, while he was flattering himself that he was engaged in a most meritorious service, that he was arrested by a light from heaven, similar to that of the Shechinah, or sacred glory, which generally accompanied the Divine presence. At the same time a voice sounded from heaven: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" Whether this voice spake to him in thunder (as some suppose) or not, no thunder could have so much alarmed him. He was instantly struck to the earth, and trembling, said, "Lord, who art thou?"—"I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest," was the reply; and it was added, "It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks,"—alluding to the goads

Ver. 37. And Philip said, &c.—This verse is omitted in many (including the best) MSS., and Griesbach and other critics consider it only as a marginal gloss brought into the text. So Boothroyd: but Beza and Doddridge think it too important to be omitted; and Whitby suggests the probability of its being first omitted by some who approved of delaying baptism as long as possible.

Ver. 38. Both into the water.—Doddridge says—"Considering how frequent bathing was in those hot countries, it is not to be wondered that baptism was generally administered by immersion, though I see no proof that it was essential to the institution." And the candid Lardner says, "I do not see any proof that the Eunuch was baptized by immersion." How differently men view the same facts and circumstances!

Ver. 40. Azotus—i. e. Ashdod, more than thirty miles from Gaza from whence he preached in all the cities along the coast of the Mediterranean.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1. Breathing out threatenings and slaughter.—A strong poetical expression. So Homer speaks of breathing rage, and Theocritus of breathing slaughter. See Orient. Lit. No. 1397.

Ver. 2. Letters to Damascus.—The Jews to this day are said to correspond with their brethren through most parts of the world; much more at this time, when the authority of the sanhedrim seems to have extended more or less to all their brethren. Damascus is thought to be the oldest city on the globe. It is first mentioned Gen. xiv. 15, and now called Demesk.

Ver. 3. Near Damascus.—It is impossible to calculate the length of this journey without accurately knowing the road he went. Doddridge supposes it to have been 150 miles, and it might be more. A great way to bring his prisoners, as he proposed, verse 2.

Ver. 4. And heard a voice.—It is only here said that Saul saw a light from heaven, and heard a voice: but as he twice asserts that he did see the Lord, (1 Co. xi. 1; xv. 8.) it is most reasonable to conclude that it was at this time. Another appearance of the Lord Jesus to him is mentioned chap. xxiii 11, but this is calculated to have been after he had written the first Epistle to the Corinthians, and therefore cannot be here referred to.

Ver. 5. It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks—Or "goads." Compare De. xxxii. 15. 1 Sam. ii. 29. As this sentence is wanting in many MSS., and some versions, it is also omitted by Griesbach, who supposes it taken from chap. xxvi. 14.

Ver. 7. Hearing a voice.—Boothroyd, "a sound," (as phone is often rendered,) but not distinguishing the words.

Ver. 8. They led him—i. e. his attendants.

Ver. 11. Called Straight.—This street is still existing, and was visited lately by Mr. Barker, one of the agents of the Church Missionary Society.—The street called Straight, says Maundrell, "is about half a mile in length, running from east to west through the city. It being narrow, and the houses jutting out in several places on both sides, you cannot have a clear prospect of its length and straightness. In this street is shown the house of Judas, with whom Paul lodged; and in the same house is an old tomb, said to be Ananias's."—Bagster.—Saul of Tarsus.—The inhabitants of this city are described by Strabo, as remarkable for their attachment to literature and polite learning. Orient. Lit. No. 1402.

Ver. 15. Gentiles.—Hammond and Doddridge, "Nations." It was not yet understood that the gospel was to be preached to the uncircumcised Gentiles: and yet the thing had been so plainly intimated in our Lord's command to preach it to "all nations," and to "every creature," that it seems strange it was not.

15 For I will show him how great things he must suffer [p] for my name's sake.

17 And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting [q] his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and [r] be filled with the Holy Ghost.

18 And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized.

19 And when he had received meat, he was strengthened. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at [s] Damascus.

20 And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God.

21 But all that heard him [t] were amazed, and said; Is not this he [u] that destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests?

22 But Saul increased the more in strength, [v] and confounded the [w] Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ.

23 ¶ And after that many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel [x] to kill him:

24 But their laying wait was known of Saul. And they watched [y] the gates day and night to kill him.

25 Then the disciples took him by night, and let [z] him down by the wall in a basket.

26 ¶ And when Saul was come to [a] Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples: but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple.

27 But [b] Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apostles, and declared unto them how he had seen the Lord in the way, and that he had spoken to him, and how he had preached boldly [c] at Damascus in the name of Jesus.

28 And he was with them coming in and going out at Jerusalem.

29 And he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians: but they [d] went about to slay him.

30 Which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Cesarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus.

31 Then [e] had the churches rest [f] throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria, and were [g] edified; and walking [h] in the fear of the Lord, and in the [i] comfort of the Holy Ghost, were [j] multiplied.

32 ¶ And it came to pass, as Peter passed throughout all quarters, he came down also to the saints which dwelt at Lydda.

33 And there he found a certain man named Eneas, which had kept his bed eight years, and was sick of the palsy.

34 And Peter said unto him, Eneas, Jesus Christ maketh [k] thee whole: arise, and make thy bed. And he arose immediately.

35 And all that dwelt in Lydda and [l] Saron saw him, and turned [m] to the Lord.

36 ¶ Now there was at Joppa a certain disciple named Tabitha, which by interpretation is called [n] Dorcas: this woman was full [o] of good works and alms-deeds which she did.

37 And it came to pass in those days, that she was sick, and died: whom when they had washed, they laid her in an upper chamber.

used in driving cattle, the kicking against which would only make them pierce the deeper. Thus it is with all human opposition to the divine decrees. When "the heathen raged, and Jews and Romans both combined against the Son of God," what did they? They fulfilled the very decrees which they resisted. And when Saul went with a design to bring the disciples of Jesus bound to Jerusalem, what did he? He was led blind and fasting to Damascus; and there laid praying and bewailing himself, till he was relieved by another miracle of mercy: Ananias being sent to restore sight to his eyeballs, and consolation to his mind.

Another sacred vision was necessary to fulfil the divine purposes. Ananias must be directed to Saul's apartments; and he at first hesitated, from having heard so much of his persecuting spirit, lest it should have been a plan to entrap him: "Lord, (says he,) I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to thy saints;" but his fears were soon allayed by the important intelligence—"Behold he prayeth!" And he is farther assured that Saul was "a chosen vessel, to bear the name of Jesus, both to Jews and Gentiles." This work he entered upon without delay, and, instead of persecuting the Christians, he confounded the Jews that dwelt at Damascus, proving that this Jesus, of whom, but a few days since, he hated the very name, was the very Christ—the true Messiah.

To return, however, to the circumstances of Saul's conversion: we are informed that the men who journeyed with him at the time stood speechless—"hearing a voice," or sound, and beholding the supernatural light; but neither understanding the words uttered, (see chap. xxii. 9,) nor seeing any man; and consequently not distinguishing the person of our Saviour. Who the men were that accompanied Saul in his journey to Damascus, we are not told; whether his own servants, or the High Priest's, or some volunteer zealots from Jerusalem, we know not; possibly some of each, but it does not appear that any of them were converted. Thus were our Lord's words, in reference to another case, here fullfied, "one was taken and another left." And thus it is to this day in our worshipping assemblies: many persons may sit under the same means of grace; one may be converted while many others receive no benefit. Now, to whatever we may attribute this, the Scripture, and particularly St. Paul himself, refers the cause to divine grace. "Who maketh thee to differ?—By the grace of God, I am what I am." (1 Cor. iv. 7; xv. 10.)

Ver. 23—43. Paul persecuted—Eneas cured—and Dorcas raised from the dead.—In the preceding section we left Saul preaching "boldly" at Damascus; but it appears from his Epistle to the Galatians, that he did not long there remain, nor did he go immediately from thence to Jerusalem: for he there says, that before he visited the apostles, "he went into Arabia, and laboured there for a considerable time; and, after his return to Damascus, the Jews, enraged at his supposed apostacy, and his pertinacity in preaching that Jesus was the Messiah, took counsel to slay him." (Gal. i. 17, 18.) It seems that Aretas, an Arabian king, had got possession of Damascus at this time, and that the governor appointed by him abetted the design against Saul. (2 Cor. xi. 32, 33.) (Mr. Scott: See also Dr. Paley's Horæ Paulinæ, chap. v. N. 2.) Providence being, however, his protector, and his Christian brethren having got notice of their design, let him down in a basket by night, without the walls, on which he seems at this time to have lodged. But whither did he now flee? Not to hide himself among the Gentiles, but directly to Jerusalem, that he might, at all hazards, preach the name of Jesus, where he had so often and so outrageously blasphemed it.

At first the Christians here, like those at Damascus, were greatly amazed, and recollecting how, formerly, he had "breathed out threatenings and slaughter" against them, were afraid to receive him, until the kind-hearted Barnabas took him by the hand and brought him to the apostles, informing them of what they seem yet to have been uninformed, namely, his extraordinary conversion, and unexceptionable conduct for three years subsequently; for so long it was from his conversion to his first journey to Jerusalem. (Gal. i. 19.)

Here Saul resumed his activity, speaking boldly in the name

Ver. 17. Putting his hands on him.—It was the custom among the ancients to lay their hands gently on any person on whom they conferred their blessing, or any benefit—as here recovery of sight. See Mat. xix. 13. Mark viii. 23.

Ver. 18. Scales.—Perhaps the external coat of the eye, shrivelled by the splendour of the light which struck him down.—Taylor's Expos.

Ver. 24. Watched the gates.—If by these are meant the gates of the city, it seems to intimate that the conspirators were numerous, for the city was very large, and had many gates: but perhaps the gates here mentioned were those which inclosed the house where he lodged. See chap. xii. 13, 14.

Ver. 25. Let him down by the wall.—In 2 Co. xi. 32, it is added, "through a window;" so that the case seems very like that of the Hebrew spies, Josh. ii. 15.—(Maundrell states, that after visiting the place of vision, "about half a mile distant from the city eastward," they returned to the city, and "were shown the gate where St. Paul was let down in a basket. This gate is at present walled up, by reason of its vicinity to the east gate, which renders it of little use."]—Bagster.

Ver. 27. To the apostles—Namely, Peter and James, Gal. i. 19: no others appear to have been at this time at Jerusalem.

Ver. 28. Coming in and going out—i. e. as we should say, "backwards and forwards;" but the whole was for 15 days only. Gal. i. 18.

Ver. 29. The Grecians—i. e. the Hellenists. See note on chap. vi. 1.

Ver. 30. Cesarea—A celebrated city on the borders of the Mediterranean; but Doddridge thinks it was Cesarea Philippi, on the borders of Syria.

Ver. 32. Lydda.—A considerable town, but one day's journey from Jerusalem, in the way to Joppa. Joppa is now called Jaffa.

Ver. 34. Make thy bed—i. e. smooth it, and roll it up out of the way.

Ver. 35. Saron—Or Sharon, a district between Joppa and Cesarea of Palestine.—Calmet.

Ver. 36. Dorcas.—It was common not only among the Arabs, but also among the Greeks, to give their females the names of agreeable animals. Tabitha appears to have been a word used in the Syriac, which being interpreted is Dorcas; that is, an antelope; an animal remarkable for beautiful 38 And forasmuch as Lydda was nigh to Joppa, and the disciples had heard that Peter was there, they sent unto him two men, desiring him that he would not [p] delay to come to them.

39 Then Peter arose and went with them. When he was come, they brought him into the upper chamber: and all the widows stood by him weeping, and showing the coats and garments which Dorcas made, while [q] she was with them.

40 But Peter put [r] them all forth, and kneeled down, and prayed; and turning him to the body, said, [s] Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes: and when she saw Peter, she sat up.

41 And he gave her his hand, and lifted her up, and when he had called the saints and widows, he [t] presented her alive.

42 And it was known throughout all Joppa; and [u] many believed in the Lord.

43 And it came to pass, that he tarried many days in Joppa with one Simon a tanner.

CHAPTER X.

Cornelius, a devout man, 5 being commanded by an angel, sendeth for Peter: 11 who by a vision 15, 20 is taught not to despise the Gentiles. 34 As he preacheth Christ to Cornelius and his company, 44 the Holy Ghost falleth on them, 48 and they are baptized.

THERE was a certain man in Cesarea called Cornelius, a centurion of the band called the Italian band,

2 A [a] devout man, and one that [b] feared God with all [c] his house, which gave much alms to [d] the people, and prayed [e] to God alway.

3 He saw in a vision evidently about the ninth hour of the day an angel [f] of God coming in to him, and saying unto him, Cornelius.

4 And when he looked on him, he was afraid, and said, What is it, Lord? And he said unto him, Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial [g] before God.

5 And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter:

6 He lodgeth with one Simon [h] a tanner, whose house is by the sea side; he shall tell thee [i] what thou oughtest to do.

7 And when the angel which spake unto Cornelius was departed, he called two of his household servants, and a devout soldier of them that waited on him continually;

8 And when he had declared all these things unto them, he sent them to Joppa.

9 ¶ On the morrow, as they went on their journey, and drew nigh unto the city, Peter went [j] up upon the house-top to pray about the sixth hour:

10 And he became very hungry, and would have eaten: but while they made ready, he fell into a trance,

11 And saw [k] heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him, as it had been a great sheet, knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth:

12 Wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

of the Lord Jesus, and disputing with the Grecians, (or those Jews who spoke the Greek language,) till at length they also conspired to slay him; in consequence of which the brethren privately conducted him to Cesarea, and then sent him on to his native city, Tarsus. "Then had the churches rest," says St. Luke; partly through the conversion of Paul, their great persecutor, but more probably through an alarm among the Jews, owing to a threatened attempt, by force of arms, to introduce a statue of Caligula into their most holy place: this turned their attention from persecuting the Christians to the necessity of seeking their own preservation; and thus does the gracious providence of God produce peace to his church out of the dangers and contentions of their enemies. This favourable interval may have lasted, according to Dr. Lardner, from one to three years before A. D. 40.

Our attention is now drawn to the history of Peter, who, in passing through Joppa, found a man named Eneas, who had been bed-ridden eight years, and cured him in the name of Jesus Christ. This was a mean of greatly increasing the number of believers; and the report reaching Joppa, where a female disciple of the name of Tabitha, (or Dorcas,) who was greatly beloved and respected for her benevolence and charity, was recently deceased, and was just laid out in an upper chamber, her friends sent for Peter; and, after secret prayer for a divine power, he raised her from the dead, which produced a farther enlargement of the Christian church.

But we must not leave the short account here given of Dorcas, without recommending her amiable example to our female readers—to such, at least, as have not already copied it; for we have the pleasure to know, that there are many Christian ladies already thus engaged: and though we cannot promise them an exemption from mortality; yet, to such as engage in these "labours of love" for Christ's sake, we are authorized to say, they shall not pass unrewarded.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—33. The visions of Cornelius and of Peter.—"Hitherto (says Mr. Scott) none had been admitted into the Christian church, but Jews, Samaritans, and proselytes," who had been circumcised, and bound themselves to keep the whole Jewish law; but it is the opinion of Dean Prideaux, Lord Barrington, and many other learned men, that besides those who were called Proselytes of Justice, (or Righteousness,) there were others called Proselytes of the Gate, and understood in the fourth commandment under the denomination of "strangers within their gates," meaning devout but uncircumcised Gentiles, who renounced idolatry, and observed the moral law, and the seven precepts of Noah, but paid no regard to the Mosaic ritual, and therefore they were admitted into the temple, no farther than the court of the Gentiles. This opinion of two kinds of proselytes, Prebend Townsend has lately defended at great length, and with considerable ability. The principal argument which weighs with us is, that Peter objected to go to preach to Cornelius, as unclean, till he received a special command for that purpose, which could not have been the case had he been an observer of the Jewish laws, like the proselytes of righteousness.

Let us now attend to the two visions before us, and first to that of Cornelius. He, as we have seen, was a Gentile proselyte, who "feared God and wrought righteousness," notwithstanding he belonged to the military profession, whose works are too often of a very opposite description. This man was a Centurion, that is, he commanded a hundred men of the band called Italian, probably from its consisting chiefly of Italians. The military profession is not only very ineligible for Christians, as it presents many temptations to licentiousness; but that of a Roman soldier was particularly obnoxious, as he was trained up to violence and plunder—to oppress the weak, and to enslave the world. Engaged in the profession, however, previous to their conversion, it could be no easy matter, especially for the common soldiers, to disentangle themselves from it; and, indeed, the attempt cost many of them their lives. The only case in which we can contemplate the soldiers' character with pleasure is, when we see them enrolled for the protection of our liberties and our lives.

Cornelius was, however, under these most unfavourable circumstances, still a man of piety and benevolence; insomuch that an angel was sent to announce to him the acceptance of his prayers and alms-deeds; and, at the same time, to direct him to send for an apostle, who should direct him to the true way of salvation and eternal life. But why could not the angel himself do this? For this plain reason, none are so well qualified to recommend a remedy, as those who have felt its efficacy. An angel might say, "He shall save his people from their sins:" but Peter could say, "He hath saved me, a sinner, though I forsook him and denied him."

But Peter needed as much preparation as Cornelius. What! Peter, the apostle of the Jews, associate himself with a sinner of the Gentiles?—a son of Abraham visit and converse with a soldier of that power which had enslaved his country? Far be this from Peter. But behold a large sheet let down from heaven, and filled with beasts and creeping things, unclean as well as clean, intended to represent the Gentile world, who were regarded by the Jews as no better than dogs. Ver. 40. Put them all forth.—Compare Mat. ix. 23—25.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1. Italian band.—[The Italian band, or rather cohort, (a regiment sometimes consisting of from 555 to 1105 infantry,) is not unknown to the Roman writers.]—Bagster.

Ver. 4. What is it, Lord?—If this be addressed to the angel, perhaps the pronoun my should here be understood, as in Num. xi. 28, "My lord Moses, forbid them."

Ver. 6. Simon a tanner.—The Rabbies say, that this was considered as a mean trade, and execrated by the Jews.—He shall tell thee, &c.—This latter member of the verse is omitted in four ancient, and many other MSS., in both the Syriac versions, &c.; and is rejected by Wetstein, Griesbach, and Michaelis.

Ver. 9. The sixth hour—i. e. noon.

Ver. 11. A certain vessel.—Doddridge, "Something descending to him like a great sheet," &c.—[Skenos, any thing which may be considered as a receptacle; and is therefore applicable to a sheet, or any thing woven from flax, tied up at the four corners, which our word vessel is not.]—Bagster.

Ver. 12. Four-footed beasts.—Both clean and unclean, say some; but Doddridge remarks, that in this case Peter might have made a selection. He thinks therefore, that they were all unclean.

13 And there came a voice to him, Rise, Peter; kill, and eat.

14 But Peter said, Not so, Lord; for I have never eaten any thing that is [l] common or unclean.

15 And the voice spake unto him again the second time, What God hath [m] cleansed, that call not thou common.

16 This was done thrice: and the vessel was received up again into heaven.

17 ¶ Now while Peter doubted in himself what this vision which he had seen should mean, behold, the men which were sent from Cornelius had made inquiry [n] for Simon's house, and stood before the gate,

18 And called, and asked whether Simon, which was surnamed Peter, were lodged there.

19 While Peter thought on the vision, the Spirit [o] said unto him, Behold, three men seek thee.

20 Arise [p] therefore, and get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing: for I have sent them.

21 Then Peter went down to the men which were sent unto him from Cornelius; and said, Behold, I am he whom ye seek: what is the cause wherefore ye are come?

22 And they said, Cornelius [q] the centurion, a just man, and one that feareth God, and of good report [r] among all the nation of the Jews, was warned from God by a holy angel to send for thee into his house, and to hear words of thee.

23 Then called he them in, and lodged them. And on the morrow Peter went away with them, and certain [s] brethren from Joppa accompanied him.

24 And the morrow after they entered into Cesarea. And Cornelius waited for them, and had called together his kinsmen and near friends.

25 ¶ And as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshipped him.

26 But Peter took him up, saying, Stand [t] up; I myself also am a man.

27 And as he talked with him, he went in, and found many that were come together.

28 And he said unto them, Ye know how that it is an unlawful thing [u] for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or come unto one of another nation; but God hath showed me [v] that I should not call any man common or unclean.

29 Therefore came I unto you without gainsaying, as soon as I was sent for: I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me?

30 And Cornelius said, Four days ago I was fasting until this hour; and at the ninth hour I prayed in my house, and, behold, a man stood before me [w] in bright clothing, 31 And said, Cornelius, thy [x] prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God.

32 Send therefore to Joppa, and call hither Simon, whose surname is Peter; he is lodged in the house of one Simon a tanner by the sea side: who, when he cometh, shall speak unto thee.

33 Immediately therefore I sent to thee; and thou hast well done that thou art come. Now [y] therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God.

34 ¶ Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God [z] is no respecter of persons:

35 But in [a] every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him.

36 The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace [b] by Jesus Christ: (he is [c] Lord of all:)

37 That word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached;

38 How God anointed [d] Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who [e] went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed [f] of the devil; [g] for God was with him.

view, as Peter says, it was unlawful for a Jew to keep company with one of another nation; but now God showed the apostle that he ought not to call any man common or unclean, whom he had cleansed.

From the fact here stated, that "he that fears God and works righteousness may be accepted by him," previous to his knowledge of Jesus Christ, some have hastily inferred, that an explicit knowledge of Christ is by no means necessary to salvation. When we speak of things necessary to salvation, we must be careful, in the first place, not to attempt to "limit the Holy One of Israel," or tie up the Author of our Being, even to methods of his own prescribing to his creatures. The laws of God in no case restrain his own mercy. There is nothing, however, in the case of Cornelius, to show that the knowledge of Christ is not, in the ordinary course of things, necessary as the foundation of our faith and practice; for though Christ had not before been preached to him, yet as he was a pious man, and so friendly to the Jews, there can be no doubt but that he was acquainted with the Old Testament Scriptures in the Greek language, and had been in the practice of reading them; he had also (ver. 37) some knowledge of the preaching and baptism of John, and of Jesus himself, who went about doing good: his preconceptions, therefore, were much in favour of the gospel revelation. Where God prepares the heart to receive Christ, we have every reason to expect Christ will be revealed to it—though perhaps this may never be known to us.

Ver. 34—48. Peter's sermon before Cornelius and his friends, with the gift of the Holy Ghost, and the baptism of the first Gentiles.—Cornelius having sent for Peter to preach to him the glad tidings of salvation, rightly judged it would be wrong to confine them to himself and family, and therefore did well to invite his friends and neighbours to unite with him: accordingly, when Peter came, (verse 27,) "he found many that were come together," and what is especially worthy of the remark of Christian congregations, they did not come dropping in (as we often see) during the whole time of service, but, says Cornelius, "We are all here present before God, to hear all those things that are commanded thee of God."

"Then Peter opened his mouth"—that is, he spoke with freedom and boldness. "I perceive (said he) that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation, he that feareth God and worketh righteousness (as did Cornelius) is accepted with him." But still it was well that he had sent for Peter, for he had still more good news to tell them: as that he was not only a prophet sent of God; but also Jesus Christ, the Messiah, the anointed Saviour: nor was this all; he was a person of su-

Ver. 13. Kill, and eat—[Or, sacrifice and eat. The spirit of the heavenly direction seems to be this, says Dr. A. Clarke,—"The middle wall of partition is now pulled down; the Jews and Gentiles are called to become one flock, under one shepherd and bishop of souls. Thou, Peter, shalt open the door of faith to the Gentiles, and be also the minister of the circumcision. Rise up; a ready a blessed sacrifice is prepared: go and offer it to God; and let thy soul feed on the fruits of his mercy," &c.]—Baxster.

Ver. 24. Cesarea.—[This city, once an obscure fortress called Strato's Tower, was built and superbly decorated by Herod the Great, and called Cesarea, in honour of Augustus Cesar, to whom he dedicated it in the 28th year of his reign. It was situated on the shore of the Mediterranean, between Joppa and Dora, with a haven, rendered by Herod the most convenient on the coast. Thirty miles from Jaffa, or Joppa, 32 from Ramlay, and 36 from Acco, or Ptolemais; and, according to Josephus, six hundred stadia, or 75 miles, from Jerusalem, though the real distance is probably not more than 62 miles. Nothing now remains of the former splendour of Cesarea: the supposed sites of the ancient edifices are mere mounds of indefinable form: the waves wash the ruins of the mole, the tower, and the port; the whole of the surrounding country is a sandy desert; and not a creature, except beasts of prey, resides within many miles of this silent desolation.]—Baxster.

Ver. 26. Stand up.—Did Jesus say so? or what are we to infer upon the doctrine of the simple humanity of Jesus? Was he less pious, or less humble than St. Peter?

Ver. 28. An unlawful thing.—So Josephus:—"Those strangers who come to us on any other account but that of religion, Moses permitted not to be mixed with us in any familiarities."

Ver. 33. That are commanded thee of God.—It was as easy for God to reveal Christ to Cornelius as to tell him where to find Peter. But having commissioned his preached gospel for the conversion of the world, he honours that gospel, and makes it necessary for Peter to go as a missionary to Cornelius. So God has recently brought heathen men to Christian countries, where they have received the gospel, (as Obookiah,) or the inquiring anxious heathen has met the missionary, and rejoiced in the preaching of Christ. The heathen must have the preached gospel.

39 And [h] we are witnesses of all things which he did both in the land of the Jews, and in Jerusalem; whom they slew and hanged on a tree:

40 Him God raised up [i] the third day, and showed him openly;

41 Not [j] to all the people, but unto witnesses chosen before [k] of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead.

42 And he commanded us [l] to preach unto the people, and to testify that [m] it is he which was ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead.

43 To him [n] give all the prophets witness, that through his name [o] whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins.

44 ¶ While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost [p] fell on all them which heard the word.

45 And [q] they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost.

46 For they heard them [r] speak with tongues, and magnify God. Then answered Peter, 47 Can [s] any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?

48 And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. Then prayed they him to tarry certain days.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Peter, being accused for going in to the Gentiles, 5 maketh his defence, 18 which is accepted. 19 The gospel being spread unto Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, Barnabas is sent to confirm them. 26 The disciples there are first called Christians. 27 They send relief to the brethren in Judea in time of famine.

AND the apostles and brethren that were in Judea heard that the Gentiles had also received the word of God.

2 And when Peter was come up to Jerusalem, they [a] that were of the circumcision contended with him,

3 Saying, Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them.

4 But Peter rehearsed the matter from the beginning, and expounded it by order unto them, saying,

5 I was in the city of Joppa praying: and in a trance I saw a vision, A certain vessel descend, as it had been a great sheet, let down from heaven by four corners; and it came even to me:

6 Upon the which when I had fastened mine eyes, I considered, and saw four-footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air.

7 And I heard a voice saying unto me, Arise, Peter; slay and eat.

8 But I said, Not so, Lord: for nothing common or unclean hath at any time entered into my mouth.

9 But the voice answered me again from heaven, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common.

10 And this was done three times: and all were drawn up again into heaven.

11 And behold, immediately there were three men already come unto the house where I was, sent from Cesarea unto me.

12 And the Spirit [b] bade me go with them, nothing doubting. Moreover these six brethren accompanied me, and we entered into the man's house:

13 And he showed us how he had seen an angel in his house, which stood and said unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whose surname is Peter;

14 Who shall tell thee [c] words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved.

15 And as I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as [d] on us at the beginning.

16 Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John [e] indeed baptized with water; but [f] ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost.

preme dignity—He was "Lord of all"—Lord of prophets and apostles, yea, of men and angels. "And we are witnesses," adds Peter, "of all things which he did both in Judea, and especially at Jerusalem. Moreover, when the Jews slew him and hung him on a tree, we are witnesses that God raised him up on the third day, and showed him openly"—not to all the people—"but unto witnesses chosen of God, even to us, who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead. And he commanded us to preach unto the people, that it is he which is ordained of God to be the Judge of quick and dead. To him (also) give all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins."

Thus boldly and clearly did Peter display this gospel of the grace of God, to Gentiles as well as Jews, and his word was confirmed by the miraculous effusion of the Holy Ghost, not only in its ordinary, but in its extraordinary gifts on Gentiles as well as Jews—he therefore commanded them to be baptized; and thus was the Christian church opened to all nations, and the party wall between Jews and Gentiles broken down for ever.

CHAP. XI. Peter, to the council, defends his preaching to the Gentiles.—Nothing is more certain than that the infallibility of the apostles extended only to their official character, as preachers and penmen of the sacred Scriptures. Peter's conduct, which was suspected by his brethren in this case to have been improper, was in another instance declared by Paul to have been decidedly wrong—"He was to be blamed." (Gal. ii. 11.) In the present instance he justified himself, however, in a manner perfectly satisfactory; and his brethren of the apostles and other disciples at Jerusalem, when they heard of the extraordinary manner in which he had been led to preach to the Gentiles, and the remarkable success which had attended his labours, glorified God, saying, "Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life!" A circumstance in which we also, who are sinners of the Gentiles, are called upon to rejoice, and magnify the grace of God.

The next chapter leads us back to the time of Stephen's death, when the brethren that were scattered abroad preached the gospel as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and even Antioch; but to the Jews only. And some "men of Cyprus and Cyrene," Greeks by birth, "spake unto the Grecians;" but whether by these Grecians we are to understand Jews who spake the Greek language, (as in chap. vi. 1,) or native Greeks, is a point much disputed. We find ourselves strongly inclined to the former, which is supported by the present Greek text; for it does not appear that Peter had yet preached to Cornelius, or, if he had, that it could be known so far off as Antioch. They had not received any special commission to preach to Gentiles, nor (strange as it may seem) does it appear that they had given the proper interpretation to our Lord's order of preaching to "all nations;" but seem rather to have understood it of preaching to the Jews and proselytes in "all nations" wherever they might find them scattered.

The converts at Antioch were, however, so numerous, that the church at Jerusalem thought proper to send thither Barnabas to see how the cause of Christ went on: and "when he had seen the grace of God," that is, the effects which it produced on the lives and characters of the converts, "he was glad," and affectionately exhorted them to persevere: "for he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith." He was not only a pious and sincere convert, but generous and "kindhearted" to the brethren, as we have explained his name, (see note on ch. iv. 36,) and "zealously affected" always in "a good cause," as this evidently was.

It may be recollected, also, that Barnabas was the person who introduced Saul to the apostles at Jerusalem, and informed them of his conversion, (ch. ix. 27:) and from that time there seems to have been a particular attachment formed between

Ver. 41. Not to all the people.—This has been made an objection by many infidel writers; to which we can only reply, that God is not bound to satisfy those who are unwilling to be convinced.

Ver. 43. All the prophets, &c.—Most of them in a very express manner, and others indirectly; for "the testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy." Rev. xix. 10.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 5. A great sheet.—[Camerarius would render the word sheet a table napkin, and Daniel Heinsius, by a shepherd's bag, or sack, in which they were accustomed to put food, platters, trenchers, and other things. It was a type of the Christian church, separated from the world; the living creatures of all kinds of which it was full, were the people of all nations included in the church; it was knit at the four corners, to show that they were gathered together from the four quarters of the globe, it descended from heaven, in the same manner as the New Jerusalem is represented in the Apocalypse, to intimate, that though the church exists in the world, it is not of the world, but of celestial origin; and the drawing back of it into heaven was designed to teach us, that as the church has its origin from heaven, so it shall return victorious thither. In this representation, the condition of the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ; what [h] was I, that I could withstand God?

18 When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles [i] granted repentance unto life.

19 ¶ Now they [j] which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen travelled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but [k] unto the Jews only.

20 And some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which, when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the [l] Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus.

21 And the [m] hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned [n] unto the Lord.

22 ¶ Then tidings of these things came [o] unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem: and they sent forth [o] Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch.

23 Who, when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was [p] glad, and exhorted [q] them all, that with purpose [r] of [s] heart they would cleave unto the Lord.

24 For he was a good man, and full [t] of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and [u] much people was added unto the Lord.

25 Then [v] departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul:

26 And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves [w] with the church, and taught [x] much people. And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch.

27 ¶ And in these days came [y] prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch.

28 And there stood up one of them named [z] Agabus, and signified by the spirit [a] that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cesar.

29 Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send [a] relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judea:

30 Which also they did, and [b] sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

CHAPTER XII.

1 King Herod persecuteth the church, killeth James, and imprisoneth Peter: whom an angel delivereth upon the prayers of the church. 20 In his pride taking to himself Godhead due to God, he is stricken by an angel, and dieth miserably. 24 After his death, the word of God prospereth.

NOW about that time Herod the king [a] stretched forth his hands to vex certain of the church.

2 And he killed James [b] the brother of John with the sword.

3 And because he saw it pleased [c] the Jews, he proceeded farther to take Peter [d] also. (Then were the days [e] of unleavened bread.)

4 And when he had apprehended him, he put him in prison, and delivered him to four quaternions of soldiers to keep him; intending after Easter to bring him forth to the people.

5 Peter therefore was kept in prison: but [f] prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him.

6 And when Herod would have brought him forth, the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains: and the keepers before the door kept the prison.

7 And, behold, the angel [g] of the Lord came upon him, and a light shined in the prison: and he smote Peter on the side, and raised him up, saying, Arise up quickly. And [h] his chains fell off from his hands.

8 And the angel said unto him, Gird thyself, them: finding, therefore, an opening for great usefulness in that city, he went to seek Saul, whose active and ardent mind he knew well adapted for such a sphere of labour; and it was possibly from his and his brethren's perpetual and zealous urging of the doctrine of "Christ, and him crucified," that the disciples here first received "the name of Christians." This name, though probably given them first by way of reproach, met their own wishes, and fulfilled the design of God. O that this name had been alone admitted, instead of the innumerable terms since adopted, which mark one an admirer of Paul and another of Apollos—one a follower of Luther and another of Calvin, &c.; for who are all these but servants of one Master, even CHRIST?

At this period, Luke informs us, "came prophets from Jerusalem to Antioch, one of whom, named Agabus, signified, by the spirit" of inspiration, the approach of famine in Judea. In consequence of this, without waiting till the distress should overwhelm them, the new converts in Antioch made a liberal subscription (or collection) for their brethren in Judea, which they sent by the hands of Barnabas and Saul, to the elders of the church at Jerusalem—those doubtless who had the management of the church's secular concerns.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1—19. Herod's cruelty—Peter's miraculous deliverance.—Of all the royal names recorded in sacred history, those of Pharaoh and of Herod rank the highest for cruelty and impiety. Herod the Great murdered a number of infants, in hope of destroying the infant Jesus, (Matt. iii. 16;) to say nothing of his cruelty to his own children, which led Augustus to say, it were better to have been his hog than his son. Herod Antipas, his son, sacrificed the holy prophet, John the Baptist, in order to gratify an adulteress, with whom he lived in incest. The Herod here introduced to our notice was Herod Agrippa, grandson of the former, whom he much resembled, both in his character and end. St. Luke calls him "Herod the king." At first he was simply a tetrarch, with a royal title; but his dominions were gradually increased, till they became equal in extent to those of his grandfather, and his power no less absolute and tyrannical. Josephus speaks of his great kindness to the Jews his countrymen, which induced him to live much at Jerusalem, where he "observed the Jewish institutions, practised the purity they require, and did not let a day pass without worshipping God according to the law." Yet notwithstanding all this religion, he killed James, the brother of John; and "because it pleased the Jews," he imprisoned Peter also, meaning to bring him out to public execution at the close of Easter, or, more properly, the Passover.

Here we stop to make two observations: 1. That the strictest forms of outward religion may be observed, while the 17 But he, beckoning [p] unto them with the hand to hold their peace, [q] declared unto them how the Lord had brought him out of the prison. And he said, Go show these things unto James, and to the brethren. And he departed, and went into another place.

18 Now as soon as it was day, there was no small stir among the soldiers, what was become of Peter.

19 And when Herod had sought for him, and found him not, he examined the keepers, and commanded that they should be put to death. And he went down from Judea to Cesarea, and there abode.

20 ¶ And Herod [r] was highly displeased with them of Tyre and Sidon: but they came with one accord to him, and, having made Blastus [s] the king's chamberlain their friend, desired peace; because their [t] country was nourished by the king's country.

deepest villany still lurks within the heart. Herod failed not daily to worship God, while he committed one murder after another to gratify the Jews.—2. "It is hard to kick against the pricks," or to fight against the Almighty. Herod had seized Peter, and held him now in prison, under guard of sixteen soldiers, who were to relieve each other in parties of four each, to watch him night and day, and he was kept in perfect safety till the very night before his intended execution. But a machinery was now at work of which Herod had no conception. While soldiers watched him night and day, so did angels; and the whole church of God at Jerusalem were engaged in prayer, "without ceasing," on his behalf. This was not necessary for his deliverance, for the eye of God was on him; but the occasion called forth all the pious affections of the brethren, and all the holy energy of prayer. We hear nothing of Peter's prayers, but he was a prisoner in Christ's cause, and had doubtless committed himself into his hands and gone to sleep. Though he had before been rescued by an angel, it does not appear that he expected the visit of another heavenly messenger, or he would have kept awake for him. Peter was secure, however, as human power could make him, bound with chains, and sleeping between two soldiers. But the moment of deliverance is now come. "Man's extremity is God's opportunity." A heavenly radiance, in the dead of night, penetrates those walls which, perhaps, the sunbeams had never entered. An angel enters and smites Peter to awake him, while probably the same stroke smote the guards, both within and without, with slumbers irresistible. Peter rises in surprise; his chains drop from him like burnt flax; locks and bolts give way instantly to the angelic touch; and even the massy iron gate leading outward into the street "opens of its own accord." The angel conveyed him so far as he was commissioned, and then vanished. Hitherto Peter thought it was all a dream; but, finding himself at liberty, he repaired instantly to the house of John, surnamed Mark, where he knew the brethren were accustomed to assemble for devotion. Here he knocked, and the maid Rhoda, who kept the gate, came to listen and inquire who was there. She knew Peter's voice in a moment, and, frantic with joy, ran in to announce it. At first they thought the woman mad, and, when she still persisted in her story, they concluded it must be his angel, or perhaps his ghost. At length they opened the door and saw him, when they were no less astonished than the girl; but he beckoning to them to be quiet, entered, and related all the circumstances. No alarm of his escape was, it seems, excited till the morning, probably at the time of relieving guard: then, not the prison only, but the palace was in alarm. Herod, being able to obtain no information from the keepers or the guard, commanded them to be put to death, and thus revenged himself for the escape of Peter. But we shall see, in our next section, that vengeance followed Herod.

Ver. 20—25. The impiety and awful death of Herod.—The last clause of the preceding verse informs us, that after the mortification (as it doubtless was) of Peter's deliverance from his hands, just at the time when he was about to make a public sacrifice of him for the gratification of the Jews, "Herod went down from Judea to Cesarea, and there abode." On some occasion, not worthy of our inquiry, he found himself much offended with the inhabitants of Tyre and Sidon, who, residing upon the coast, depended on Judea for a supply of corn and other provisions: without, therefore, contending for the justice of their cause, they thought it the wisest way to employ the king's chamberlain to speak on their behalf; beside which they sent ambassadors to procure reconciliation, to which Herod, whose interest it perhaps equally was, seems to have made no objection.

Herod at this time celebrating by command a festival in honour of the emperor, the above persons were invited to attend, while the great and the gay were collected together from all parts of the country. On the second day of the shows, (says Josephus,) "Herod came into the theatre early in the morning, dressed in a robe of silver, of most curious workmanship. The rays of the rising sun, reflected from so splendid a garb, gave him a majestic and awful appearance. In a short time they began in several parts of the theatre flattering acclamations, which proved pernicious to him. They called him a god, and entreated him to be propitious to them, saying, Hitherto we have respected you as a man, but now we acknowledge you to be more than mortal. The king neither reproved these persons, nor rejected the impious flattery..... Imme-

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Paul and Barnabas are chosen to go to the Gentiles. 7 Of Sergius Paulus, and Elymas the sorcerer. 11 Paul strikes Elymas blind. 13 John departing from them at Perga, 14 they preach in the synagogue at Antioch in Pisidia. 42 They are desired to preach the next sabbath. 43 Many follow them. 44 Almost the whole city come together to hear the word: 45 but the Jews gainsay and blaspheme: 46 whereupon they turn to the Gentiles. 48 As many as were ordained to life believed.

NOW there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, [a] which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul.

2 As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate [b] me Barnabas and Saul for the work [c] whereunto I have called them.

[b] Ga.1.15.

[c] 1 Ti.2.7.

3 And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away.

4 So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia; and from thence they sailed to Cyprus.

5 And when they were at Salamis, they preached the word of God in the synagogues [d] 2 Ti.4.15. of the Jews: and they had also John to their minister.

6 ¶ And when they had gone through the isle unto Paphos, they found a certain sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Barjesus:

7 Which was with the deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus, a prudent man; who called for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to hear the word of God.

8 But Elymas the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretation,) [d] withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith.

9 Then Saul, (who also is called Paul,) filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him,

10 And said, O full of all subtlety and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?

11 And now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there diately after this, he was seized with pains in his bowels, extremely violent at the very first. Then turning himself toward his friends, he spoke to them in this manner:—'I, your god, am required to leave this world; Fate instantly confuting these feigned applauses just bestowed upon me, I, who have been called immortal, am hurried away to death. But God's appointment must be submitted to. Nor has our condition in this world been despicable; we have lived in the state which is accounted happy.' While he was speaking these words, he was oppressed with the increase of his pains: he was carried, therefore, with all haste to his palace. These pains in his bowels continually tormenting him, he expired in five days time, in the fifty-fourth year of his age, and of his reign the seventh."

We have given this extract in order to show how well the Jewish historian here agrees with the Evangelist: but Josephus knew nothing of the angel, or the final cause of Herod's death. Yet there are some points of harmony which particularly call for our remark. St. Luke says, that when the multitude so profanely flattered him, "he gave not God the glory:" Josephus, though he had before represented him as a pious and religious man, frankly confesses he "neither reproved these persons, nor rejected the impious flattery" they offered. Josephus agrees also in the sudden manner in which he was seized; and though he says nothing here of worms, he describes his disorder as much resembling his grandfather's, which produced ulcerations and bred worms. (See Lardner's Cred., whence most of our observations on this subject are derived.)

Men of every rank are mortal. Even kings, "those earthly gods," as Watts calls them, however they may be flattered, must die; and, when they have dared to persecute the church of God, they have been often cut off with marks of the divine displeasure. Scripture affords many instances of this, and modern history is not without them. But Jesus lives for ever; and, while princes die, and their decrees and works perish, the word of God must grow and prosper.

The close of this chapter informs us that "Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem to Antioch when they had fulfilled their ministry:" alluding, particularly, as we suppose, to the charitable aid which they had carried to the church there. To relieve brethren in necessity or distress, is an office not unworthy of an apostle.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—12. The church at Antioch.—Paul and Barnabas set apart to preach to the Gentiles.—"When it is remembered (says Dr. Morrison) that the prophets declared the Messiah should be 'a light to the Gentiles, and for salvation to the ends of the earth,' (Isa. lxix. 6;) that the angels at the Saviour's birth declared the Saviour's advent was 'good tidings to all people,' (Luke ii. 10;) and that Jesus, when ascending to heaven, commanded his gospel to be taught to 'all nations,'—it is surprising how slow of apprehending this essential truth the first Christians were." Even Peter, zealous as he was, Dr. M. goes on to observe, "required an express revelation from heaven to induce him to go to a Roman military officer, Cornelius; and, when he did go, the apostles and brethren at Jerusalem censured him for it," till he produced divine authority in his defence. And it is not certain that any Gentile church was formed anterior to the period now before us, about A. D. 45, when Barnabas and Saul were, by divine direction, sent out from the church of Antioch on a special mission to the heathen.

This we consider as the first missionary tour beyond the pale of the Jewish church, and it was conducted by two apostolic missionaries, of whom Barnabas was evidently much the elder. His nephew, John Mark, went with them, both as their servitor, or attendant, and with a view to his future employment in the missionary work. A circumstance that seems to intimate the proper means of introduction to this work; namely, after receiving such previous instruction as may be judged necessary, to send them out under the direction and advice of experienced preachers, none of whom surely ought to be above following the example of Barnabas and Saul. Their missionary route is here distinctly marked out. They departed first to Seleucia, a sea-port about fifteen miles from Antioch, and sailed thence, as it should seem, immediately to Cyprus, the native place of Barnabas, (ch. iv. 36,) and where probably he was well known, and in consequence invited to preach in the synagogues of Salamis, a sea-port on the east entrance of the island. No particular success is hitherto recorded; but when they had gone through the isle to Paphos, a city devoted to the most gross idolatry, which was at the western extremity, they met with opposition, which, as it respects the ministry of the gospel, is generally the harbinger of success. Sergius Paulus, "the deputy of the country," or proconsul appointed by the senate, who is described as a prudent, or intelligent man, called for Barnabas and Saul, and "desired to hear from them the word of God," which implied a conviction that he considered them commissioned to deliver it. With him, probably in some secular capacity, resided a Jew of the name of Bar-jesus, a false prophet and a sorcerer, or magician, as the Arabic name Elymas imports; and he, knowing that if the gospel were to prevail, he must lose his craft, resolutely withstood their preaching; and, when he found the deputy disposed to listen thereto, he endeavoured to turn him from it.

Paul, who on this occasion probably was the preacher, being filled with the Holy Ghost, fixed his eyes upon him, "O full of subtlety and all mischief, thou child of the devil!" a name to which he was entitled both from his personal character, as a wicked man, and from his iniquitous profession as a sorcerer and a false prophet. "The hand of the Lord is upon thee!" added Paul, and he was immediately struck with temporary blindness. This had such an effect with the deputy, that, being astonished at the power which attended on the apostle's doctrine, he became a confirmed believer.

We have here followed Luke in adopting the name of Paul instead of Saul, and this becomes his designation throughout the remainder of the New Testament. This apostle being now devoted to the service of the Gentiles, it might be proper that he should now assume a Roman name; and he might adopt this in honour of his illustrious convert, the governor. Others suppose it the name which he assumed when he became a Roman citizen; but this seems hardly consistent with his being born free. Beza thinks that the Greeks and Romans head, and immediately understood that this bird was the messenger (or angel) of ill tidings . . . and fell into the deepest sorrow," &c.—Whiston's Josephus.

Ver. 25. John whose surname was Mark.—This was evidently a different person from Mark the Evangelist, as is shown by Grotius, to whom Doddridge refers with approbation. The Mark here is understood to have been the son of Mary, at whose house the disciples met to pray for Peter, ch. xii. 12; and he is called "sister's son to Barnabus," Col. iv. 10.

Ver. 2. The Holy Ghost said.—Either by an inspired person, or by an oracular voice.

Ver. 4. Seleucia.—[This was Seleucia Pieriæ, a city of Syria, on the coast of the Mediterranean, north of the mouth of the Orontes. The ruins are now called Kepse, according to Dr. Pococke, and are situated about a mile from the sea, on the south-west of a rocky mountain.]—Bagster.

Ver. 5. Salamis.—[Salamis was a famous city on the eastern coast of the isle of Cyprus, opposite Seleucia, afterwards called Constantia, and now Famagusta.]—Bagster.

fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand.

12 Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed, being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord.

13 ¶ Now when Paul and his company loosed from Paphos, they came to Perga in Pamphylia: and John departing [e] from them returned to Jerusalem.

14 But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue [f] on the sabbath day, and sat down.

15 And after the reading [g] of the law and the prophets, the rulers of the synagogue sent unto them, saying, Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word [h] of exhortation for the people, say on.

16 Then Paul stood up, and beckoning with his hand, said, Men of Israel, and ye that fear God, give audience.

17 The God of this people of Israel chose [i] our fathers, and exalted the people when they dwelt [j] as strangers in the land of Egypt, and with a [k] high arm brought he them out of it.

18 And about the time of forty [l] years [m] suffered he their manners in the wilderness.

19 And when he had destroyed [n] seven nations in the land of Chanaan, he [o] divided their land to them by lot.

20 And after that he gave unto them [p] judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet.

21 And afterward they [q] desired a king: and God gave unto them Saul [r] the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years.

22 And when [s] he had removed him, he raised up unto them David [t] to be their king; to whom also he gave testimony, and said, I have found David the son of Jesse, a man [u] after mine own heart, which shall fulfil all my will.

23 Of this man's seed hath God according to his promise [v] raised unto [w] Israel a Saviour, Jesus:

24 When John [x] had first preached before his coming the baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel.

25 And as John fulfilled his course, he said, Whom think ye that I am? I am not he. But, behold, there cometh one after me, whose shoes of his feet I am not worthy to loose.

26 Men and brethren, children of the stock of Abraham, and whosoever among you feareth God, to you [y] is the word of this salvation sent.

27 For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath day, [z] they have fulfilled them in condemning him.

28 And though they found no cause of death in him, yet desired they Pilate that he should be slain.

29 And when they had fulfilled all that was written of him, they took him down from the tree, and laid him in a sepulchre.

30 But God raised him from the dead:

31 And he was seen [a] many days of them which came up with him from Galilee to Jerusalem, who are his witnesses unto the people.

32 And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise [b] which was made unto the fathers, 33 God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou [c] art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.

34 And as concerning that he raised him up from the dead, now no more to return to corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure [d] mercies of David.

35 Wherefore he saith also in [e] another psalm, Thou shalt not suffer thy Holy One to see corruption.

36 For David, [f] after he had served his own generation by the will of God, [g] fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption:

37 But he, whom God [h] raised again, saw no corruption.

38 Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through [i] this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins:

39 And by [j] him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.

40 Beware therefore, lest that come upon you, which is spoken of in [k] the prophets;

41 Behold, ye despisers, and wonder, and would find his Hebrew name difficult to pronounce, and naturally call him Paul.

Ver. 13—41. Paul preaches to the Jews.—Following Barnabas and Saul, who is henceforth called Paul, we now trace them from Paphos to Perga in Pamphylia; where, for some cause with which we are not well acquainted, John Mark deserted them and returned back to Jerusalem, while they persevered in their mission. It is generally supposed that his desertion was occasioned by versatility of temper, or perhaps the dislike of an itinerant life, either of which circumstances would render him unfit for missionary work. From Perga, however, the apostles proceeded to Antioch in Pisidia, where they went into the synagogue on the sabbath-day, and sat down, as usual, during the reading of the law. After service, understanding that they were preachers of popular talents, and having had intimation, perhaps, that they wished to address the people, the rulers of the synagogue invited them to speak.

Paul, who, on all occasions, was "the chief speaker," and was doubtless a man of distinguished talents, now stood forward, and, soliciting the attention both of Jews and pious proselytes, gave a brief abstract of their national history from the time of the Exodus to that of David, from whose loins God had "raised unto Israel a Saviour (even) Jesus." Paul then adverts to the witness of John the Baptist in his favour, states the abominable conduct of their brethren at Jerusalem towards their Messiah, and the indubitable witness that God himself had given to him, in his resurrection from the dead. He quotes, on this occasion, nearly the same Scriptures of the Old Testament that Peter had done on former occasions, and then gives them this beautiful epitome of the way of salvation by Jesus Christ. "Be it known unto you, men and brethren, Ver. 15. Reading of the law, &c.—The custom of reading the law, the Jews say, existed a hundred and seventy years before the time of Christ. The division of it into sections is ascribed to Ezra. The five books of Moses, here called the law, contained fifty-three sections, so that by reading one on each sabbath, and two in one day, they read through the whole in the course of a year; finishing at the feast of Tabernacles, which they called "the rejoicing of the law."—Orient. Cust. No. 1313.

Ver 17 Exalted the people—That is, Jacob's family, under the protection of Joseph.

Ver. 20. Four hundred and fifty years—That is, according to the chronology of Josephus and the LXX.; but this differs from the Hebrew chronology full one hundred years. Doddridge reads, "And after these transactions, [which lasted] about four hundred and fifty years," which, by an alteration in the pointing, reads, "He divided the land to them by lot, about four hundred and fifty years, and after that he gave them judges," &c. He cites the authority of some copies mentioned by Grotius and Usher.

Ver. 21. By the space of forty years.—Beza, Calvin, Grotius, Doddridge, &c. include Samuel's government as well as Saul's; for notwithstanding Saul's being appointed king, Samuel still retained his office of judge as long as he lived; 1 Sam. vii. 15.

Ver. 27. They have fulfilled them.—See ch. iii. 17, and note.

Ver. 33. Raised up Jesus again—i. e. from the dead, as many understand these words; but as there is no distinct word for "again" in the Greek, and the original does not necessarily imply it, Witsius and others understand the words rather as referring to the birth of Jesus. See ch. iii. 22; vii. 37. Yet it is also applied by the apostle Peter to the resurrection from the dead, ch. ii. 24, 30, 32.

Ver. 34. No more to return to corruption—i. e. to the place of corruption, namely, the grave. So Beza, Doddridge, &c.——Sure mercies of David—That is, covenanted mercies to David as a type of Christ.

Ver. 35. Thou shalt not suffer, &c.—See Ps. xvi. 10. Acts ii. 27. "To see corruption," is to experience it; so to see death, to see life. &c.

Ver. 41. Wonder, and perish.—See Hab. i. 5.——Perish.—Doddridge. "Turn pale and disappear," or "vanish."

perish: for I work a work in your days, a work which ye shall in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you.

42 ¶ And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them [1] the next sabbath.

43 Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas: who, speaking to them, persuaded them to continue [m] in the grace of God.

44 ¶ And the next sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God.

45 But when the Jews saw the multitudes, they were filled with envy, and spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, [n] contradicting and blaspheming.

46 Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first [o] have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we [p] turn to the Gentiles.

47 For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, [q] I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth.

48 And when the Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord: and [r] as many as were ordained to eternal life believed.

49 And the word of the Lord was published throughout all the region.

50 ¶ But the Jews stirred up the devout and honourable women, and the chief men of the city, and [s] raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts.

51 But they shook [t] off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Iconium.

52 And the disciples were filled with [u] joy, and with the Holy Ghost.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Paul and Barnabas are persecuted from Iconium. 5 At Lystra Paul healeth a cripple, whereupon they are reputed as gods. 19 Paul is stoned. 21 They pass through diverse cities, confirming the disciples in the faith and patience. 26 Returning to Antioch, they report what God had done with them.

AND it came to pass in Iconium, that they went both together into the synagogue of the Jews, and so spake, that a great multitude both of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed.

2 But the unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil affected against the brethren.

3 Long time therefore abode they speaking boldly in the Lord, which [a] gave testimony unto the word of his grace, and granted signs and wonders to be done by their hands.

4 But the multitude of the city was divided: and [b] part held with the Jews, and part with the apostles.

5 And when there was an assault made both of the Gentiles, and also of the Jews with their rulers, to use them despitefully, and to stone them,

6 They were ware of it, and [c] fled unto Lystra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia, and unto the region that lieth round about:

7 And there they preached the gospel.

8 ¶ And there sat a certain man at Lystra, impotent in his feet, being a [d] cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked:

9 The same heard Paul speak: who stedfastly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith [e] to be healed,

10 Said with a loud voice, Stand upright on thy feet. And he leaped [f] and walked.

11 And when the people saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, saying in the speech of Lycaonia, The [g] gods are come down to us in the likeness of men.

12 And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and that through this man is preached unto you the remission of sins; and by him all that believe are justified from all things from which VE (bringing the matter home to their own cases and bosoms) could not be justified by the law of Moses,"—which indeed forms the text of his Epistle to the Romans.

The discourse concludes with warning his hearers against copying the infidelity of their brethren at Jerusalem, and bringing on themselves the same judgments that were hanging over their heads.

Ver. 42—52. Paul and Barnabas preach the same doctrine to the Gentiles on the following Sabbath.—"Now, when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious (or devout) proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas" for farther instruction, who exhorted them to "continue in" the exercise and profession of "the grace of God," which had now been preached to them. The Gentiles also hearing what doctrines had been published, and that they were equally interested in them, requested that the same might be preached to them also on the following sabbath. Then "almost the whole city," both Jews and Gentiles, "came together, to hear the word of God." But when the unbelieving Jews "saw the multitudes that were attracted by this new doctrine (as they considered it,) "they were filled with envy, contradicting and blaspheming."

Upon this the inspired preachers address themselves exclusively to the Gentiles, quoting their authority for so doing from the prophecy of Isaiah, (chap. xlix. 6.) And the Gentiles no sooner heard this than "they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord:" and as many as were ordained (or appointed) to eternal life, believed. And (thus) the word of the Lord was published throughout all the "region," or country, round about.

The unbelieving Jews, however, became more and more incensed, and stirring up certain devout and honourable women who had hitherto listened to the apostles, by false reports and artful insinuations, drew them to their side; and at the same time, gaining the magistrates of the city in their support, raised such a persecution as compelled the apostles to leave the city; and, as their Lord had directed them to do, they shook off the dust of their feet as a testimony against their persecutors.

This, though it may appear to us a trifling ceremony, is always mentioned by our Lord as a matter of serious alarm to them. It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for those who treat with hostility and contempt the message of salvation to mankind.

CHAP. XIV Ver. 1—28. The persecutions and success of Paul and Barnabas, and their return to Antioch.—"When ye are persecuted in one city, (said our Lord,) flee unto another." (Matt. x. 23.) The apostles being driven from Antioch in Pisidia, flee unto Iconium, and thence to Lystra, both in Lycaonia: and thus persecution in one country has uniformly proved the means of spreading the Gospel into others. At Ver. 43. When the congregation was broken up.—This explains the preceding verse—"When the Jews were gone out," then the Gentiles came about the apostles and sought, &c.

Ver. 44. Came almost the whole city—That is, both Jews and Gentiles, a great multitude.

Ver. 48. As many as were ordained to eternal life believed.—For "ordained to," Doddridge reads, "determined for;" which is taking a middle path between the Calvinists, as Gill, who refers it to God's predestination; and the Arminians, who, with Hammond, refer it to men's own self-determination; for which we see no ground. But we have no objection to understand it in harmony with the language of our Lord and of St. Luke. Our Lord "gives eternal life to all whom the Father gives him by the operations of his grace." Compare John xvii. 9. All those "believe unto eternal life" whose "hearts the Lord opens," as he did Lydia's, Acts xvi. 14. If we refer our conversion wholly to the grace of God, it secures to him the honour, and to us the certainty of our salvation. Nevertheless, God does nothing but what he ever intended to do. "I am the Lord: I change not."

Ver. 51. Iconium.—[Iconium, now Cogni, or Konieh, was the capital of Lycaonia in Asia Minor; a well built city, situated in the richest part of that province.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 3 Speaking boldly.—Doddridge "freely;" i. e. without privacy or reserve.

Ver. 5. When there was an assault made.—Doddridge explains this of a joint attempt about to be made by the bigoted Jews and unbelieving Gentiles, which coming to the ears of Barnabas and Paul, they fled farther, even to Lystra and Derbe.

Ver. 6. Lystra.—[Lystra and Derbe, two cities of Lycaonia, were situated south of Iconium, and north of Mount Taurus; the former being to the west and the latter to the east.—Lycaonia—Now Konieh, was a province of Asia Minor, bounded by Phrygia on the north, Pisidia on the west, Pamphylia and Cilicia on the south, and Cappadocia on the east, made a Roman province under Augustus.]—Bagster.

Ver. 9. Had faith to be healed.—See Mat. ix. 27—29. The man had probably heard that the apostles had wrought miracles, and might show in his countenance and manner (perhaps in words also) a desire to be healed; or Paul might have an immediate suggestion by the Spirit of inspiration.

Ver. 11. The speech of Lycaonia.—Not Greek, but a dialect perhaps approaching the Syriac. Doddridge.—In the likeness of men.—The Greeks supposed that their gods often rendered themselves visible in human form.

Ver. 12. Jupiter.—[Jupiter was the supreme god of the heathen: and Mercury was considered the god of eloquence. The ancients represent Jupiter as an aged man, large, noble, and majestic; and Mercury, young, light, and active; and it is very probable that Barnabas was a large, noble, well-made man: and St. Paul young, active, and eloquent.]—Bagster.

Paul, Mercurius, because he was the chief speaker.

13 Then the priest of Jupiter, which was before their city, brought oxen and garlands unto the gates, and [h] would have done sacrifice with the people.

14 Which when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, they [i] rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out,

15 And saying, Sirs, why do ye these things? We [j] also are men of like passions with you, and preach unto you that ye should turn from these vanities [k] unto [l] the living God, which made [m] heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein:

16 Who [n] in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways.

17 [o] Nevertheless he left not himself without witness, in that he did good, and gave us rain [p] from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness.

18 And with these sayings scarce restrained they the people, that they had not done sacrifice unto them.

19 ¶ And there came thither certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people, and, having [q] stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead.

20 Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe.

21 ¶ And when they had preached the gospel to that city, and [r] had taught many, they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium, and Antioch,

22 Confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue [s] in the faith, and that [t] we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God.

23 And when they had ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they commended them to the Lord on whom they believed.

24 And after they had passed throughout Pisidia, they came to Pamphylia.

25 And when they had preached the word in Perga, they went down into Attalia:

26 And thence sailed to Antioch, [u] from whence they had been recommended [v] to the grace of God for the work which they fulfilled.

27 And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, they rehearsed [w] all that God had done with them, and how he had opened [x] the door of faith unto the Gentiles.

28 And there they abode long time with the disciples.

CHAPTER XV.

1 Great dissension ariseth touching circumcision. 6 The apostles consult about it, 22 and send their determination by letters to the churches. 36 Paul and Barnabas, thinking to visit the brethren together, fall at strife, and depart asunder.

AND [a] certain men which came down from Judea taught the brethren, and said, Except [b] ye be circumcised [c] after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved.

2 When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no small dissension and disputation with them the former nothing particular is recorded, but, at Lystra, the healing of a cripple occasions a very unexpected incident. The poor heathens, when they saw the man whom they knew to have been born lame, leaping and walking, they directly lifted up their voices and exclaimed, "The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men!" Then Barnabas, who was much the elder and more reverend-looking person, they called Jupiter, "the father of gods and men;" and Paul, Mercurius, because he was "the chief speaker." And so much were they in earnest, that the priest of Jupiter brought oxen and garlands unto the gates, and would, with the people, have offered sacrifices to them, had not the apostles exerted all their energy to restrain them.

The address delivered on this occasion is quite in the masterly and energetic style of St. Paul, and may afford us some useful observations. 1. Ministers of the Gospel, even Apostles, are but men; subjects of the same human passions and infirmities with other men; and therefore should not be idolized. 2. Ministers should abase themselves, that they may exalt him that sends them: "We are (say they) as you are, and as your imagined gods were, weak and frail creatures; but we come to teach you to turn from these lying vanities, and worship the true God, the maker of heaven and earth." 3. We see the superiority of Christian ministers to heathen philosophers. The latter believed as little of the Pagan theology as the Christians; but none of them had the fortitude to avow it, or declaim against idolatry: on the contrary, they all occasionally conformed to it, not excepting Socrates himself. 4. God, in many instances, suffers what he does not approve. Thus (chap. xiii. 18) he "suffered" the manners of Israel in the wilderness and in Canaan, and thus did he "suffer all nations to walk in their own ways." Yet, 5. God left not himself without witness to his being and providence—to his power and goodness. Yet, with all these just and temperate observations, scarcely could these poor Pagans be restrained from rendering them divine honours. But, alas! how changeable is man!

The disciples are treated as their Lord; and as it was in the case of Jesus, many of the same voices that pronounced "Hosanna," also shouted, "Crucify him!" So likewise here. Certain Jews, distinguished for their bigotry to Moses and hatred to the Lord Jesus, followed the apostles even hither, and persuaded the multitude that they were impostors and perhaps necromancers; they therefore joined with them in stoning Paul, in a riotous and tumultuous manner, till they supposed him to have been killed. The providence of God, however, wonderfully preserved him; and while the brethren were collecting round him, probably with a view to his interment, he rose up in the midst of them, and next day was so far recovered as to be able to proceed with Barnabas to Derbe. There they made many disciples, and then "returned to Lystra, and Iconium, and Antioch, confirming the believers and encouraging them to persevere, notwithstanding all opposition." And when they had ordained (or appointed) them elders (or presbyters) to instruct and preside among them, they affectionately commended them by prayer "to the Lord, on whom they had believed"—namely, the Lord Jesus, whom they doubtless considered as well able to preserve those whom they so solemnly committed to his care: notwithstanding, they are reminded, they must expect "to pass through much tribulation" in their way to the New Jerusalem.

Proceeding in their return, after passing through several countries which they had before visited, they now pass by sea to Antioch, from whence they first set out on this missionary tour; and there, having collected the church of that city, where they had received their commission, (chap. xiii. 1—3,) "they rehearsed all that God had done with (or rather by) them, and how he had opened the door of faith among the Gentiles:" that is, an opportunity for the preaching and establishment of the gospel among the heathen nations, as had been long foretold.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1—21. A dissension in the church respecting circumcision.—Men whose hearts are not deeply engaged in spiritual religion, are the first to spend their zeal on its external services. The persons here spoken of were "certain men which came down from Judea" to Antioch; and they are afterwards mentioned (verse 5) as being of the sect of the Ver. 13. The priest of Jupiter.—Doddridge remarks, (after Elsner,) that it was customary for the Greeks to build temples to their tutelar deities, in the suburbs of the cities, and to set up their images before the city, at the gates. According to this practice, the priest of Jupiter, who was esteemed the tutelar deity of the place, and whose image was placed in a temple erected to him before the gates of the city, "brought oxen and garlands," (or chaplets,) with which they crowned both gods and sacrifices on such occasions.

Ver. 14. The apostles, Barnabas and Paul.—It is plain, both here and in verse 4, that Barnabas is called an apostle; yet we hear nothing of his being chosen to the apostleship. Some think that Barnabas and Paul are here so called, as messengers of the churches, chap. xiii. 1—3. Yet as Paul was an apostle in the higher sense, we can hardly think Luke would name Barnabas before him, had he been only a messenger of the churches. One thing is remarkable, that Matthias, who was chosen to replace Judas, is heard no more of after his election; yet Barnabas is one of the most conspicuous characters in the book of Acts. It is most certain, that we have only an abstract of the transactions of the apostles, as well as of the Lord Jesus. Is it not possible, therefore, (though not recorded,) that Matthias might have died, and Barnabas have been chosen in his stead?

Ver. 23. And when they had ordained them elders in every church.—Almost every word in this short passage has afforded ground for controversy, of a nature which we purposely avoid. We shall only remark on the word elder, (Greek, presbuteros,) that it is agreed, 1st, to refer to age; and 2dly, to official character; and that consequently, it may, in different texts, refer to persons reverend either in age or office. See Parkhurst.

Ver. 24. Pisidia.—[Pisidia was a province of Asia Minor, situated between Phrygia on the north and west, Lycaonia on the east, and Pamphylia on the south.]—Bagster.

Ver. 25. Perga.—Perga was a considerable city of Pamphylia, towards the sea coast, and near the Caystrus, famous for a temple of Diana.—Attalia.—Attalia, now Antalia, or Satalie, was a maritime city of Pamphylia, the chief residence of the prefect.]—Bagster.

they determined that [d] Paul and Barnabas, and certain other of them, should go up to Jerusalem unto the apostles and elders about this question.

3 And being [e] brought on their way by the church, they passed through Phenice and Samaria, declaring the [f] conversion of the Gentiles: and they caused great [g] joy unto all the brethren.

4 And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church, and of the apostles and elders, and [h] they declared all things that God had done with them.

5 ¶ But there [i] rose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees which believed, saying, [j] That it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the law of Moses.

6 And the apostles and elders came [k] together for to consider of this matter.

7 ¶ And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, Men and brethren, ye know [l] how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe.

8 And God, which [m] knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us;

9 And put no difference between us and them, purifying [n] their hearts by faith.

10 Now therefore why tempt ye God, to put a yoke [o] upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?

11 But we believe that through [p] the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they.

12 ¶ Then all the multitude kept silence, and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul, declaring what miracles and wonders God had wrought [q] among the Gentiles by them.

13 ¶ And after they had held their peace, James answered, saying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me:

14 Simeon hath declared [r] how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name.

15 And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is [s] written,

16 After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up:

17 That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things.

18 Known [t] unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world.

19 Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned [u] to God:

20 But that we write unto them, that they abstain from pollutions of [v] idols, and from [w] fornication, and from things strangled, and from [x] blood.

21 For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being [y] read in the synagogues every sabbath day.

Pharisees; and, of course, more zealous for the ritual than for the moral law. These men not only taught the perpetuity of circumcision, but its absolute necessity to salvation: they insisted, therefore, that the Gentile converts should be circumcised to be received into the Christian church: or, in other words, that the Gentiles must become Jews, before they could be Christians. "It is good always to be zealously affected in a good cause;" but it is much to be regretted, when men not only confine their zeal to external religion, but spend it in promoting schisms. It is moreover to be feared, that this zeal has its foundation generally in the ambition of personal distinction; at least, this was certainly the case with the heresiarchs of the first centuries. While they remained in the church, many of them had neither character nor talents to raise them above others; but the propagation of a new doctrine excited popular attention, and the ability called forth in its defence often excited much greater admiration than the same, or even superior, talents, exerted in the common cause of Christianity. This remark is not meant to discourage freedom of inquiry into the truths of Scripture; but only to check the affectation of novelty and sectarian zeal, by which the peace of the church has been so often unhappily disturbed.

These Christian Pharisees ventured to dispute even with Paul and Barnabas; the church at Antioch therefore deputed those apostles to go and consult the apostles and elders at Jerusalem. On the way thither, through Phenicia and Samaria, these deputies from Antioch related the success with which God had favoured them in preaching among the heathen, which occasioned great joy to all the brethren who heard it: but when they came to Jerusalem, they found there certain Christian Pharisees, maintaining the same opinions with those who had excited these disputes, and who had probably been deputed from them.

The apostles and elders being assembled, Peter, who had returned to Jerusalem after Herod Agrippa's death, "opened the debate by observing, that a considerable time ago God had selected him to preach to the Gentiles, and had blessed his labours with unequivocal success, in purifying their hearts by faith, and in dispensing the Holy Ghost among them, no less than on the Jews. After God himself had thus decided, he said it appeared presumptuous in any person to impose a yoke on the Gentiles, from which the divine indulgence had exempted them. He insisted that the yoke itself, especially when laid on the conscience as necessary to salvation, was intolerable: and he concluded, that even they who still, for charitable and prudential reasons, persisted in the ritual observances, were yet obliged to repose for salvation only on the 'grace of the Lord Jesus Christ,' as well as these Gentiles, who never had observed them at all. This full testimony of Peter was supported by Paul and Barnabas, who gave large proof of the divine grace vouchsafed to the Gentiles. James, who seems to have been the standing pastor of Jerusalem, confirmed the same argument, by the prophets of the Old Testament, agreeably to Peter's declaration of the mercy of God in visiting the Gentiles. He gave his opinion that the Gentiles should no longer be molested with notions subversive of the grace of God, and tending to teach them dependence on human works, instead of the atonement of Christ, for salvation. Only he recommended that the council should direct them to abstain from the pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood." (Milner's Ch. Hist. vol. i. chap. 1.)

On this we shall only here add, that so far from Peter here appearing as "the prince of the apostles," as the Roman Catholics consider him, he speaks with no authority, but as an individual apostle. He does not even appear to have presided as moderator; that office being filled by James, who sums up the argument, and concludes with adding—"Wherefore my opinion (or decision) is," &c.: which words, though in themselves unassuming, yet had they been used by Peter, (as Doddridge observes,) would have been pleaded as decisive of his superiority. As the case stands, they are content to argue from his speaking first on this occasion: a clear proof, as we understand it, that he was not even the president on this occasion, much less did he dictate the decree which was adopted. (See Rhemish Annot. in Acts xv.)

Ver. 22—41. The decree of the Apostles, formed on the suggestion of James, sent to Antioch.—Though James claimed no superiority, it is evident that he presided; and it is much to the honour of his wisdom and prudence, that his suggestions in the council were so unanimously adopted. On the decree itself, we offer the following observations. 1. The introduction severely censures those who, without a divine command, attempt to introduce laws and regulations into the church of God: especially when those laws are of a nature to "subvert the faith," and trouble the consciences of believers, as was the

It may be said, generally, to have extended from Tripoli on the north, to the termination of the ridges of Mount Lebanon on the south, where it met the border of Palestine; and comprehending in breadth the narrow tract between Lebanon and the Mediterranean. Ptolemy, however, makes it extend from the Eleutherus, below Aradus, to Pelusium in Egypt, including all the sea coast of Palestine.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. After much disputing.—Not among the apostles, but between them and the advocates of the necessity of circumcision.—A good while ago.—It was about ten years before that Peter had preached to Cornelius and his company, according to the vulgar chronology; but some refer this expression to the divine decrees. See ver. 18, also note of ver. 13.

Ver. 14. Simeon—i. e. Simon Peter.

Ver. 17. The residue of men.—In Amos ix. 12, our translation reads "The remnant of Edom;" but the LXX. and Arabic read Adam (or men) for "Edom:" and this is generally considered as the true reading. See Kennicott and Newcome.—Whom my name is called—i. e. who are converted to the true God.

22 ¶ Then pleased it the apostles and elders, with the whole church, to send chosen men of their own company to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas; namely, Judas surnamed [z] Barsabas, and Silas, chief men among the brethren:

23 And they wrote letters by them after this manner; The apostles and elders and brethren send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia:

24 Forasmuch as we have heard, that certain [a] which went out from us have troubled [b] you with words, [c] subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law: to whom [d] we gave no such commandment:

25 It seemed good unto us, being assembled with one accord, to send chosen men unto you with our beloved Barnabas and Paul,

26 Men that have hazarded [e] their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

27 We have sent therefore Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by [f] mouth.

28 For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden [g] than these necessary things;

29 That ye abstain [h] from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if ye keep [i] yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well.

30 So when they were dismissed, they came to Antioch: and when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epistle:

31 Which when they had read, they rejoiced for the [j] consolation.

32 And Judas and Silas, being prophets also themselves, exhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed [k] them.

33 And after they had tarried there a space, they were let go [l] in peace from the brethren unto the apostles.

34 Notwithstanding it pleased Silas to abide there still.

35 Paul also and Barnabas continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others also.

36 ¶ And some days after Paul said unto Barnabas, Let us go again and visit our brethren in [m] every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do.

37 And Barnabas determined to take with them John, [n] whose surname was Mark.

38 But Paul thought not good to take him with them, who departed [o] from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work.

39 And the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder one from the other: and so Barnabas took Mark, and sailed unto Cyprus;

40 And Saul chose Silas, and departed, being recommended [p] by the brethren unto the grace of God.

41 And he went through Syria and Cilicia, confirming [q] the churches.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 Paul having circumcised Timothy, 7 and being called by the Spirit from one country to another, 14 converteth Lydia, 16 casteth out a spirit of divination. 19 For which cause he and Silas are whipped and imprisoned. 26 The prison doors are opened. 31 The jailer is converted, 37 and they are delivered.

THEN came he to [a] Derbe and Lystra: and, behold, a certain disciple was there, named [b] Timotheus, the son of [c] a certain woman, which was a Jewess, and believed; but his father was a Greek:

case here, when these men attempted to lay the yoke of the Mosaic law upon the necks of the Gentiles.—2. What relates to the question of circumcision itself, is only negatively expressed: "It seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than" is specified in the articles following, neither of which mention circumcision; consequently that is neither enjoined nor forbidden.—3. The articles named are stated to be "necessary"—that is, things to be necessarily refrained from. Not, indeed, all equally so; for which reason it may be proper to examine them distinctly.

1. To abstain from "meats offered to idols," knowing them to have been so offered; and more especially from partaking of idolatrous feasts, in which the meats had been so offered. To these, no doubt, Christians were frequently invited, and often probably with the view of ensnaring them: we, in this age, (Paganism being abolished,) are not under the same temptations; but it deserves to be considered, whether the attendance of Christians at convivial feasts, where "Jolly Bacchus" and "Glorious Apollo" are invoked and eulogized in song, does not involve conduct very similar to that here prohibited. Meats hung up in the shambles, or presented for food, without any notification of having been so offered, we are elsewhere directed to eat, asking no questions. (1 Cor. x. 25.) —2. As to refraining "from blood and from things strangled," so far as this is merely a repetition of the precept given to Noah, we consider it binding on Gentiles, as well as Jews. (See exposition and notes on Gen. ix. 1—7.) But farther than that, we consider it binding only in cases wherein our liberty, as Gentiles, might hurt the minds of conscientious Jews.—3. "Things strangled and blood," are understood to comprehend all creatures killed for food without discharging the blood from them; but perhaps the original precept to Noah did not go so far, (see our exposition above referred to,) and farther than that went we Gentiles are not bound, otherwise than may be necessary to avoid hurting the consciences of our weaker brethren. (Rom. xiv. 15—20. 1 Cor. viii. 8—13; x. 28.) —4. Fornication: this is, in all cases, a crime against the moral law; but the prohibition seems to be here given with particular reference to the licentious and abominable rites practised in Pagan temples, where the worst crimes made part of their religious services.

With this definitive decree, Paul and Barnabas were dismissed, to return back to the church at Antioch, accompanied by Judas, surnamed Barsabas, and Silas, both "prophets," or inspired men, who confirmed the testimony of the apostles, and exhorted the brethren to resist the doctrine of the Judaizing teachers. Thus was harmony restored to the church, and the common cause of Christianity advanced and prospered.

This has been usually called the first Christian council, and so it was; but it was also unique, as consisting chiefly (if not entirely) of the apostles and other inspired persons; on which account we may the more admire the mild and gentle terms with which the apostolic epistle concludes:—Not, "If any man dispute our authority let him be Anathema;" but, "From which (namely, the things here prohibited) if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well."

A dissension, however, soon arose between Paul and Barnabas. They had agreed to revisit the churches they had already established among the Gentiles; but they differed as to the most suitable person to take with them. Barnabas determined to take with him his relation, John Mark; but Paul, offended with his conduct in deserting them before, refused; and thus they divided, Barnabas went to his native country with his relation above named, but Paul travelled through Syria and Cilicia, accompanied by Silas, who had come with them from Jerusalem. Paul's farther labours and sufferings form the chief subject of the remaining chapters of this book.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1—24. Paul circumcises Timothy—converts Lydia—casts out a demon, and is imprisoned.—Paul meeting with Timothy at Lystra, is so well pleased with him, that he is anxious to introduce him into the Christian ministry under his immediate sanction. As his mother was a Christian Jewess, (though married to a Greek,) he thought it necessary for him to be circumcised, as otherwise the Jews would hold no conversation with him. This done, Paul proceeds in his journey as far as Troas, near the ruins of ancient Troy, on CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1. Timotheus.—In English, Timothy, to whom Paul afterwards addressed two epistles.

2 Which was well [d] reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium.

3 Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and took and circumcised [e] him because of the Jews [f] which were in those quarters: for they knew all that his father was a Greek.

4 And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained [g] of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem.

5 And so were the churches [h] established in the faith, and increased in number daily.

6 Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the region of [i] Galatia, and were forbidden of [j] the Holy Ghost to preach the word in [k] Asia,

7 After they were come to Mysia, they assayed to go into Bithynia: but the Spirit suffered them not.

8 And they passing by Mysia came down to [l] Troas.

9 ¶ And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; There stood a man [m] of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us.

10 And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavoured to go [n] into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the gospel unto them.

11 Therefore loosing from Troas, we came with a straight course to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis;

12 And from thence to [o] Philippi, which is [p] the chief city of that part of Macedonia, and a colony: and we were in that city abiding certain days.

13 And on the [q] sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where [r] prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither.

14 ¶ And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshipped God, heard us: whose heart [s] the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul.

15 And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought [t] us, saying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there. And she constrained us.

16 ¶ And it came to pass, as we went to prayer, a certain damsel possessed [u] with a spirit of [v] divination met us, which brought her masters much gain [w] by soothsaying:

17 The same followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, These men are the servants of the most high [x] God, which show unto us the way of [y] salvation.

18 And this did she many days. But Paul being grieved, turned and said [z] to the spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And [a] he came out the same hour.

19 ¶ And when her masters saw that the hope of their gains [b] was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the [c] market-place unto [d] the rulers,

20 And brought them to the magistrates, saying, These men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble [e] our city,

21 And teach customs, which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe, being Romans.

22 And the multitude rose up together against the shore of the Ægean Sea. While there, he saw in a night vision a Macedonian, who invited his assistance. This he considered as a call in providence to go and preach the gospel in that country: accordingly, "We," says the historian Luke, "came with a straight course to Samothracia—to Neapolis—to Philippi;" and at the latter place he continued for certain days, during which the following events occurred. But before we proceed, it may be proper to observe, that this is the first time St. Luke introduces himself as the companion of St. Paul, and that in the most modest and indirect manner.

Paul and Silas, accompanied by Luke and Timothy, on the first sabbath after their arrival, repair to a public Oratory, or place of prayer, where the pious Jews met for devotional purposes, especially the females, of whom the far greater part of the congregation usually consisted. Among those who now attended was one Lydia, a Jewish proselyte, "whose heart the Lord opened," so that she attended unto Paul's discourses, and received Christian baptism, with all her household. One day, however, as they were going to their devotions, they were accosted in the way by a female slave, who was a demoniac, and possessed a spirit of Python, or divination, like that of the Pythic oracle, whereby she brought her masters (or owners) great gain. Seeing the apostle and his companions daily passing that way, she constantly accosted them, and followed them for many days together, crying, "These men are servants of the most High God, which show unto us the way of salvation."

On the subject of demoniacs, and the reality of possessions, we have already given our opinion freely, and are happy to find our sentiments coincide with those of Preb. Townsend, in his late work. He says, "If it appeared to me to be warranted by the sacred text, I would willingly interpret this passage with Michaelis .... and many others; and believe that the damsel at Philippi was either an impostor, a ventriloquist, insane, diseased with melancholy, or overpowered with her own fancies; but I cannot render the plain language of St. Luke in any but the literal manner. My reason shall always submit to Scripture; and I cannot wrest the words of this Scripture to any other meaning than the usual one, that an evil spirit had influence over the mind and body of this person, enabling her to utter oracular responses."

Dr. Doddridge remarks, "The manner in which Luke relates the story, plainly implies, that he thought it a real possession, and that Paul took it himself in that view. Nor can I apprehend that her behaviour, or his, or that of her masters afterwards, can be accounted for, without allowing it to have been the case."

Mr. Scott, taking the same side, remarks—"Had this damsel's divination been a mere juggle between her and her masters, the command of the apostle could not have detected it, or prevented them from carrying on the deception. .... [But] The owners of this damsel, being sensible that no farther lucre could be made by her, [especially if she was converted to Christianity,] and that her value, if offered for sale, was greatly diminished, were exceedingly exasperated by their loss: and when they had seized on Paul and Silas, and accused them before the magistrates as disturbers of the peace, and teachers of unlawful customs; the multitude, also, being enraged at the

Ver. 4, 5. And they went, &c.—Townsend, on the authority of Lord Barrington and other critics, places these verses at the end of chap. xv.; but Doddridge disapproves the transposition.

Ver. 6. Phrygia—[A country of Asia Minor, had Bithynia and Galatia on the north, Cappadocia on the east, Lycaonia, Pisidia, Pamphylia, and Lycia on the south, and Lydia and Mysia on the west.—Galatia—Was situated between Phrygia on the south, Bithynia and Paphlagonia on the north, and Pontus on the east.—Asia—That is, Proconsular Asia, which included Ionia, Æolia, and Lydia.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Mysia—[Lay between Lydia on the south, Troas on the west, the Propontis on the north, and Phrygia and Bithynia on the east; which had the Euxine on the north, Paphlagonia on the east, and Galatia and Phrygia on the south.]—Bagster.—But the Spirit [of Jesus] suffered them not.—Doddridge says, "So many ancient versions, readings, and citations, add the words [of Jesus,] that I thought myself not only authorized, but obliged, at least to insert them thus, and perhaps might well have omitted the crotchets." Even "The improved (Unitarian) version" inserts them; and adds, "these words are introduced into the text on the most approved authorities." See Griesbach.

Ver. 12. The chief city.—Doddridge, "a city of the first part of Macedonia," which was divided into four parts—"and a Roman colony."

Ver. 13. Where prayer was wont to be made.—Doddridge, "Where, according to custom, was an oratory." Lardner quotes Josephus for such a custom among the Jews, tolerated by the Roman laws.

Ver. 16. A spirit of divination.—Margin, "of Python," or Apollo. Virgil thus describes a Pythoness:—

> "The virgin cries—The god! behold the god!
> And straight her visage and her colour change,
> Her hair's dishevell'd, and her heaving breast,
> And labouring heart, are swollen with sacred rage:
> Larger she seems, her voice no mortal sound
> As the inspiring god, near and more near > Seizes her soul."—Eneid, vi. 46.

Archbishop Potter says, "There were but few that pretended to inspiration but raged after this manner, foaming and yelling, and making a strange, terrible noise; sometimes gnashing their teeth, shivering, and trembling, with a thousand antic motions." The Hebrews called such a one "Mistress of the Ob" (or Aub.) See 1 Sam. xxviii., with which the reader may compare Job xxxii. 18—20.—By soothsaying.—Doddridge, "prophesying."

them: and the magistrates rent off their clothes, and commanded to beat them.

23 And when they had laid [f] many stripes upon them, they cast them into prison, charging the jailer to keep them safely:

24 Who, having received such a charge, thrust them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks.

25 ¶ And at midnight Paul and Silas [g] prayed, and sang [h] praises unto God: and the prisoners heard them.

26 And suddenly there was a great earthquake, so [i] that the foundations of the prison were shaken: and immediately [j] all the doors were opened, and every one's bands were loosed.

27 And the keeper of the prison awaking out of his sleep, and seeing the prison doors open, he drew out his sword, and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled.

28 But [k] Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself [l] no harm: for we are all here.

29 Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came [m] trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas, 30 And brought them out, and said, Sirs what [n] must I do to be saved?

31 And they said, Believe [o] on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy [p] house.

32 And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all [q] that were in his house.

33 And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all [t] his, straightway.

34 And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat [r] before them, and [s] rejoiced, believing in God with all his house.

35 ¶ And when it was day, the magistrates sent the serjeants, saying, Let those men go.

36 And the keeper of the prison told this say-loss of their prophetess, joined in the tumultuous accusation. Whereas, had the apostle satisfactorily detected an artful impostor, [as some suppose her,] they who had been convinced of the cheat, would have been enraged at those who duped them of their money, and not at him who had undeceived them."

The supposition of others, that the girl was deranged, appears to us, however, neither improbable nor inconsistent with her being a demoniac; for, as we have repeatedly remarked, (on Matt. iv. 12—25, and notes; viii. 28, note,) insanity and possession appear to us to have been frequently connected, not only in ancient times, but, in some instances, to the present day. Nor is it a valid objection that, had the girl been mad, the people would surely not have regarded her oracles; this can never rationally be pleaded, while the oracles of poor Brothers, and the unhappy Johanna Southcott, shall be recollected. It is too true, as a popular preacher once said, "People can believe any thing but the gospel"—and this was well said at the moment, when thousands had just been paid, by the higher circles of society, to see a man jump into a quart bottle!!

But to return to the poor slave of Philippi: that she bore witness to the truth, is no objection to the fact of her being possessed, since demons repeatedly witnessed to the divine character of our Saviour as "the Holy One of God." (Mark i. 24. Luke iv. 34.) From what motive the girl, or the demon, thus bore witness to the truth, is not for us to inquire; but it seems to have given Paul much uneasiness; partly, perhaps, lest the people should suppose there might be a league between them. Why he did not work the miracle in the first instance, is another circumstance not within our province to ascertain.

The first effect, however, was to raise a persecution against the apostles: but it is observable, that the charge brought against them is not that of ejecting the demon, for that would have established their power of working miracles; but the introduction of a new religion, which required the sanction of the state. (Compare chap. xvii. 18.) At this the magistrates were so incensed, that, instead of calmly inquiring into the circumstances, they flew into a rage, and ordered them to be scourged, contrary to their own laws; and then committed them to prison, which was rendered the more terrible by the charge given to the jailer, to keep them safely, in consequence of which they were thrust into the dungeon and the stocks. How safely they were kept, we shall see in the following part of the chapter.

Ver. 25—34. Paul and Silas delivered, and the jailer converted.—Paul and Silas appear to have been the only persons here sent to prison; at least, Luke says nothing of either himself or Timothy being committed with them. Let us now, for a moment, glance into the dungeon where Paul and Silas lie, their backs smarting from the rods wherewith they had been scourged, and their legs and feet galled and excoriated with the stocks. Let us listen to their groans. Groans? No; they are occupied in prayer and singing! rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer thus for Him who had so lately died for them—and the other "prisoners heard them." Strange, indeed, must it appear to them, to hear these men, brought in scourged, and with a bitter outcry against them as criminals of the deepest guilt, and likely to be sent to speedy execution, and yet singing as if they expected—not an acquittal only, but a triumph! Great, indeed, must be that grace which can make men happy in prison and in torture!

But, in the midst of this scene of tranquil happiness, lo! a sound from heaven—the prison is shaken to its foundation; all the doors are opened and the fetters broken. The jailer, suddenly awaking, sees, by the glimmer of his midnight lamp, his chamber door is open, and the doors leading to the different dungeons of the prison; he knows that his life must answer for the escape of his prisoners, and therefore, in the first paroxysm of distress, he draws his sword with the design to stab himself. Paul, who was set at liberty, and probably hearing something from the jailer which led him to fear his design of suicide, now cries out aloud, "Do thyself no harm, for we are all here." The hand of self-murder was now arrested, when calling for lights to examine the prison, and leaving the care of the other prisoners probably to his attendants, he sprang trembling into the dungeon where Paul and Silas were, and perceiving they had been the subjects of a signal miracle in their liberation from confinement, he fell at their feet, and cried, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?"

Whether the jailer had heard of a day of future judgment, and thought this extraordinary commotion was a prelude to it; or whether a reflection on his own severe treatment of these extraordinary men now filled him with alarm, we cannot say; but instances have occurred, not few nor distant, in which a sudden conviction of guilt has led persons, under the influence of divine grace, to a true and effectual repentance, as was no doubt the case with this hardened sinner—for such were the characters generally selected for offices of this nature. Without any regard, however, to what he had been, these apostolic preachers proclaim to him a free and full salvation through the Lord Jesus Christ; and not to himself only, but, as his family had by this time gathered round him, to them also. "For they spake unto him the word of life, and to all that were in his house." The "same hour of the night" he washed their stripes, and did what he could to heal them; immediately after which he and "all his were baptized straightway;" and, when they all returned into the house, "he set meat before them, [his prisoners,] and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house."

Before we leave this part of our narrative, we beg leave to offer a caution against a sin unhappily much upon the increase in this country. Suicide, the crime contemplated by the jailer, is a sin both against the gospel and the law. The sixth command as strongly opposes this as any other species of murder: for God, who only can give life, has alone the power to dispose of it. As to the gospel, that teaches us that death is only the path to judgment and a future state, on which it is madness to rush without being summoned or prepared. We hope there are but few Bible-readers in danger from this crime, but the writer has known some; and one case in particular that it may be useful to record. A pious and amiable divine of the last century, at no great distance from London, laboured under great depression of spirits. Being left a short time alone, his razor presented itself to him, and, by the suggestion of the enemy of souls, he seized it, and instantly cut his throat. His family soon came about him, and he uttered these impressive words,—"The Lord has left me but one moment, and see what I have done!" The case (to the best of our recollection) did not prove fatal; but the words are monitory, and should place us on our guard against a temptation from which we have no defence, but confidence in God. Generally speaking, however, we believe this crime arises from the prevalence of infidelity. Fashionable writers have argued against a future state, and readers of a gay and licentious conduct, have flattered themselves that "death is an eternal sleep"—till at length they have made the terrible experiment.

Ver. 35—40. Paul refuses to be released disgracefully.—The remaining verses of this chapter show us into what difficulties men in power often plunge themselves, by making their passions, and not the laws, the rule of their conduct. Whether the jailer or some other person had warned the magistrates of their illegal conduct, they were greatly alarmed when they perceived that they had violated the Roman laws, which ing to Paul. The magistrates have sent to let you go: now therefore depart, and go in peace.

37 But Paul said unto them, They have beaten us openly [t] uncondemned, being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily? nay verily; but let them come [u] themselves and fetch us out.

38 And the serjeants told these words unto the magistrates: and they feared, when they heard that they were Romans.

39 And they came and besought [v] them, and brought them out, and desired [w] them to depart out of the city.

40 And they went out of the prison, and entered into the house of [x] Lydia: and when they had seen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed.

CHAPTER XVII.

1 Paul preacheth at Thessalonica, 4 where some believe, and others persecute him. 10 He is sent to Berea, and preacheth there. 13 Being persecuted of Thessalonica, 15 he cometh to Athens, and disputeth, and preacheth the Lying God, to them unknown, 34 whereby many are converted unto Christ.

NOW when they had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where was a synagogue of the Jews:

2 And Paul, as his manner was, [a] went in unto them, and three sabbath days reasoned with them out of the scriptures,

3 Opening and alleging, that Christ must [b] needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead; and that this Jesus, [c] whom I preach unto you, is Christ.

4 And some [d] of them believed, and [e] consorted with Paul and Silas; and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few.

5 ¶ But the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a company, and set all the city on an uproar, and assaulted the house of [f] Jason, and sought to bring them out to the people.

6 And when they found them not, they drew Jason and certain brethren unto the rulers of the city, crying, [g] These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also;

7 Whom Jason hath received: and these all do contrary [h] to the decrees of Cesar, saying that there is another king, one Jesus.

8 And they troubled [i] the people and the rulers of the city, when they heard these things.

9 And when they had taken security of Jason, and of the other, they let them go.

the imperial power generally protected by exemplary punishments. Paul, they found, was a Roman, and they had punished him unheard—and that with scourging, both which exposed themselves to punishment. It is probable that Paul pleaded his privilege in the first instance, but they were too much influenced by his accusers, the owners of the slave, to attend either to facts or rights. They first punished, and now they dare not judge. Wishing to compromise the matter, they therefore sent their serjeants, beadles, or lictors, the men who had scourged them the day before, to order the jailer to release them in a private manner: but such release they, and especially Paul, refused accepting without a public acknowledgment of his having been unjustly treated. This may be thought somewhat inconsistent with our Lord's direction, to submit to injuries without resistance. These men, however, made no resistance: they, being innocent, suffered as evil-doers; and, had they privately withdrawn from prison, it would naturally have been supposed that they had been guilty of some offence; whereas, in ejecting the demon from the girl, as already mentioned, they only saved the public from the deceptions of an evil demon; and as it respects her owners, whatever claim they might have upon the girl's domestic services, they had certainly no right to employ her to deceive the people and render her unhappy, as the consequence must be; unless we are to believe that it is a good thing to be possessed and controlled by an unclean spirit.

As to the plea of Paul and Silas, that they were Romans, there is no doubt but it was true; and, being so, it could not be their duty, silently and tamely to give up privileges, by the surrender of which others might be injured, and the laws of their country violated with impunity. Bring the case home: suppose an American put upon his trial simply for preaching, and another Judge Jefferies should wish to try him without empannelling a jury; would it be consistent with his duty to submit, and resign his own and the liberties of his country, without a struggle or a plea? Undoubtedly not: nor would it have been right in Paul and Silas to have given up silently their Roman privileges.

They did not, however, refuse to be liberated, nor demand satisfaction for their imprisonment; much less threaten the magistrates with the vengeance of the higher powers. "When they suffered they threatened not:" (1 Peter ii. 23:) but immediately on being brought forth, retired to the house of their amiable convert, Lydia, and "having seen the brethren," who probably assembled at her house, and engaged with them in devotional exercises, and comforted them by an exhibition of divine truth, and of the Lord's merciful conduct toward them, they departed from their city, as they had been desired.

CHAP. XVII. Ver. 1—15. Paul preaches at Thessalonica and at Berea, but is driven from both places by persecution.—In the first instance we find Paul preaching in a synagogue of the Jews at Thessalonica, where he reasoned with them for three successive sabbaths, and probably on some of the intermediate days, in which we remark two important circumstances. 1. He did not confine his reasonings to the subjects of natural religion, nor did he draw his arguments from the Pagan philosophers. These, as we shall see presently, he would sometimes quote, but they never formed his text—he reasoned from the Scriptures. 2. The substance of all his discourses was "Jesus Christ, and him crucified." He reasoned from the Scriptures, "opening and alleging that Christ must needs have suffered [for our sins,] and have risen again from the dead [for our justification.] And this Jesus [added he] whom I preach unto you is CHRIST," or the Messiah. This affords a pointed condemnation of merely moral preaching, which will seldom reform and never convert a sinner. "One may more justly complain of some sermons in our days (says Dr. John Edwards) than the father of old did of Tully's works, that there is not a word of Christianity in them. Tully's Offices and Seneca's Epistles serves many instead of the Bible."

"It is true (said the late learned Bishop Horsley) that it is the great duty of a preacher of the gospel to press the practice of its precepts upon the consciences of men; but then it is equally true, that it his duty to enforce this practice in a particular way, namely, by inculcating its doctrines. The motives which the revealed doctrines furnish are the only motives he has to do with, and the only motives by which religious duties can be effectually enforced."

In answer to the objection, that "the peculiar doctrines of Revelation," as the Trinity, the incarnation, and the atonement, and communion with God, are above the capacities of the common people, his lordship replies, "If this were really the case, the condition of mankind would indeed be miserable, and the proffer of mercy in the Gospel little better than a mockery of their woe; for the consequence would be, that the common people would never be carried beyond the first principles of natural religion. Of the efficacy of natural religion as a rule of action, the world has had the long experience of 1600 years: for so much was the interval between the institution of the Mosaic church and the publication of the Gospel. . . . . Among the vulgar, natural religion never produced any effect at all; among the learned, much of it is to be found in their writings, little in their lives." On the other hand, "Upon the first preaching of the Gospel, the illiterate, the scorn of pharisaical pride, who knew not the law, and

Ver. 37. They have beaten us, &c.—Cicero says, "It is a transgression of the law to bind a Roman citizen: it is wickedness to scourge him." The illegality of the proceeding of the magistrates was farther evident in their condemning and punishing Paul unheard.

were therefore deemed accursed, were the first to understand and to embrace the Christian doctrine."

But to return to the history of St. Paul. At Thessalonica, some of the Jews, on hearing the gospel preached, believed, and associated with Paul and his companions; "of the devout Greeks (or proselytes) a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few; but the Jews, which believed not, raised a mob and a riot among the lowest classes, thinking to bring the holy preachers into trouble, and perhaps destroy them. They therefore assaulted the house of Jason, who appears to have been related to Paul, and gave him shelter; and drew (or dragged) him and the brethren found there before the magistrates, under the usual charge of being troublers of the public peace. Paul and Silas, however, had been conveyed away by night to Berea, and the magistrates taking security of Jason and the other converts to keep the peace, immediately discharged them. At Berea the Christian doctrine was much more favourably received. For as Paul reasoned from the Scriptures, these more liberal-minded Jews, instead of contradicting and blaspheming, "searched the Scriptures daily," to see if these things were as they were represented. The consequence was, as it generally has been, when received with the same candid and inquiring temper, the converts were very numerous. These indefatigable persecutors, however, the unbelieving Jews, hearing of this, followed to Berea, and stirred up another mob, so that the brethren were again compelled to secrete Paul: they accordingly conveyed him towards the sea, whence he sailed to Athens, and there waited for Silas and Timotheus.

Ver. 16—34. Paul preaches at Athens, and with what success.—"On a promontory," says Dr. Wardlaw, "formed by the confluence of two classical rivers, stood Athens, the glory of ancient Greece. High in political eminence and in military fame, it was still more distinguished for the learning, the eloquence, and the polished refinement of its inhabitants; and for the number, variety, and excellence of the works of art produced or collected within its walls: for those magnificent structures of which the very fragments are the admiration of modern nations; for the most exquisite productions of painting and sculpture; for its various schools of philosophy; and, in a word, for all that was elegant and admirable in every branch of science, and art, and literature."

Here Paul waited—some weeks perhaps—for the arrival of his friends and fellow-labourers, Silas and Timothy; and what man of science, or literature, or taste, would not have waited with complacency and delight in the midst of such an assemblage of every thing elegant and splendid, tasteful and ingenious? But not so Paul, "His spirit was stirred, was roused, was agitated within him, when he saw the city given to idolatry," and "full of idols." What were those beautiful statues and paintings, which at the end of 2000 years are still envied and admired? They were idols—the images of imaginary, perhaps of diabolical beings.—What were those beautiful and yet unequalled piles of architecture? They were the temples of those gods.—What was the sum of all their literature and science? "The world by wisdom knew not God."

Paul's spirit was stirred, and what did he? First he disputed with the Jews and proselytes in the synagogue, doubtless recommending to them that Messiah to whom his heart was wholly attached. But may we not venture to believe that, while he did this, he could not refrain from mingling reproof with instruction? "What! children of Abraham, do you not live in a city full of idols, and do you never put in a word on behalf of the one true God, the God of Abraham—the only God here unknown?" He disputed also daily, in the market-place, "with them that met with him," whether plebeians or philosophers. And here, it seems, both the atheistical Epicureans and the disciples of Zeno fell upon him, not with the weapons of violence, but with a kind of sneer, as if he were come to recommend to them some new gods, or demons, as they expressed it. It may seem strange to an English reader, that they should take the resurrection for a deity: but this is not so wonderful, when we consider that they were total strangers to both the doctrine and the name, which being feminine in the Greek language, might easily be mistaken for a goddess.

Ver. 13. Stirred up the people.—"Raising [a storm among] the people." Blackwall in Doddridge.

Ver. 14. To go as it were to the sea.—Doddridge, "As if he were to go by sea." Newcome, "Towards the sea." So Schleusner. Bost and Rephelius have fully proved, that "towards," and not "as it were to," is the true rendering.—Boothroyd.

Ver. 15. Athens—[Was the most celebrated city of Greece, not merely for political greatness and military power, but for the learning, eloquence, and politeness of its inhabitants, and for the cultivation of the arts and sciences. It was situated in a delightful plain of Attica, on the Saronic gulf, opposite the eastern coast of Peloponnesus, in a sort of peninsula formed by the two rivers, the Ilissus and Cephisus, about 35 miles east of Corinth, and four miles from the sea. The ruins of many of the splendid structures for which it was celebrated yet remain.]—Baxster.

Ver. 16. His spirit was stirred.—According to Doddridge, the Greek word signifies sharpened, set on edge. In 1 Co. xiii. 5, a kindred term is rendered "provoked," which word some use here.—Wholly given to idolatry.—Marg. "full of idols," which is more literal.

Ver. 17. Devout persons—i. e. Jewish proselytes.—And in the market.—(Gr. Agora) the market-place, or forum; a large open place, where the people assembled, and on the sides of which there were generally porticoes, or cloisters, where the philosophers used to dispute or lecture; where courts were sometimes held; and where temples and theatres were usually built.

Ver. 18. Epicureans.—[The Epicureans were the followers of Epicurus; who acknowledged no gods except in name, and denied that they exercised any government over the world; and held that the chief good consisted in the gratification of the appetites. The Stoics were the followers of Zeno, and held that all human affairs were governed by fate. Both denied the resurrection of the body, and the immortality of the soul.]—Bagster.—This babbler.—Gr. "a word-scatterer;" which Beza explains in allusion to a little bird, called "the seed-picker," remarkable for picking up scattered seeds: so they mean to insinuate that Paul had picked up scraps of philosophy in the market-place.—A setter forth of strange [i. e. foreign] gods—Or "demons." (Gr. daimonia.) The Greeks used this term for all the invisible powers—celestial, terrestrial, or infernal; gods, heroes, or devils.—Jesus, and the resurrection.—In Gr. Anastasis; which latter, it is generally thought, these Athenians took for a new goddess. The Athenians worshipped Shame, Fame, Desire, &c. as goddesses.

Ver. 21. Some new thing.—Literally, "newer thing." The Athenians were as anxious to hear the last new opinions stated, as some of our ladies to receive the last new fashions from Paris. They are upbraided more than once by Demosthenes for this excessive love of novelty, and it should seem that they are remarkable for the same weakness to the present day. See Orient. Lit. No. 1420.

Ver. 22. Mars' hill.—Gr. Areopagus; the same word as in ver. 19, but here literally translated in the text—there only in the margin.—Too superstitious.—This translation is too harsh. The learned Jos. Mede renders it, "Too full of demons." Doddridge, "Exceedingly addicted to the worship of invisible powers." St. Paul employs the most inoffensive terms in reproving the Athenians; but it is remarkable, that their own writers mention the same fact of their attachment to a multitude of idols. It is said there were more gods worshipped at Athens than in any other part of Greece, and that they kept a double number of festivals. Orient. Lit. No. 1421.

Ver. 25. Neither is worshipped—(Doddridge, served)—with men's hands—i. e. all our services are of no use to him: he needeth nothing from us.

Ver. 26. And hath made of one blood all nations.—By this the apostle assures the Greeks, that, though a Jew, his benevolent affections were by no means confined to his own nation: and at the same time insinuates, that theirs ought not to be restrained from him on that account. The whole family of man have one Father, and men of all nations are therefore brethren.—And hath determined the times before appointed.—Here he addresses both the above classes of philosophers, equally opposing the Epicureans, who refer

CHAPTER XVIII.

3 Paul laboureth with his hands, and preacheth at Corinth to the Gentiles. 9 The Lord encourageth him in a vision. 12 He is accused before Gallio the deputy, but is dismissed. 18 Afterwards passing from city to city he strengtheneth the disciples. 24 Apollos, being more perfectly instructed by Aquila and Priscilla, 28 preacheth Christ with great efficacy.

AFTER these things Paul departed from Athens, and came to Corinth;

2 And found a certain Jew named [a] Aquila, born in Pontus, lately come from Italy, with his wife Priscilla; (because that Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome:) and came unto them.

3 And because he was of the same craft, he

Of the two philosophic sects here mentioned, it may be sufficient for us here to remark their leading principles. The former, the followers of Epicurus, who made the chief good to consist in enjoyment, rid themselves of all fears or trouble in religion, by denying the being and providence of God, and maintaining that all events came by chance or accident. The Stoics, disciples of Zeno, on the other hand, admitted both; but then they tied up the hands of deity by the laws of fate, allowing to neither god nor man a freedom of will or action. These sects, who were perpetually debating with each other, united in attacking Paul; and either not understanding, or at least pretending not to understand him, brought him to the celebrated court of Areopagus; not, so far as appears, under any criminal charge, but that they might have a full exposition of his new and strange principles.

One thing is here necessary to be observed, that though one of the sects denied the being of a God, and the other robbed him of his independence, they both paid so much complaisance to the vulgar, that they were willing to worship any god or every god that they might be required to serve; and therefore, doubtless, looked upon Paul as unaccountably precise and scrupulous in his objecting to idolatry.

We follow Paul, however, into this ancient and august court; not, indeed, as a criminal, but as a stranger, from whom they requested (and perhaps demanded) an account of the strange notions which he attempted to propagate, relative to one Jesus who was crucified, and to the resurrection, (Anastasis,) whom these ignorant philosophers took for a new god and goddess of whom they had never before heard. Standing therefore in the midst of the court, he thus courteously and eloquently addressed them—surrounded, doubtless, by the persons who had desired the statement of his doctrines, and whose national character was that of seeking novelty.

"Men of Athens," said he, "I perceive that, in all things, ye are too superstitious"—or, more literally, "too much addicted to the worship of demons," under which term they understood all the invisible powers, good or evil—"for, as I passed by and beheld your devotions," or, rather, the objects and instruments of your devotion, "I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD." The meaning of this inscription it has cost critics and antiquaries much labour to discover, without attaining absolute certainty on the subject. The opinions to us most probable, and most generally received, are—1. That the inscription referred to the God of the Jews, whose peculiar name they were always reluctant to disclose to the Gentiles, and latterly refused to pronounce themselves. But, 2. the far more general opinion seems to be that adopted by Hammond and Doddridge, and which depends on the following narrative:—Diogenes Laertius (in his Life of Epimenides) relates, that in his time (about 600 years before Christ) there was a terrible pestilence in Athens, to avert which they sacrificed to all the gods whom they supposed able to assist them, but without success. Epimenides therefore advised them to bring some sheep into the Areopagus, and then letting them loose, to follow them, and, when they laid down, to sacrifice to the god whose altar was nearest. Some of these sheep, it is supposed, might lie down, at a time when Athens was far from being so full of idols as in Paul's time, at a distance from any statue or temple, (or perhaps at an equal distance between two,) when, not knowing to what god to direct their worship, they dedicated an altar "to the unknown god," who presided over the spot where the sheep rested. Thus there might be (as is indeed reported) more than one altar of this description. That which Paul saw furnished him with a text for his address, from which he discoursed to them of the ONE great invisible Being, to them unknown, who formed and governs all things. "Him, therefore, whom ye ignorantly worship," and seem to grope after in the dark, "Him, declare I unto you." This great Being, he proceeds to state, had "made of one blood all nations of men,"—or, more literally and properly, "the whole nation of mankind:" representing the world as one great family, "the offspring" of the same Almighty Father, in whom "all live, and move, and do exist." He thence infers that this Universal Parent of mankind could in no way resemble statues of metal or of stone, but was a being of infinite power and activity, presiding over all his creatures, and taking account of all their actions, with the design, at some future day, of bringing all before his bar. With this design he had commanded all men to repent of their idolatry and other crimes, and had ordained that same august person, whose name he preached, to be the judge; and though he had been rejected and crucified by his own nation, yet had God, most nigh, given assurance of such design "in that he had raised him from the dead."

Here he could proceed no farther. The very idea of a resurrection appeared to them all so absurd—to Stoics as well as Epicureans—that they began to mock and ridicule; and even others, not so rude, thought it a matter of so little consequence, that it were better to defer the subject "to a more convenient season." As, however, there was a Joseph and a Nicodemus, in the Jewish sanhedrim, who believed in Jesus, so, even among the judges of the Areopagus, there was a Dionysius who believed, as well as a noble lady, of the name of Damaris, which, with a few others, were all the fruit of his labours in this metropolis of science, literature, and taste.

CHAP. XVIII. Ver. 1—28. Paul preaches at Corinth, and afterwards at Ephesus—the character and talents of Apollos.—From Athens Paul went to Corinth, at that time the metropolis of Greece. "It was, (says Mr. Milner) at once full of opulence, learning, luxury, and sensuality. Here Providence gave him the acquaintance and friendship of Aquila and Priscilla, two Jewish Christians lately expelled from Italy with other Jews by an edict of the Emperor Claudius. With them he wrought as a tent-maker, being of the same occupation; for every Jew, whether rich or poor, was obliged to follow some trade." After the arrival of Silas and Timothy, the apostle earnestly addressed his countrymen in the synagogue at Corinth, but meeting with little beside opposition and abuse all events to chance and accident, and the Stoics, who attribute all to fate; he refers all things to the determination of an infinitely wise and good God, who, as he is the only infinite, is also the only perfectly independent Being.

Ver. 27. If haply—(Doddridge, "possibly")—they might feel after him.—The allusion is to people groping in the dark, and is intended to represent the difficulty of finding out God by the mere light of Nature.

Ver. 28. In him we live, and move, and have our being.—Doddridge. "In him we live, and are moved, and do exist."——For we are also his offspring.—The passage usually supposed to be here referred to, is thus translated:—

"Jove's presence fills all space, upholds this ball;
All need his aid, his power supports us all;
For we his offspring are, and he in love,
Points out to man his labour from above."

See the Phænomena of Aratus. The same words, with the variation of a letter only, are to be found in the Hymn of Cleanthes. See Doddridge.

Ver. 30. God winked at.—Doddridge, "Overlooked." This text does not, cannot mean that God is in any case indifferent to the conduct of his creatures; for it is added, that he commands all men every where to repent, and has appointed a day to judge them. So it was with the nations of Canaan—as winked, he appeared to close his eyes against their iniquities, until they were full, and then fulfilled at once his threatenings against them, and his promises to Abraham. See Gen. xv. 16.

4 And he reasoned in the [c] synagogue every sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks.

5 And when [d] Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in the spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus [e] was Christ.

6 And when they opposed [f] themselves, and blasphemed, he shook [g] his raiment, and said unto them, Your [h] blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles.

7 And he departed thence, and entered into a certain man's house, named Justus, one that worshipped God, whose house joined hard to the synagogue.

8 And [i] Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized.

9 ¶ Then spake the Lord to Paul in the night by a vision, Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace:

10 For I [j] am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee: for I have much people in this city.

11 And he [k] continued there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them.

12 ¶ And when Gallio was the deputy of Achaia, the Jews made insurrection with one accord against Paul, and brought him to the [l] judgment seat, 13 Saying, This fellow persuadeth men to worship God contrary to the law.

14 And when Paul was now about to open his mouth, Gallio said unto the Jews, If it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdness, O ye Jews, [m] reason would that I should bear with you:

15 But if it be a question of words and names, and of your [n] law, look ye to it; for I will be no judge of such matters.

16 And he drave them from the judgment seat.

17 Then all the Greeks took [o] Sosthenes, the chief ruler of the synagogue, and beat him before the judgment seat. And Gallio cared for none of those things.

18 ¶ And Paul after this tarried there yet a good while, and then took his leave of the brethren, and sailed thence into Syria, and with him Priscilla and Aquila; having shorn [p] his head in [q] Cenchrea: for he had a vow.

19 And he came to Ephesus, and left them there: but he himself entered into the synagogue, and reasoned [r] with the Jews.

20 When they desired him to tarry longer time with them, he consented not;

21 But bade them farewell, saying, I must by all means keep this feast that cometh in [s] Jerusalem: but I will return again unto you, if [t] God will. And he sailed from Ephesus.

22 And when he had landed at Cesarea, and gone up, and saluted the church, he went down to Antioch.

23 And after he had spent some time there, he departed, and went over all the country of [u] Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening [v] all the disciples.

24 ¶ And a certain Jew named [w] Apollos, born at Alexandria, an eloquent man, and mighty in the scriptures, came to Ephesus.

25 This man was instructed in the way of the Lord; and being fervent [x] in the spirit, he spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord, knowing [y] only the baptism of John.

26 And he began to speak boldly in the synagogue: whom when Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more [z] perfectly.

27 And when he was disposed to pass into Achaia, the brethren wrote, exhorting the disciples to receive him: who, when he was from them, he turned to the Gentiles, and shaking his garment, with an intimation that he was free from the blood of his own nation, who had refused his message, he immediately devoted his whole attention to the idolatrous Corinthians. Crispus, however, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house, as did also Justus, at whose house he lodged, adjoining to the synagogue. Many also of the idolatrous Corinthians believed, and were baptized, and it is possible that he might now be ready to think his work here completed; but, in a vision of the night, he was animated and encouraged to persevere by the assurance of his heavenly Master: "Be not afraid; but speak and hold not thy peace, for I have much people in this city." He accordingly continued there a full year and a half, "teaching the word of God among them."

It was to be expected that the Jews would be exasperated by his success among the Gentiles, and they made zealous attempts to hinder him. "But the moderate spirit of the Roman government (says the excellent church historian above cited) prevented them from raising any serious persecution. Gallio, the proconsul, brother to the famous Seneca, was perfectly indifferent concerning the progress of Christianity, and refused to pay the least attention to their complaints against St. Paul, who now finding himself effectually preserved from the fury of his countrymen, remained in Corinth some considerable time longer than the above-mentioned year and a half.

The Romans evidently, and indeed justly, considered the Jews as a factious, quarrelsome, and superstitious people; and it was upon this principle that Gallio refused to listen to their complaints; and, indeed, afterwards, when the Greeks took Sosthenes, who was a ringleader against the Christians, and beat him before the judgment seat, he refused to interfere; for which, however, we cannot commend him, for he ought to have kept the peace: but "Gallio cared for none of those things."

From Corinth Paul came to Ephesus, another celebrated Greek city, whither Aquila and Priscilla accompanied him. Here he addressed the Jews with better acceptance, for they wished him to tarry with them; but, having determined to attend the next feast at Jerusalem, he proceeded on his journey, promising shortly to return.

After Paul had left this city, Apollos came, an Alexandrian Jew, who is described as "an eloquent man, mighty in the Scriptures, and fervent in spirit," but as yet but partially acquainted with Christianity, "knowing only the baptism of John." Aquila and Priscilla, however, when they heard his

Ver. 3. Tent-makers.—A very important trade at that time, when tents were much in use; and ranking probably with our trunk-making. The early Rabbies made no secret of their trades. One was surnamed the shoemaker, another the baker, &c. (See Doddridge.) Paul's motive was evidently that he might not be burdensome to the churches for support. See 1 Co. iv. 12. 2 Co. xii. 14.

Ver. 5. Pressed in the spirit.—Doddridge, "borne away by (his) spirit." Heinsius and others, "by the spirit," meaning the Holy Ghost. But some ancient copies read, "was earnestly employed in the word;" i. e. in preaching. See Griesbach.

Ver. 6. Shook his raiment.—As signifying, as he said, that he was clean, 'pure," or "clear" of their blood. Compare chap. xx. 26. A like ceremony is still used in Turkey. See Orient. Lit. No. 1425.

Proconsul of Achaia, or Greece.—Achaia.—[Achaia proper, was a province of Peloponnesus, bounded on the north by the gulf of Corinth, on the south by Elis and Arcadia, on the east by Sicyon, and on the west by the Ionian sea but in its largest sense, it comprehended all Greece. —B.

Ver. 14. Wrong—i. e. injustice.

Ver. 17. Sosthenes, the chief ruler.—Probably the successor of Crispus, who had been converted, (ver. 8.) and of course of an opposite spirit, and in this case the prosecutor.

Ver. 18. Cenchrea—[Now Kenkri, was the port of Corinth, on the east side of the isthmus, and about nine miles from the city.]—Bagster.—For he had a vow.—This appears to have been the vow of the Nazarite, for it is said, he had "shaved his head at Cenchrea." By the original law, it appears that Nazarites were to shave their heads "at the door of the tabernacle," Num. vi. 18; but this must have been dispensed with, in the instance of persons residing in foreign countries, as well as that of going up to the three great feasts; the Rabbies, however, considered such persons as bound to come to Jerusalem to complete their vows; and this is supposed to be the reason that Paul was so anxious to go up and keep the approaching feast, ver. 21. It should not be concealed, however, that Grotius, Hammond, Witsius, and others, consider Aquila (and not Paul) as the person who had made the vow; and the naming Aquila after Priscilla, (contrary to every other instance,) favours this interpretation. If this be adopted, the word there, in ver 19, must refer, not to Ephesus, but to Cenchrea.

CHAPTER XIX.

6 The Holy Ghost is given by Paul's hands. 9 The Jews blaspheme his doctrine, which is confirmed by miracles. 13 The Jewish exorcists 16 are beaten by the devil. 19 Conjuring books are burnt. 24 Demetrius, for love of gain, raiseth an uproar against Paul. 35 which is appeased by the town clerk.

AND it came to pass, that, while Apollos [a] was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the upper coasts came to Ephesus: and finding certain disciples,

2 He said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not [b] so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost.

3 And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto [c] John's baptism.

4 Then said Paul, John [d] verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, [e] saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus.

5 When they heard this, they were baptized in the name [f] of the Lord Jesus.

6 And when Paul had laid [g] his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and [h] they spake with tongues, and [i] prophesied.

7 And all the men were about twelve.

8 ¶ And he went into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months, [j] disputing and [k] persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God.

9 But when divers were [l] hardened, and believed not, but spake evil [m] of that [n] way before the multitude, he [o] departed from them, and separated the disciples, disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus.

10 And this continued by the space [p] of two years; so that all they which dwelt in Asia [q] heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks.

11 And God wrought special [r] miracles by the hands of Paul:

12 So that from his body were brought unto the sick [s] handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them.

13 ¶ Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them [t] to call over them which had evil spirits the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, We adjure [u] you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth.

14 And there were seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief of the priests, which did so.

15 And the evil spirit answered and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?

16 And the man in whom the evil spirit was leaped [v] on them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded.

17 And this was known to all the Jews and Greeks also dwelling at Ephesus; and fear [w] fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified.

18 And many that believed came, and [x] confessed, and showed their deeds.

19 Many of them also which used curious arts brought their books together, and burned them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver.

admirable talents and slender information, took him to their home, instructed him more fully in the peculiar truths of the gospel, and gave him letters of commendation to the brethren whither he travelled, to whom be became very useful, especially in preaching to the Jews, whom "he mightily convinced, and that publicly, showing by the Scriptures that Jesus was the Christ," the true Messiah, promised to their fathers.

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 1—22. The Holy Ghost given by Paul's hands. The Jewish exorcists confounded, and their books burnt.—We now find Paul returned to Ephesus, according to his promise, (chap. xviii. 21,) where he finds about a dozen of John's disciples, who, though they associated with the Christians, had received only John's baptism, and appear to have heard nothing of the miraculous events of the day of Pentecost. They now, however, willingly consented to receive baptism in the name of Jesus, after which, Paul laying his hands on them, they received the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit, and prophesied and spake with tongues.

Paul, during his three months' continuance here, attended and preached at the Jewish synagogue, "disputing" with objectors, and "persuading" them to believe in Christ Jesus, and to receive the doctrines and precepts of his kingdom. Some of the Jews, however, were so hardened, that they not only refused to receive the truth themselves, but abused those who did believe, insomuch that Paul and his friends were obliged to withdraw from them, and hold their meetings in the schoolroom of one Tyrannus. "All at Ephesus and the adjacent country heard the word of the Lord Jesus, and many of them, both Jews and Greeks, believed."

"In no place (says Mr. Milner) does the word of God seem so much to have triumphed as at Ephesus. No less numerous than those of Corinth, the believers were much more spiritual. The work of conversion was deep, vigorous, and soul-transforming to a great degree. Many persons, struck with the horror of their former crimes, made an open confession; and many, who had dealt in the abominations of sorcery, now showed their sincere detestation of them, by burning their books before all men, the price of which amounted to a large sum. 'So mightily grew the word of God, and prevailed!' Thus triumphs the sacred historian. Satan must have trem-

CHAP. XIX. Ver. 1. The upper coasts—i. e. The upper parts of Asia Minor, which were more remote from the Mediterranean sea.—Ephesus—[A much celebrated city of Ionia in Asia Minor, and the metropolis of Proconsular Asia, was situated on the river Cayster, and on the side of a hill, about 35 miles north of Miletus, 40 south of Smyrna, 100 west of Laodicea, and 5 miles from the Ægean sea. It was particularly famous for a magnificent temple of Diana, 425 feet long, and 220 broad; which was supported by 127 columns 70 feet high. It had become a ruinous place when the emperor Justinian filled Constantinople with its statues, and raised the church of St. Sophia on its columns, A. D. 528—566; and all that remains of this once splendid city, about half a mile from the village of Aiasaluck, when visited by Dr. Chandler, was inhabited by "a few Greek peasants, living in extreme wretchedness, dependance, and insensibility." An American clergyman who visited it in 1821, says, "not a human being lives in Ephesus; and at Aiasaluck there are merely a few Turkish huts." The candlestick has now been removed out of its place. Re. ii. 5.]—B.

Ver. 2. Whether there be any Holy Ghost—That is, whether it be yet given. A parallel ellipsis occurs John vii. 39: "The Holy Ghost was not yet;" i. e. "not yet given," as our translators supply the word. So here, they "had not heard whether the Holy Ghost were yet given." This is the sense we believe generally given to the passage; and it is difficult to believe that any of John's disciples should not have heard of the Holy Ghost, for he said, "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me . . . . he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost." Mat. iii. 11. John i. 33.

Ver. 5. Baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.—This seems clearly to indicate, that John's was not Christian baptism, or it would not have been repeated.

Ver. 6. The Holy Ghost came on them.—Namely, his miraculous powers; for, it is added, "They spake with tongues, and prophesied."

Ver. 10. All they which dwelt in Asia.—This term (Asia) was used to very different extents in different periods. Paley says, "Asia, throughout the Acts of the Apostles and the Epistles of St. Paul, does not mean the whole of Asia Minor, or Anatolia, nor even the whole of the Proconsular Asia; but a district in the anterior part of that country, called Lydian Asia, divided from the rest, much as Portugal is from Spain, and of which district Ephesus was the capital."

Ver. 12. Handkerchiefs or aprons.—The former the Asiatics usually carry in their hands to wipe off perspiration, as, we are informed by Œcumenius and Harmer, was the case both formerly and is to this day; the latter resembled napkins tied before them, (or "half round," as the original imports, see John xxiii. 4,) to preserve their garments, when doing any thing that might soil them—as, perhaps, tent-making. Even these were made the instruments of curing diseases and ejecting demons.

Ver. 13. Exorcists.—The original term literally means those who cast out demons, by adjuring them in God's name. That some of the Jews made this profession, even in our Lord's time, is certain from Mat. xii. 26—28. Mark ix. 38. Luke ix. 49, &c. The Jewish exorcists certainly used the name of the God of Abraham, but finding the name of Jesus, as they supposed, a more potent charm, were willing, as Dr. Hammond remarks, (on Mat. xii. 27,) to exchange it for that of Jesus.

Ver. 19. Curious arts.—The principal of these were, 1. Astrology, or the prediction of events by the configuration of the planets. 2. Necromancy, or conferring (whether really or in pretence) with the souls of dead men, or with infernal spirits. The witch of Endor was a pretender to this art. 1 Sam. xxviii. 3. Magic, the power of producing wonderful effects by secret arts, or spiritual agency: but it is often used in a sense so extensive, as to include both the preceding. 4. A science peculiar to this people, was that of the Ephesian Letters, or mystic characters, of which some account may be found both in Hammond and Doddridge, but which, as we do not pretend to understand we shall not attempt to explain. They were, however, used as magical spells, or charms, by these people.—Fifty thousand pieces of silver.—Probably about $8000. The Earl of Rochester, of whom it has been said, that he was "a great wit, a great scholar, a great poet, a great singer, and a great penitent," left a strict charge to the person in whose custody his papers were, to burn all his profane and lewd writings, as being only fit to promote vice and immorality, by which he had so highly offended God, and shamed and blasphemed that holy religion into which he had been baptized.

through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Jerusalem, saying, After I have been there, I must also see [a] Rome.

22 So he sent into Macedonia two of them that ministered unto him, Timotheus and [b] Erastus; but he himself stayed in Asia for a season.

23 And the same time there arose no small stir [c] about that way.

24 For a certain man named Demetrius, a silversmith, which made silver shrines for Diana, brought no small [d] gain unto the craftsmen;

25 Whom he called [e] together with the workmen of like occupation, and said, Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth.

26 Moreover ye see and hear, that not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people, saying [f] that they be no gods, which are made with hands:

27 So that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought; but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be [g] despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world [h] worshippeth.

28 And when they heard these sayings, they were full of [i] wrath, and cried out, saying, Great is Diana of the Ephesians.

29 And the whole city was filled with confusion: and having caught [j] Gaius and [k] Aristarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travel, they rushed with one accord into the theatre.

30 And when Paul would have entered in unto the people, the disciples suffered him not.

31 And certain of the chief of Asia, which were his friends, sent unto him, desiring [l] him that he would not adventure himself into the theatre.

32 Some [m] therefore cried one thing, and some another: for the assembly was confused; and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together.

33 And they drew Alexander out of the multitude, the Jews putting him forward. And Alexander [n] beckoned with the hand, and would have made his defence unto the people.

34 But when they knew that he was a Jew, all with one voice about the space of two hours cried out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians.

35 And when the town clerk had appeased the people, he said, Ye men [o] of Ephesus, what man is there that knoweth not how that the city of the Ephesians is [p] a worshipper of the great goddess Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter?

36 Seeing then that these things cannot be bled for his kingdom: the emptiness of all the systems of philosophy appeared no less palpable than the flagitiousness of vice, and the enormities of idolatry. The spiritual power of Jesus was never seen in a stronger light since the day of Pentecost; and the venal priesthood of Diana, the celebrated goddess of Ephesus, apprehended the total ruin of their hierarchy."

We are farther informed, that it pleased God to honour Paul with powers singularly miraculous, such as the cure of diseases and the ejection of demons, by means of handkerchiefs and aprons which he wore, of which we recollect nothing parallel in the New Testament. But every instrument is equally effective when endued with a divine virtue—the power is alone of God.

Satan is ever imitating where he cannot rival; he now stirred up certain vagabond (or travelling) Jews, the seven sons of a chief priest, exorcists by profession, who took upon them to call over them that had evil spirits, saying, "We adjure you by Jesus, whom Paul preacheth." This was a dangerous experiment. Jesus they knew, and Paul they knew, but these men they knew not; they were glad therefore to escape naked and wounded from the hands of one of these demoniacs. Dr. Boothroyd says, "I should think that this man was insane." We should think so too, and believe that maniacs often are possessed; yet we would by no means assert that all are possessed who are insane, or all insane who are possessed.

This miracle had a salutary effect in calling the public attention to the divine superiority of the Christian religion; and the present contest reminds us of that between Moses and the magicians of Egypt. The latter, indeed, did wonders in the sight of Pharaoh, by turning their rods (apparently) into serpents; but that of Moses evinced a superior power, by devouring them. (See on Exod. vii. and viii. exposition and notes.) Ephesus seems to have been at this time as much famed for curious arts as Egypt, at least if we may judge by the quantity of books here brought together to be burned, which, valued at the lowest calculation, were worth $8,436. (Doddridge.) It is well known in what estimation curious books of this kind were formerly held, both astrological and magical; yet such a fear now fell upon the professors of these arts, that they voluntarily brought them and cast them into the fire; and those who had believed in Jesus, by this act confessed their guilt, and renounced such practices for ever. Much do we regret that any who profess the name of Christian (and we have known some such) should waste their precious time on studies so unholy and unprofitable.

We neither pretend nor aspire to any skill in these mysteries of iniquity. The far greater part of them are unquestionably artifice and trick; and yet, since "the prince of the power of the air" holds a mighty dominion in this world, we are far from considering him inactive, or attributing all to human skill or effort. Indeed we cannot, without a violence to the sacred narrative, which subverts the authority of the Scriptures, and sets aside their inspiration. Mrs. More remarks, that at the time of the French Revolution, many persons sold their copies of the infidel writings of Voltaire and others very cheap; but they had not the honesty to burn them: this, therefore, only increased their circulation, instead of checking it.

Ver. 23—41. Demetrius raises an uproar against Paul, which is suppressed by the town-clerk.—We have here an instance how much idolatry was supported by private interest among the pagans. Besides a large establishment of priests and priestesses, many others were maintained by the erection of temples and the manufacture of idols, not only for the temples and public processions, but also portable representations of the temple and the indwelling deity, both on medals and enclosed in boxes, (like those of the French musical boxes,) to be carried in the pocket or girdle, for the purpose of private idolatry, or perhaps of fashion. Demetrius, and a numerous body of fellow-craftsmen, it appears, lived by the various branches of this trade, and he makes no secret of it among them, that he was actuated more by his interest than devotion: "Ye know that by this craft we have our wealth." It was necessary, however, to carry this point with the populace, that he should put on the mask of religious zeal, and praise "the great goddess Diana," her image, and her temple, which, indeed, for its beauty and magnificence, was considered as one of the wonders of the world.

Ver. 22. Erastus—Chamberlain of Corinth.—See Rom. xvi. 23.

Ver. 23. No small stir about that way.—Namely, the Christian worship, in opposition to idolatry.

Ver. 24. Which made silver shrines.—These shrines are understood to mean small models of the temple, with the goddess within; and Pliny mentions such of the Venus of Cnidus. The late Mr. Taylor, in his Fragments, No. cxxvii., has given various figures of this goddess, most of them ending in what artists call a term; as also the copy of a medal exhibiting the famous temple of Diana, with the idol in the centre.——Craftsmen—i. e. artisans, including casters, chasers, engravers, &c.

Ver. 26. Saying that they be no gods, which are made with hands.—Implying, as Doddridge remarks, that Demetrius would have them believe they were.

Ver. 28. Diana.—[The Ephesian Diana is represented in some statues all covered with breasts, from the shoulders down to the feet; and in others from the breast to the bottom of the abdomen; from which we find that she was widely different from Diana the huntress, and that she represented Nature, as is stated on two inscriptions in Montfaucon.]—Baxter.

Ver. 29. Into the theatre.—Theatres, it is known, were sometimes used for public meetings; but from the great tumult raised on this occasion, and other circumstances it has been supposed that the Ephesians were at this time celebrating games to the honour of Diana.——Macedonia—[An extensive province of Greece, was bounded on the north by the mountains of Hæmus, on the south by Epirus and Achaia, on the east by the Ægean sea and Thrace, and on the west by the Adriatic sea; celebrated in all histories as being the third kingdom which, under Alexander the Great, obtained the empire of the world, and had under it 150 nations.]—Baxter.

Ver. 31. Certain of the chief of Asia.—The Asiarchs, here mentioned, were the priests who presided in the Greek games, whence a principal reason of the conjecture in the last note: some of these, it appears, were so far friendly to Paul, (as a man of talents, perhaps,) that they wished to save his life.

Ver. 33. Alexander.—Who this was is uncertain; some have supposed it to have been "Alexander the coppersmith," but it is plain, from the opposition made to him, that he was a friend of Paul.

Ver. 35. The town clerk.—Doddridge, "The Chancellor." Taylor, "The Recorder," which is more literal. This appears to have been an officer of high rank and great influence.—Is a worshipper.—Doddridge, "Is devoted to." He means to represent the city of Ephesus as the guardian (Neokoron) of her temple, her image, and her rites. Mr. Taylor seems to think it impossible that the Ephesians could believe that a carved statue came down from heaven; but if the people of Rome can believe that the house of "our Lady of Loretto" was removed thither from Nazareth in a night, what is there more incredible in believing that a statue should be lowered from the skies? This original statue of Diana, according to different accounts, was of ivory, of cedar, or the vine.—Orat. Lit. No. 1431 1435.

spoken against, ye ought to be quiet, and to do [q] nothing rashly.

37 For ye have brought hither these men, which are neither [r] robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess.

38 Wherefore if Demetrius, and the craftsmen which are with him, have a matter against any man, [s] the law is open, and there are deputies: let them implead one another.

39 But if ye inquire any thing concerning other matters, it shall be determined in a [t] lawful assembly.

40 For we are in danger to be called in question for this day's uproar, there being no cause whereby we may give an account of this concourse.

41 And when he had thus spoken, he dismissed the [u] assembly.

CHAPTER XX.

1 Paul goeth to Macedonia. 7 He celebrateth the Lord's supper, and preacheth. 9 Eutychus having fallen down dead, 10 is raised to life. 17 At Miletum he calleth the elders together, telleth them what shall befall to himself, 28 committeth God's flock to them, 29 warneth them of false teachers, 32 commendeth them to God, 36 prayeth with them, and goeth his way.

AND after the uproar [a] was ceased, Paul called unto him the disciples, and embraced them, and departed for to go [b] into Macedonia.

2 And when he had gone over those parts, and had given them much [c] exhortation, he came into Greece,

3 And there abode three months. And when the Jews laid wait [d] for him, as he was about to sail into Syria, he purposed to return through Macedonia.

4 And there accompanied him into Asia Sopater of Berea; and of the Thessalonians, [e] Aristarchus and Secundus; and Gaius of Derbe, and [f] Timotheus; and of Asia, [g] Tychicus and [h] Trophimus.

5 These going before tarried for us at Troas.

6 And we sailed away from Philippi after the days [i] of unleavened bread, and came unto them to [j] Troas in five days; where we abode seven days.

7 ¶ And upon the first [k] day of the week, when the disciples came together to break [l] bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight.

8 And there were many lights in the upper [m] chamber, where they were gathered together.

9 And there sat in the window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep: and as Paul was long preaching, he kind of turret, (sometimes triple,) her neck ornamented with signs of the zodiac and other emblematical figures, her body covered with from two to four rows of small breasts with nipples, and all her drapery adorned with carved figures of lions, oxen, deer, or other animals, down to her feet. There can be no doubt but this image was intended to represent the bounty of Nature to man and all the animal creation; for, on some of the statues have been found this inscription, "All-diversified Nature, the universal mother." Such seems to have been the light in which philosophers viewed the idol; but the vulgar look no farther than external forms: give them a beautiful and splendid figure to adore, and they make little inquiry after the properties of the being it may be intended to represent.

While, however, we pity the folly and stupidity of these ignorant heathen, we can but admire the temper and moderation of some of the magistrates, particularly the town clerk or recorder of Ephesus, who discovers great address in the manner in which he governs and controls these "beasts of Ephesus;" and the argument he uses in favour of Paul and his companions does them honour as well as himself. 1. They were not (as he observes) guilty of sacrilege; they had done no violence to their temples, an excess into which zealous reformers too often fall, and of which some of our countrymen, at the time of the reformation, cannot be wholly cleared: nor, 2. Did they abuse (or blaspheme) either the goddess or her priests. They taught, indeed, "that they be no gods which are made with hands:" and thus they endeavoured to enlighten their minds; but they cautiously avoided exasperation, either in their language or their actions. We are happy to see that the same course is pursued by our modern missionaries; and we doubt not but, eventually, their labours will be crowned with a like success, of which, indeed, we have had a happy specimen, both among the civilized Pagans of the East, and the rude, uncultivated savages of the South.

As to Paul's conduct on this occasion, he was not deficient either in zeal or courage, for it appears he would have plunged into the theatre amidst all the mob, had it not been for the prudence of his friends, who used their utmost exertions to prevent him.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 1—16. Paul goeth to Macedonia, and preaches at Troas.—This great commotion of the worshippers of the Ephesian goddess, Diana, having subsided, Paul called a meeting of the brethren, and took an affectionate leave of them. He then, passing through Troas, from thence crossed the sea to Macedonia, where he visited the Philippians, Thessalonians, and Bereans, to whom he had before sent Timothy and Erastus, the former of whom had since returned, and remained in Ephesus. From Macedonia Paul came to Greece, (or Achaia,) where he abode three months, and chiefly (it should seem) at Corinth. From thence he was about to sail into Syria, with some relief for his poor brethren in Judea. Finding, however, that his design was known, and that he was waylaid by some of his old enemies, the Jews, he resolved to return through Macedonia to avoid them, and several of his brethren and coadjutors going on before, waited for him at Troas, in Phrygia, where Paul staid seven days, as it should seem, to worship with them on the following Sabbath.

We have before remarked, in treating of the fourth command, that the devotion of a seventh part of our time to public worship was enjoined from the beginning, and might justly be considered as a part of the moral law. The particular day, however, seems to have been a point of minor importance, and as the injunction of the Jewish sabbath is sometimes made in reference to the deliverance from Egypt, as well as to the rest at the creation, (compare Deut. v. 15, with Gen. ii. 2,) it seems so far to have been a part of the ceremonial law, and of course to have subsided with it. (See Rom. xiv. 5. Col. ii. 16.) It would, however, be very contrary to the spirit and tenor of the New Covenant, to suppose that Christians should have no stated times for divine worship; and we do in fact find that, from the time of our Lord's resurrection, there is no recognition of a seventh day sabbath in the Christian church, especially among the gentiles, though there are many proofs of the first day of the week being occupied in religious worship.

In this our Lord himself set the example by repeatedly appearing on that day to his disciples. (John xx. 1, 19, 26.) On that day, it is believed, fell the day of Pentecost; and, in the chapter now before us, we find the Christians, at Troas, were accustomed to meet on the same day for religious worship, and for "breaking bread," or the administration of the Lord's Supper. On this day the churches were required to make collections for their poor and afflicted brethren. (1 Cor. xvi. 2.) This day also appears to be marked by the Apostle John as the Lord's day, (Rev. i. 10,) which we naturally understand to mean, the day on which he arose from the dead. The first day of the week was, therefore, peculiarly honoured in apostolic times, and we know that it has been observed as the Christian sabbath ever since.

A question has been raised, however, on the expression, (ver. 7,) "When the disciples came together to break bread," which, it is agreed, might apply to those charitable meals which the first Christians held with each other, and which were certainly not held without prayer for a divine blessing: yet, as it is here stated that the special object of their meeting on the "first day" was to "break bread;" and since the Lord's Supper is clearly designated by St. Paul as breaking bread, (1 Cor. x. 16;) and as we know that the sacrament just named was usually celebrated on that day, it seems most natural so to apply it in the passage now before us. (See note on ver. 7.)

We are no friends, generally speaking, to long sermons; but

Ver. 37. Robbers of churches.—The word "churches," is here very improperly introduced; the original (hierosulous) means sacrilegious persons—"robbers of temples," as Doddridge renders it.

Ver. 38. The law is open.—"Court days are kept." Doddridge. "Courts are held."——And there are deputies—i. e. the Roman proconsuls, or procurators.

Ver. 39. Lawful assembly—i. e. lawfully called together.

CHAP. XX. Ver. 2. Greece—[That is, Greece properly so called, bounded on the west by Epirus, on the east by the Ægean sea, on the north by Macedonia, and on the south by the Peloponnesus. In its largest acceptation, it also comprehended all Macedonia, Thessaly, Epirus, Peloponnesus, and the circumjacent islands.]—Bagster.

Ver 5. Tarried for us.—Another indirect hint that Luke the Evangelist was now travelling with Paul.——Troas—[Was a maritime city and country of Phrygia, in Asia Minor, anciently called Dardania, lying on the Hellespont, west of Mysia.]—Bagster

Ver. 6. Philippi—[So called after Philip, king of Macedon, who fortified it against the incursions of the Thracians, was one of the chief cities of Macedonia, situated at the east of the river Strymon, on a rising ground which abounded with springs, and on the borders of Thrace.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Came together to break bread.—In Acts ii 42, 46, we have followed Doddridge, in referring this phrase to the friendly meals of the disciples: but, upon farther consideration, we are inclined to make a distinction between the breaking of bread, and prayers," in verse 42, which, as closely connected with public worship, we should refer to the Eucharist; and the "breaking of bread from house to house," as connected with "eating their meat with gladness;" this we would apply to their friendly and domestic meals.

Ver. 9. In a window.—Doddridge, "an open window," with a wooden casement, which he supposes was set open to admit the air, on account of the many lamps burning, (ver. 8.) As we know not the construction of the building, we cannot exactly tell how he fell. Perhaps it was a large house, with three lofts or stories, fitted up in a temporary manner for the occasion.

sunk down with sleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead.

10 And Paul went down, and fell [n] on him, and embracing him said, [o] Trouble not yourselves; for his life is in him.

11 When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day, so he departed.

12 And they brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted.

13 ¶ And we went before to ship, and sailed unto Assos, there intending to take in Paul: for so had he appointed, minding himself to go afoot.

14 And when he met with us at Assos, we took him in, and came to Mitylene.

15 And we sailed thence, and came the next day over against Chios; and the next day we arrived at Samos, and tarried at Trogyllium; and the next day we came to Miletus.

16 For Paul had determined to sail by Ephesus, because he would not spend the time in Asia: for he hasted, if it were possible for him, to be [p] at Jerusalem the day of [q] Pentecost.

17 ¶ And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church.

18 And when they were come to him, he said unto them, Ye know, from the first day [r] that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons,

19 Serving the Lord with all [s] humility of mind, and with many [t] tears, and [u] temptations, which befell me by [v] the lying in wait of the Jews:

20 And how [w] I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have showed you, and have taught you publicly, [x] and from house to house,

21 Testifying both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, repentance [y] toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ.

22 And now, behold, I go [z] bound in the spirit unto Jerusalem, not [a] knowing the things that shall befall me there:

23 Save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying, [b] that bonds and afflictions [c] abide me.

24 But none [d] of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might [e] finish my course with joy, and the ministry, [f] which I have received [g] of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God.

25 And now, behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more.

26 Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am [h] pure from the blood of all men.

27 For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel [i] of God.

28 Take heed [j] therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you [k] overseers, to feed [l] the church of God, which he hath purchased [m] with his own blood.

29 For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves [n] enter in among you, not sparing [o] the flock.

30 Also of [p] your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them.

31 Therefore [q] watch, and remember, that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn [r] every one night and day with tears.

32 And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which [s] is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance [t] among all them which are sanctified.

33 I [u] have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel.

34 Yea, ye yourselves [v] know, that these hands have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me.

from such a preacher, and on such an occasion, no service could appear long or tedious. At the same time, it can be only on extraordinary occasions, wherein the Christian affections are deeply interested, that such sermons should be tolerated; for, generally speaking, they weary more than they edify the hearers.

The melancholy incident here related of Eutychus, must not only have interrupted, but damped the pleasure of the present meeting; yet this must have been more than compensated by the pleasure received from his restoration, especially to his friends. We are far from apologizing for sleepers in public worship, nor does this instance afford either encouragement or apology for such conduct; for where would Eutychus have been if Paul had not been there? and who would willingly die sleeping under a sermon? As, however, we know nothing of this young man, charity would lead us to hope that there might be palliative circumstances in his case.

Ver. 17—38. Paul's farewell address to the elders of the church at Ephesus.—Though Paul dare not trust himself to stop at Ephesus, lest he should be detained by the kindness of his friends, his own feelings would not suffer him to pass them unnoticed: when, therefore, he anchored off Miletus, he sent a special messenger to desire the elders (or presbyters) of Ephesus to meet him there. They did so; and he addressed to them the most tender and affectionate charge that ever was delivered on such an occasion—and inferior only (if it may be called inferior) to that which his Divine Master delivered to his apostles just before his death. The charge now before us (limited as our room is) we must not pass without some observations.

1. We have his solemn appeal to them as to his affection, fidelity, and disinterestedness, when he laboured among them, as mentioned in ch. xix. "Ye know, from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you in all seasons." 2. He gives a brief summary of the doctrines which he had delivered among them, "Repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ;" which comprise "all the counsel of God" for man's salvation. Convic-

Ver. 13. Assos.—[Assos, Trogyllium, and Miletus, (now called Melas and Palatsha,) were maritime cities of Asia Minor; the former in the province of Troas, the second in Lydia, a little below Ephesus, and about five miles from Samos, and the latter in Caria, about ten stadia south of the mouth of the river Meander. Mitylene was a city on the east side of the island of Lesbos, now Mytilini, reckoned about seven miles from the main land; next to which is the island of Chios, now Scio, opposite Smyrna, and about four leagues from the continent; and south-east of which is the island of Samos, now Samo, about five miles from the coast of Asia.]—Bagster.——To go afoot—Or "by land."

Ver. 16. To sail by Ephesus—i. e. to sail past it, that he might not be detained there.

Ver. 19. Temptations.—Doddridge, "trials."

Ver. 22. Bound in the spirit.—Our translators, by referring in the margin to chap xix. 21, understood this in the sense of being firmly resolved: but Doddridge, and the commentators generally, explain this, of his going under "a strong impulse" of the Spirit of God.

Ver. 26. Pure from the blood of all men.—See note on chap. xviii. 6.

Ver. 27. For I have not shunned.—Doddridge says, "the proper import of the word in such a connexion, (as used by Demosthenes and Lucian,) is to disguise any important truth; at least to decline the publication of it."—All the counsel of God.—There is no doubt but the original term (boule) means both decree and advice. The former in Luke xxiii. 51. Acts ii. 23, and elsewhere. But this cannot be the sense here, for who shall declare all the divine decrees? The latter must be understood, Luke vii. 30. In Acts xxvii. 42, 43, we read, "The soldiers' counsel (i. e. advice) was to kill the prisoners; but the centurion, willing (i. e. determined) to save Paul, kept them from their purpose" (or will) to kill them. Here we have both senses of the word.

Ver. 28. Overseers.—Gr. Episkopous, or Bishops. The German Lutherans call their Bishops "Superintendents."——To feed the church of God.—Griesbach gives no less than six readings. That of our common version is found in about seventeen Greek MSS., of which one, the Vatican, (in the Pope's library,) is reckoned of the 5th or 6th century. This reading is also supported by the Syriac of the 6th, and two Fathers of the close of the 4th century. Another reading, "The church of the Lord," has the following authorities:—"Of MSS., all the most ancient, the most valuable, and those derived from different and independent sources, viz. the Alexandrian, the Ephrem, the Cambridge, Abp. Laud's, and many others of various dates, from the 4th to the 8th centuries. Of the Versions, the two Coptic, the Armenians, the Old Italic, of Fathers, Irenæus, Eusebius, Athanasius, Chrysostom, and many others. The preponderance of evidence is thus in favour of LORD, (Kurion,") which is therefore decidedly adopted by Griesbach, and approved by Dr. Pye Smith. Boothroyd, however, adopts another reading, which embraces both "Lord and God." On this he judiciously remarks, "I have preferred the last, (the one just named,) as supported by the greatest number of MSS. collated [viz. one ancient and 46 others,] and as accounting best for the other variations. For it is more easy to omit a word in transcribing than to insert one; and one transcriber might omit God and insert Lord, as judging the latter more accordant with what follows. The reading he admits to be singular, but finds the sentiment in John xx. 28: and the phrase "church of the Lord," occurs not in the New Testament.

Ver. 29. Grievous wolves.—Our Lord describes false prophets as "wolves in sheep's clothing;" so false teachers in the Christian church are described as not only erroneous, but rapacious—"not sparing the flock."

Ver. 31. Three years.—See chap. xix. 8, 10. After preaching three months in the synagogue, he taught two years in the school of Tyrannus: but the

CHAPTER XXI.

1 Paul will not by any means be dissuaded from going to Jerusalem. 9 Philip's daughters prophetesses. 17 Paul cometh to Jerusalem. 27 where he is apprehended, and in great danger, 31 but by the chief captain is rescued, and permitted to speak to the people.

AND it came to pass, that after we were gotten from them, and had launched, we came with a straight course unto Coos, and the day following unto Rhodes, and from thence unto Patara:

2 And finding a ship sailing over unto Phenicia, we went aboard, and set forth.

3 Now when we had discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand, and sailed into Syria, and landed at Tyre: for there the ship was to unlade her burden.

4 And finding disciples, we tarried there seven days: who said [a] to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem.

5 And when we had accomplished those days, we departed and went our way; and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city: and we kneeled [b] down on the shore, and prayed.

6 And when we had taken our leave one of another, we took ship; and they returned home again.

7 And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day.

8 And the next day we that were of Paul's company departed, and came unto Cesarea: and we entered into the house of Philip [c] the evangelist, [d] which was one of the [e] seven; and abode with him.

9 And the same man had four daughters, virgins, which [f] did prophesy.

10 ¶ And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judea a certain prophet, named [g] Agabus.

11 And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, So [h] shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles.

12 And when we heard these things, both we, and they of that place, [i] besought him not to go up to Jerusalem.

13 Then Paul answered, What mean ye to tion of sin, though not the foundation of faith in Christ, is necessary previous to laying that foundation. Those who know not their need of such a Redeemer, cannot value him as such; but when they know and feel this, faith in Christ provides them with righteousness, both for justification and a holy life. We add, 3. That Paul taught "both publicly and from house to house." The labours of the pulpit are far from being the whole of ministerial duty: in domestic preaching "from house to house," it is much more difficult to be faithful, and still more arduous is the task to exhibit in the life all the precepts taught. Of Paul, indeed, it might well be said,—

> "His preaching much, but more his practice wrought,
> (A living sermon on the truths he taught!)
> For this by rules severe his life he squar'd,
> That all might see the doctrines which they heard!"—Dryden.

4. We remark, that Paul's labours, both public and private, severe as they might be, formed but a part only of his duty. He had not only to labour, but also to suffer. "The Holy Ghost witnesseth, (said he,) in every city, that bonds and afflictions abide (or wait for) me;" watching, as it were, for my arrival—as his history abundantly evinces. 5. That no labours, no dangers, no sufferings, daunted or discouraged him in his work! God, his Saviour, had purchased the church "with his own blood;" and he "counted not his life," his blood, dear to himself, so that he might be instrumental in edifying that church;—so that he might "finish his course with joy," and receive from his Master that divine plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant!" 6. He closes all with earnest prayer, commending them to God and to the word of his grace: exhorting them to "support the weak" and relieve the necessitous; and reminding them particularly of an unrecorded saying of our Lord Jesus, that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." The concluding verses are inimitably beautiful and pathetic. They require no comment, and they admit no paraphrase. "And when he had thus spoken, he kneeled down, and prayed with them all. And they all wept sore, and fell on Paul's neck, and kissed him; sorrowing most of all for the words that he spake, that they should see his face no more. And they accompanied him unto the ship."

CHAP. XXI. Ver. 1—20. Paul resolutely pursues his journey to Jerusalem, notwithstanding the predicted consequences. It was with no small difficulty that St. Paul "got" from the brethren. The original implies that he was obliged to tear or wrest himself from them, to pursue his voyage. He next landed at Tyre, where the ship was to unlade her freight; there, finding disciples endowed with gifts of prophecy, they warned him by the Spirit, that he had better not go up to Jerusalem. So Beza explains the passage: "They, understanding by the revelation of the Spirit, what dangers awaited Paul, out of affection, and not by any special divine command, entreated him not to go up to Jerusalem, being ignorant of what the same Spirit had commanded Paul." The warning was afterwards repeated at Cesarea, by Agabus, who predicted by a sign, in the manner of the old prophets, that he should be there imprisoned. "And when we heard these things, (saith Luke,) both we, and they of that place, besought him not to go up to Jerusalem." At this it is evident that Paul's mind was stirred and agitated, and he broke out into this impassioned exclamation—"What, mean ye to weep and break my heart? for I am ready, not to be bound only, but also to DIE at Jerusalem, for the name of the Lord Jesus." Thus "none of these things moved him;" and therefore, adds the inspired historian, when (we found) he would not be persuaded, we ceased, saying, "The will of the Lord be done."

It would afford but little edification to our readers to examine the progress of Paul's journey, (which is best done upon the map;) we shall only remark the general opinion, that Paul did not fulfil his whole voyage in one ship, but in two or three, (as was common in those coasting voyages,) as circumstances might require. The chief fact we here wish to remark is, the strong bond of affection that united Christians with their common Lord. Wherever they went, the first inquiry seems to have been, Are there here any that love our Lord Jesus? and that circumstance, independent of all others, was a bond "strong as death." Fellow Christians were brothers and sisters in the same family; they were children of the same heavenly Father, bought with the same blood, actuated by the same Spirit; so that they were indeed ONE, not in name and opinion only, but in heart. They also paid a particular attention to the heralds of salvation: when any one came preaching the Lord Jesus, they were attracted to him as by magnetism: they clung together as grapes upon the true vine; and we may believe they seldom parted without kneeling together in prayer, whether it were in the church, or in the house, or "on the sea shore," as at Tyre: and it was this invincible attachment which occasioned the heathen to say proverbially, "See how these Christians love!"

But we must not generalize.—When Paul came to Jerusalem

He was accompanied from Wittemburg by six pious divines, and one hundred

14 And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased, saying, The k will of the Lord be done.

15 And after those days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jerusalem.

16 There went with us also certain of the disciples of Cesarea, and brought with them one Mnason of Cyprus, an old l disciple, with whom we should lodge.

17 ¶ And when we were come to Jerusalem, the brethren received m us gladly.

18 And the day following Paul went in with us unto n James; and all the elders were present.

19 And when he had saluted them, he declared particularly o what things God had wrought among the Gentiles by p his ministry.

20 And when they heard it, they glorified the Lord, and said unto him, Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe; and they are all zealous q of the law:

21 And they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles to forsake Moses, saying that they ought not to circumcise r their children, neither to walk after the customs.

22 What is it therefore? the multitude must needs come s together: for they will hear that thou art come.

23 Do therefore this that we say to thee: We have four men which have a vow on them;

24 Them take, and purify thyself with them, and be at charges with them, that they may shave t their heads: and all may know that those things, whereof they were informed concerning thee, are nothing; but that thou thyself also walkest orderly, and keepest the law.

25 As touching the Gentiles which believe, we u have written and concluded that they observe no such thing, save only that they keep themselves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from strangled, and from fornication.

26 Then Paul took v the men, and the next day purifying himself with them entered w into the temple, to signify the accomplishment x of the days of purification, until that an offering should be offered for every one of them.

27 ¶ And when the seven days were almost ended, the Jews y which were of Asia, when they saw him in the temple, stirred up all the people, and laid z hands on him,

28 Crying out, Men of Israel, help: This is the man, that a teacheth all men every where against the people, and the law, and this place: and farther, brought Greeks also into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place.

29 (For they had seen before with him in the city Trophimus b an Ephesian, whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple.)

30 And all the city was moved, and the people ran together: and they took Paul, and drew him out of the temple: and forthwith the doors were shut.

31 And as they went about c to kill him, tidings came unto the chief captain of the band, that all Jerusalem was in an uproar.

he was introduced to the apostle James, and the elders of that church: and when he related "what (wonderful) things God had wrought among the Gentiles by his ministry, they glorified the Lord," and, in return, directed him to observe what, also, the Lord had done among his countrymen, the Jews: "Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe!"

Ver. 21—40. Paul, conforming to the customs of the Mosaic law, is set upon by the Jews, but rescued by the chief captain.—Our last section introduced Paul to his brethren at Jerusalem. At the same time, as they joyfully state the number of converted Jews now in Jerusalem, they use this as an argument with him to conform to the Jewish rites, for they were "all zealous of the law." On this account they had been strongly prejudiced against Paul, because they had heard it reported that he had encouraged the Jewish converts, residing among the Gentiles, to neglect circumcision, and other rites of the Mosaic law. This his brethren did not believe; but in order to counteract a report so likely to impede his usefulness, they wish him to unite with four brethren that were then under the vow of the Nazarite, and defray (in part or in whole) the charge of their joint sacrifices, the price of which must have been considerable. (See Numbers vi. 14, 15.)

If it were Paul who took the vow at Cenchrea, (ch. xviii. 18,) and he was now come to Jerusalem to offer the appointed sacrifices, this proposal was very opportune: but to that no reference is here made. It was, however, according to Josephus, an ancient custom among the Jews, for others who had not taken the Nazarite's vow themselves, to contribute toward, or to defray wholly, the expenses of sacrifice for others, especially those who were not well able to afford the charge. This some thought a work of great merit; but it is not to be supposed our apostle, who was a great opponent of the doctrine of human merit, undertook it with such views, but merely to abate the prejudices of his Jewish brethren.

Paul's sentiments on the Jewish dispensation are fully explained in his Epistles. He considered the Jewish ritual as no longer obligatory; yet he did not wish to treat it with contempt, nor to offend his Jewish brethren, who did not yet see its abrogation. Infidel writers have abused his conduct in this respect, as trimming and time-serving; but as his object was not worldly interest, but to subserve the cause of Christ, we see not with what propriety it can be condemned. He became "all things to all men," that by any means, "he might save some." (1 Cor. ix. 22.)

This conciliatory measure, however, had an effect far different from what had been intended. It was not to be supposed that Paul would, or could, refrain from speaking to a Gentile convert in the city; but his being seen to do this was sufficient to raise an alarm, when his old enemies were on the watch. He had been seen with one "Trophimus, an Ephesian," whom "they supposed he had brought into the temple," probably from seeing there a person somewhat like him. On this ground (whether real or pretended) an alarm was raised: Paul was seized and dragged out of the temple, and the door closed, to prevent other Gentiles from going in. The whole city was immediately in an uproar, and they fell to beating Paul, and would doubtless have killed him, if the Roman power had not interfered. But notice of the riot being given to the chief officer of the Roman band, which kept guard at the outer gates of the temple, to prevent any riot during the public festivals he came immediately, with soldiers, to his rescue; and, supposing him some great criminal, (particularly the Egyptian, who had made a riot some time before,) he ordered him to be bound with two chains, and inquired into the charges against him; but obtaining no satisfaction from his accusers, he command-horse: but he took only eight horsemen into Worms. When he stept out of the carriage, he said, in presence of a great number of persons, "God shall be on my side."

Ver. 15. Carriages.—[The word carriages here denotes any thing that is carried, luggage or baggage. The original, aposkeuasmenoi, from apo, from, and skeuos, furniture, baggage, signifies, having packed up one's baggage.] —Bagster.

Ver. 16. Brought with them one Mnason.—(Pronounced Nason.) [Or, "conducting us to one Mnason . . . . with whom we might lodge." Mnason, a native of Cyprus, probably then lived at Jerusalem; though he might have been down at Cesarea, met the apostles, and invited them to lodge with him.]—Bagster.

Ver. 20. How many thousands.—Doddridge, "Myriads," (so the Greek:) but he thinks the word may here rather be taken for a large, than a precise number; perhaps he says, twenty or thirty thousand were present at Jerusalem to keep the feast: but we believe there were often many more

Ver. 21. That they ought not to circumcise, &c.—St. Paul's conduct, with regard to Timothy, might have been a sufficient answer to this part of the charge See ch. xvi 3

Ver. 24 Be at charges with them—[That is, in furnishing sacrifices: which as a common and very popular act among the Jews. Thus Josephus observes, that Agrippa, among other acts of thankfulness for being advanced from a prison to a throne, ordered very many Nazarites to be shaven, furnishing them with money for their expenses.]—Bagster.

Ver. 25. As touching the Gentiles which believe.—[James and the elders here avow, that they intend nothing contrary to their former determination respecting the Gentile converts. It is doubtful whether on this occasion Paul and his advisers acted in strict consistency with Christian simplicity; and it seems very difficult wholly to defend them from the charge of temporizing, accommodating, and refining too much in this matter. Though the apostles were infallibly preserved from mistaking, corrupting, or mutilating the doctrine which they communicated to the church, yet it is evident, they were not rendered infallible in their personal conduct.]—Bagster.

Ver. 26. Then Paul took the men.—This has been censured by Voltaire and others, as a weak act of temporizing to please the people: but see Findlay' Answer to Voltaire.

they saw the chief captain and the soldiers, they left beating of Paul.

33 Then the chief captain came near, and took him, and commanded him to be bound • with two chains; and demanded who he was, and what he had done.

34 And some cried one thing, some another, among the multitude: and when he could not know the certainty for the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the [f] castle.

35 And when he came upon the stairs, so it was, that he was borne of the soldiers for the violence [g] of the people.

36 For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, Away [h] with him.

37 ¶ And as Paul was to be led into the castle, he said unto the chief captain, May I speak unto thee? Who said, Canst thou speak Greek?

38 Art not thou that [i] Egyptian, which before these days madest an uproar, and leddest out into the wilderness four thousand men that were murderers?

39 But Paul said, I [j] am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a [k] citizen of no mean city: and, I beseech thee, suffer me to speak unto the people.

40 And when he had given him license, Paul stood on the stairs, and [l] beckoned with the hand unto the people. And when there was made a great silence, he spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, saying,

CHAPTER XXII.

1 Paul declareth at large, how he was converted to the faith, 17 and called to his apostleship. 22 At the very mentioning of the Gentiles, the people exclaim on him. 24 He would have been scourged, 25 but claiming the privilege of a Roman, he escapeth.

MEN, [a] brethren, and fathers, hear ye my defence [b] which I make now unto you.

2 (And when they heard that he spake in the Hebrew tongue to them, they kept the more silence: and he saith,)

3 I am [c] verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, yet brought up in this city at the feet of [d] Gamaliel, and taught [e] according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, and [f] was zealous toward God, as ye [g] all are this day.

4 And I persecuted [h] this way unto the death, binding and delivering into prisons both men and women.

5 As also the high priest doth bear me witness, and all the estate of the elders: from whom also I received letters unto the brethren, and went to [i] Damascus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jerusalem, for to be punished.

6 And it came to pass, that, as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me.

7 And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

8 And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest.

9 And they that were with me [j] saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me.

10 And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do.

11 And when I could not see for the glory of that light, being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus.

12 And one [k] Ananias, a devout man according to the law, having a good [l] report of all the Jews which dwelt there, 13 Came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him.

14 And he said, The [m] God of our fathers hath chosen [n] thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and see [o] that [p] Just One, and shouldest hear the voice [q] of his mouth.

15 For thou [r] shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard.

ed him to be brought immediately to the castle of Antonia, on the stairs (or steps) of which he obtained leave to speak in his own defence.

CHAP. XXII. Ver. 1—30. Paul's defence to his brethren, in the Hebrew tongue.—Having obtained permission of the Roman commander, Paul now addresses his countrymen in their own dialect, which, for some time, procured their attention. The account of his birth, education, persecuting zeal, and extraordinary conversion, having been before narrated, will require but little observation here, especially as the narrative will again come under our notice in his speech before Agrippa.

The only new fact here developed in relation to St. Paul, is the trance which he had in the temple, when the Lord Jesus appeared to him, and warned him to leave Jerusalem, and go and preach unto the Gentiles. In this case Paul seems to have had too much confidence in his own strength, and but a slight acquaintance with the obduracy of the human heart. He thought the narrative he could unfold would be so affecting and convincing—such an appeal to facts within their own knowledge, as must be irresistible: that when they saw a man who had been brought up in the same religious principles, and had been actuated by the same persecuting zeal as themselves; that such a man had been so completely changed, that he was now ready to die in the behalf of that Jesus whom he so bitterly had persecuted, that his ministry must have been here abundantly successful. So it is said of the celebrated Melancthon, when he first began to preach, that he thought his arguments and his eloquence would be irresistible; but a little experience convinced him, as himself expressed it, "that old Adam was indeed too strong for young Melancthon." Paul was not left, however, thus to waste his strength by "going a warfare," as it were, "at his own expense." He was directed whither to go, and a power went with him that insured success. But when his countrymen heard it avowed that his commission was to the Gentiles, they (as on former occasions) would not hear another word, but "lifted up their voices" in one continued cry—"Away with such a fellow from the earth."

It is probable that the chief captain did not well understand this speech, which was in Hebrew, from his having previously

Ver. 34. The castle.—[This was the castle built by John Hyrcanus, the high priest, at the angle formed by the northern and western porticoes of the outer court of the temple. It was anciently called Baris; but Herod having repaired and beautified it, called it Antonia, in honour of his friend Mark Antony. Josephus describes it as having four towers, from one of which the whole temple was overlooked; and that one of the towers was joined to the porticoes of the temple, and had a double pair of stairs from it, by which the soldiers in the garrison were used to come down with their arms to the porticoes, on the festival days, to keep the people quiet.]—Bagster.

Ver. 38. That Egyptian, &c.—[This Egyptian is mentioned by Josephus, who says, that he pretended to be a prophet, and persuaded a multitude of people to follow him to the top of mount Olivet, telling them that they should see the walls of the city fall down before them; but Felix attacked them with horse and foot, killed 400 on the spot, took 200 prisoners, and put the Egyptian himself to flight.]—Bagster.

Ver. 39. Tarsus.—[Tarsus, now called Tarsous and Tarasso, was an ancient and celebrated city of Cilicia, situated in a plain on the banks of the Cydnus. It was made the metropolis of Cilicia; and from its adherence to the Romans, it was made a free city, and probably endowed with the citizenship of Rome, by Julius Cesar. It was a rich and populous city; and was once the rival of Alexandria and Athens in literature and the polite arts. Josephus.] —Bagster.——A citizen of no mean city.—The people of Tarsus boasted their high antiquity from Tarshish, the son of Javan, Gen. x. 4. 17 And it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a [u] trance;

18 And saw [v] him saying unto me, Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem: for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me.

19 And I said, Lord, they [w] know that I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue them that believed on thee:

20 And when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed, I [x] also was standing by, and consenting [y] unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him.

21 And he said unto me, Depart: for [z] I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles.

22 ¶ And they gave him audience unto this word, and then lifted up their voices, and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth: for [a] it is not fit that he should live.

23 And [b] as they cried out, and cast off their clothes, and threw dust into the air, 24 The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the castle, and bade that he should be examined by scourging; that he might know wherefore they cried so against him.

25 ¶ And as they bound him with thongs, Paul said unto the centurion that stood by, Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a [b] Roman, and uncondemned?

26 When the centurion heard that, he went and told the chief captain, saying, Take heed what thou doest: for this man is a Roman.

27 Then the chief captain came, and said unto him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? He said, Yea.

28 And the chief captain answered, With a great sum obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was free born.

29 Then straightway they departed from him which should have [c] examined him: and the chief captain also was afraid, after he knew that he was a Roman, and because he had bound him.

30 ¶ On the morrow, because [d] he would have known the certainty wherefore he was accused of the Jews, he loosed him from his bands, and commanded the chief priests and all their council to appear, and brought Paul down, and set him before them.

CHAPTER XXIII.

1 As Paul pleadeth his cause, 2 Ananias commandeth them to smite him. 7 Dissension among his accusers. 11 God encourageth him. 14 The Jews' laying wait for Paul 20 is declared unto the chief captain. 27 He sendeth him to Felix the governor.

AND Paul, earnestly beholding the council, said, Men and brethren, [a] I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day.

2 And the high priest Ananias commanded them that stood by him to smite him [b] on the mouth.

3 Then said Paul unto him, God shall smite thee, thou whited wall: for sittest thou to judge me after the law, and commandest me to be smitten [c] contrary to the law?

4 And they that stood by said, Revilest thou God's high priest?

5 Then said Paul, I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest: for it is [d] written, Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people.

6 ¶ But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, I [e] am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee: of [f] the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question.

7 And when he had so said, there arose a dissension between the Pharisees and the Sadducees: and the multitude was divided.

8 For the Sadducees [g] say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit: but the Pharisees confess both.

9 And there arose a great cry: and the scribes that were of the Pharisees' part arose, and strove, saying, We find [h] no evil in this man: but if a [i] spirit or an angel hath spoken to him, let us not [j] fight against God.

asked the apostle, (ch. xxi. 37,) Canst thou speak Greek? He was therefore about to have recourse to the barbarous custom of that age, of extorting confession by the torture of the whip, but Paul's privilege as a Roman citizen again saved him from it; and finding with whom he now had to do, the chief captain loosed his bands, and ordered all his accusers to appear before him on the following day, when Paul was set before them, again to make his own defence.

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 1—16. Paul's defence before the sanhedrim.—Lysias, the chief captain, seems here to have maintained the full dignity of the Roman power, for though he brought down the prisoner before the council, it was by his command (ch. xxii. 30) that the chief priests and council were now assembled, with Ananias in the chair: but probably without his official robes, or the insignia of his former office. Paul again began his defence, avoiding repetition of what he had said the day before, in these simple and inoffensive terms:—"Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God unto this day." This was only pleading not "guilty," as every prisoner has certainly a right to do when put on trial; yet so offended was this priestly tyrant, Ananias, that he ordered Paul to be smitten on the mouth to silence him: on which the apostle, by the spirit of prophecy, predicted the judgment that shortly after came upon him. The expression, "Thou whited wall," seems to have an allusion to that of our Lord, who compares the Scribes and Pharisees to "whited sepulchres," which are beautiful without and rottenness within. (Matt. xxiii. 27.) And the judgment predicted was remarkably fulfilled; for though he stood on good terms towards the Jews in general, he so cruelly defrauded the inferior priests, as to bring on him the public vengeance: and, after his house had been burnt to ashes in a public tumult, when he attempted to

Ver. 17. When I was come again to Jerusalem.—After he had been to Damascus and Arabia—then while he was in the temple—perhaps in a portico, and at a time when no one was with him.

Ver. 19. Lord, they know.—Paul is understood here to plead for the probability of his success among the Jews, on the ground of his having been formerly a persecutor.

Ver. 20. Consenting unto his death.—So ch. viii. 1. Scott thinks this version much too weak. The word rendered "consenting," implies a complacency in the deed; and the word rendered "death," implies "murder."

Ver. 23. Cast off their clothes.—Sir J. Chardin mentions, that the Persians, when they complain to their sovereign, go in numbers, with strange cries, tearing their garments, and casting dust into the air.—Harmer's Obs.

Ver. 24. The chief captain.—[As the chief captain did not understand Hebrew, he was ignorant of the charge against Paul, and also of the defence which the apostle had made; but as he saw that they grew more and more outrageous, he supposed that Paul must have given them the highest provocation, and therefore, according to the barbarous and irrational practice which has existed in all countries, he determined to put him to the torture, in order to make him confess his crime.]—Bagster.—Examined by scourging.—This is the cruel method by which evidence was formerly extorted; but it was not applicable to a Roman citizen. See note on ch. xvi. 37.

Ver. 25. Is it lawful for you?—[By the Roman law, no magistrate was allowed to punish a Roman citizen capitally, or by inflicting stripes, or even binding him; and the single expression, I am a Roman citizen, arrested their severest decrees, and obtained, if not an escape, at least a delay of his punishment.]—Bagster.

Ver. 28. I was free born.—[It is extremely probable that the inhabitants of Tarsus, born in that city, had the same rights and privileges as Roman citizens, in consequence of a grant or charter from Julius Cesar, from whom it was called Juliopolis. But, if this were not the case, St. Paul's father, or some of his ancestors, might have been rewarded with the freedom of the city of Rome, for his fidelity and bravery in some military service, as Josephus says several of the Jews were; or he might have obtained it by purchase, as in the instance of the chief captain.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XXIII. Ver. 2. To smite him on the mouth.—Hanway mentions, that when a rebel Persian chief was brought before one of Nadir Shah's generals, his answers not pleasing him, he ordered him to be struck across the mouth, to silence him, which was done with such violence, that the blood issued forth. Compare 1 Kings xxii. 24.

Ver. 3. God shall smite thee.—[God did smite him in a remarkable manner; for about five years after this, after his house had been reduced to ashes, in a tumult raised by his own son, he was besieged and taken in the royal palace; where, having attempted in vain to hide himself, he was dragged out and slain. See Josephus.]—Bagster.

Ver. 5. I wist (knew) not, &c.—Ananias had certainly been high priest some years before, but was sent to Rome prisoner, under some charges of misconduct; and though he had been acquitted, he had not been reinstated, but one Jonathan appointed in his room. Jonathan, however, had been murdered, and one Ismael appointed in his stead, but had not yet taken possession of his office, and in this interval of vacancy, Ananias pushed himself forward to preside in the council, but probably without either the robes or insignia of his former office. This is the explanation of the learned Michaelis, and is adopted by Preb. Townsend. So also Boothroyd.

Ver. 6. Of the hope and resurrection, &c.—For a vindication at large of Paul's conduct in this place, see Dr. Findlay's Answer to Voltaire.

Ver. 9. Fight against God.—Compare Acts v. 39: ix. 5

10 ¶ And when there arose a great dissension, the chief captain, fearing lest Paul should have been pulled in pieces of them, commanded the soldiers to go down, and to take him by force from among them, and to bring him into the castle.

11 And the night following the Lord stood [k] by him, and said, Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at [l] Rome.

12 ¶ And when it was day, [m] certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themselves [n] under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink [o] till they had killed Paul.

13 And they were more than forty which had made this conspiracy.

14 And they came to the chief [p] priests and elders, and said, We have bound ourselves under a great curse, that we will eat nothing until we have slain Paul.

15 Now therefore ye with the council signify to the chief captain that he bring him down unto you to-morrow, as though ye would inquire something more perfectly concerning him: and we, or ever he come near, are ready [q] to kill him.

16 And when Paul's sister's son heard of their lying in wait, he [r] went and entered into the castle, and told Paul.

17 Then [s] Paul called one of the centurions unto him, and said, Bring this young man unto the chief captain: for he hath a certain thing to tell him.

18 So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, Paul the prisoner [t] called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath something to say unto thee.

19 Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aside privately, and asked him, What is that thou hast to tell me?

20 And he said, The Jews [u] have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldest bring down Paul to-morrow into the council, as though they would inquire somewhat of him more perfectly.

21 But do not thou yield [v] unto them: for there lie in wait for him of them more than forty men, which have bound themselves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him: and now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee.

22 So the chief captain then let the young man depart, and charged him, See thou tell no man that thou hast showed these things to me.

23 ¶ And he called unto him two centurions, saying, Make ready two hundred soldiers to hide himself even in an old aqueduct, he was dragged out and slain—about five years subsequent to this period.

Upon this speech of Paul, however, some bystanders ventured to reprove him, saying, "Revilest thou God's High Priest?" to which he calmly replied, "I wist (or knew) not, brethren, that he was the High Priest," or I would not have done so, for it is written, "Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people."

But a question here arises, How was it that Paul, as an inspired man, knew not that Ananias was High Priest? To this it has been answered, 1. As to Paul's inspiration, it supplied him only with knowledge appropriate to his official duty, and not with political information; and the office of High Priest had been so often changed since they had been under the Roman power, that a stranger at Jerusalem, as Paul had been for some time, might well be ignorant both of his person and his name: but, 2. Ananias was not now, either in right or in fact, High Priest; and called so only in courtesy, as having formerly filled the office, and assuming the chair till another should take the place.

A dissension now arose in the council, which Paul has been accused of raising, but, perhaps, without sufficient reason. Some circumstance might occur to show the heterogeneous principles of the council, one part being infidel Sadducees, and the other zealous Pharisees, on which Paul, taking the advantage of their dissension, (as we conceive he might justly do,) called out that he was "a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee;" and that it was for "the hope and resurrection of the dead" that he was now called in question. And this was not only true in reference to the resurrection of Christ, but, in as much as our resurrection depends on his, the resurrection of mankind in general: for, as he elsewhere argues, "if Christ be not raised," then is it in vain to hope for any resurrection. (1 Cor. xv. 12—22.)

By this statement in behalf of a resurrection, it appears that Paul partially drew the Pharisees on his side, who, recollecting what he had said the day before of seeing a vision and hearing a voice from heaven, began to think within themselves that there might be some truth in it; and, if he had so done, (which their principles admitted to be at least possible,) it was wrong thus violently to condemn him on that account, lest they should be found to "fight against God." Thus the Pharisees, who believed in a future state and resurrection, and the Sadducees, who denied both, fell to quarrelling, and so violent was the fray, that the chief captain was obliged again to interfere, to prevent Paul from being torn to pieces.

But the more bitter and malevolent of his enemies, who now appear to have been the Sadducees, combined against him, and forty men bound themselves under an oath to murder him. That "God in heaven that revealeth secrets," discovered it, however, to one of Paul's nephews, and he secretly reported it to the chief captain, who, to disappoint their murderous design, sent him off by night, under a strong military guard, to Felix, the governor of Cesarea, where he resided. In the mean time, to support Paul under all these trials, he was favoured with another heavenly vision, the Lord Jesus himself standing by him, and saying, "Fear not, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness of me also at Rome."

Ver. 17—35. Paul rescued by the chief captain, and sent to Festus, at Cesarea.—Murder is a crime held in detestation by all civilized nations, and ought to have been so particularly by the Jews, who were expressly taught by a divine oracle, "He that sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." (Gen. ix. 4.) Assassination is a crime that mixes cowardice with cruelty, and demands a twofold vengeance. How, then, shall we account for it, that these Jews should not only attempt assassination, but clothe their determination under the sacred form of anathema—an oath blended with the most awful imprecations? All originates in the principle of religious intolerance, which, assuming the prerogative of Deity, to judge the conscience, impiously aspires to wield the thunderbolts of the Almighty against our supposed enemies. This is the principle on which Saul the Pharisee "breathed out threatenings and slaughter" against the saints; and the measure which he meted out to them, was afterwards measured to him again by his former friends, the priests and scribes. This principle, which leads us to take judgment out of the hands of God, and execute it on all we judge to be his foes, is the bitterest poison in all the existing systems of intolerance, and especially popery. We are not now considering the right which the civil power unquestionably has to preserve peace among hostile sects and parties, which is necessary for the public good: but when any power, civil or ecclesiastical, dictates to men what they must believe, and how they must worship, under certain temporal pains and penalties, it assumes the authority of God, and invades the rights of man. Happy are we, in this land of liberty, to know that intolerance, in every form, is as illegal as it is unchristian.

But how shall we account for it, that Pagans should show a regard to the rights of conscience and of men, of which God's chosen people appear ignorant, or rather, to which they were evidently hostile? The fact is, that the Jews were, at this time, in a state of the most awful apostacy, and upon the brink of national destruction. Little, however, can be said in favour of Pagan toleration. It was not founded on the rights of conscience, but on the principle that all religions were alike. So Gibbon, the celebrated historian of the Roman Empire, observes: "The various modes of worship which prevailed in the Roman world, were all considered by the people as equally true; by the philosopher, as equally false; and by the magistrate, as equally useful." But when Christianity be

Ver. 12. That they would neither eat.—[Such execrable vows as these were not unusual among the Jews, who, from their perverted traditions, challenged to themselves a right of punishing, without any legal process, those whom they considered transgressors of the law; and in some cases, as in the case of one who had forsaken the law of Moses, they thought they were justified in killing them. They therefore made no scruple of acquainting the chief priests and elders with their conspiracy against the life of Paul, and applying for their connivance and support: who, being chiefly of the sect of the Sadducees, and the apostle's bitterest enemies, were so far from blaming them for it, that they gladly aided and abetted them in this mode of despatching him, and on its failure they soon afterwards determined upon making a similar attempt. If these were, in their bad way, conscientious men, they were under no necessity of perishing for hunger, when the providence of God had hindered them from accomplishing their vow; for their vows of abstinence from eating and drinking were as easy to loose as to bind, any of their wise men or Rabbies having power to absolve them, as Lightfoot has shown from the Talmud.]—R.

24 And provide them beasts, that they may set Paul on, and bring him safe unto Felix the governor.

25 And he wrote a letter after this manner:

26 Claudius Lysias unto the most excellent governor Felix sendeth greeting:

27 This [w] man was taken of the Jews, and should have been killed of them: then came I with an army, and rescued him, having understood that he was a Roman.

28 And [x] when I would have known the cause wherefore they accused him, I brought him forth into their council:

29 Whom I perceived to be accused of questions [y] of their law, but to have nothing [z] laid to his charge worthy of death or of bonds.

30 And when [a] it was told me how that the Jews laid wait for the man, I sent straightway to thee, and gave [b] commandment to his accusers also to say before thee what they had against him. Farewell.

31 Then the soldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul, and brought him by night to Antipatris.

32 On the morrow they left the horsemen to go with him, and returned to the castle:

33 Who, when they came to Cesarea, and delivered the epistle [c] to the governor, presented Paul also before him.

34 And when the governor had read the letter, he asked of what province he was. And when he understood that he was of [d] Cilicia;

35 I will hear thee, said he, when thine accusers [e] are also come. And he commanded him to be kept in [f] Herod's judgment hall.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1 Paul being accused by Tertullus the orator, 10 answereth for his life and doctrine. 21 He preacheth Christ to the governor and his wife. 26 The governor hopeth for a bribe, but in vain. 27 At last, going out of his office, he leaveth Paul in prison.

AND after five days Ananias [a] the high priest descended with the elders, and with a certain orator named Tertullus, who informed [b] the governor against Paul.

2 And when he was called forth, Tertullus began to accuse him, saying, Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietness, and that very worthy deeds [c] are done unto this nation by thy providence,

3 We accept it always, and in all places, most noble Felix, with all thankfulness.

4 Notwithstanding, that I be not farther tedious unto thee, I pray thee that thou wouldest hear us of thy clemency a few words.

5 For we have found this man a pestilent fellow, and [d] a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes:

6 Who also hath gone about to profane [e] the temple: whom we took, and would have judged [f] according to our law.

7 But the chief [g] captain Lysias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands,

8 Commanding his accusers [h] to come unto thee: by examining of whom thyself mayest take knowledge of all these things, whereof we accuse him.

9 And the Jews also assented, saying that these things were so.

10 ¶ Then Paul, after that the [i] governor had gan to spread extensively, and was found hostile to every kind of vice, then it became odious, and the object of Pagan persecution. It must be here remarked, that Christianity, in the first age, attacked Paganism by argument and persuasion only; as we see in Paul's noble defence before the Areopagites. It defaced none of its idols, and broke down none of its altars; and had Pagans employed only the same weapons, it would have been a bloodless contest; but Paganism had no arguments, and when thus attacked could answer only by the sword. This, however, was not employed till the imperial power fell into the hands of Nero, who is entitled to the ignominy of being author of the first general persecution of Christians by Pagan Rome.

We have been led into these digressive remarks by the liberal conduct of Claudius Lysias, in rescuing Paul from Jewish persecution and determined assassination. The conduct of Felix, also, or rather the Roman laws, must be commended, which allowed the prisoner to defend himself before his accusers in open court; the governor's meanness, however, in seeking a bribe for his liberation, has fixed a stain upon his character which is indelible: but Paul's trial, and Felix's behaviour, will come regularly before us in the next section.

CHAP. XXIV. Ver. 1—27. Paul pleads his cause before Felix.—Nothing can show more forcibly the inveterate hatred of the Jews against Paul, than their unwearied pursuit of him from time to time, and from place to place—even to Cesarea, which appears to have been more than 70 miles from Jerusalem. Nor did they spare expense for professional orators, who, as we all well know, do not travel for nothing. In this address of Tertullus, we have also a fair specimen of the flattering style of these venal pleaders, whose office was to make "the worse appear the better cause."—"Almost every word of this oration is false," says Dr. Doddridge: particularly "the accusation against Paul, and the encomium on Felix. All historians agree that he was a man of so bad a character, that his government was a plague to all the provinces over which he presided: and, as for Judea, its state under Felix was so far from being what Tertullus here represents, that Josephus (besides what he says of the barbarous and cowardly assassination of Jonathan, the High Priest, by his means) declares that the Jews accused him before Nero of insufferable oppressions, and had certainly ruined him, if his brother Pallas had not interposed in his favour." As to his "worthy deeds," the only thing that can be said in favour of him is, that he cleared the country of robbers and impostors.

With respect to Paul, we will hear him speak for himself: and without attempting flattery, like Tertullus, we may observe he treats Felix, as a judge, with great respect, and expresses his satisfaction at being called before him, as he knew that he was not altogether a stranger to Jewish laws and customs, in which he may allude, perhaps, to his being married to Drusilla, who was a Jewess. As to Paul's attempting to raise a sedition, there was no pretence for it, as he had been there but a few days for many years past; and with respect to his introducing Gentiles into the holy precincts of the temple, he had indeed been seen with an Ephesian in the city, but he went into the temple with Jews only, with whom he was united in the performance of a religious vow. (See ch. xviii. 23—30.) It is true that he belonged to "the sect of the Nazarenes," i. e. the followers of Jesus of Nazareth; and after the way which they called heresy, or a sect, did he worship the God of Israel, believing all things contained in the law or the prophets, and particularly the resurrection of the dead; the avowal of which had brought upon him the vengeance of the Sadducees, to which sect (strange to tell!) belonged many of the higher order of priests as well as laymen.

Felix, finding in all this no crime of which, as Roman governor, he could well take cognizance, and that they had brought no witness as to the material points, of raising a riot or defiling the temple, he deferred his decision till the chief

Ver. 24. Felix.—[This was Claudius Felix, the successor of Cumanus in the government of Judea. He was a freedman of the emperor Claudius, and brother of Pallas, also a freedman, the chief favourite of the emperor. Tacitus calls him Antonius Felix; and gives us to understand, that he governed with all the authority of a king, and the baseness and insolence of a quondam slave. According to Suetonius he had three queens to his wives; that is, he was married thrice, and each time to the daughter or niece of a king. He was a base, mercenary, and cruel governor; and when he was recalled to Rome, A. D. 60, the Jews brought forward so many proofs of his extortions and violence before Nero, to whom they accused him, that he would certainly have been executed or ruined, if it had not been prevented by the influence of his brother Pallas. Josephus.]—Bagster.

He had entirely subdued a very formidable banditti which had infested the country, and sent their captain, Eliezar, to Rome, (Josephus;) had suppressed the sedition raised by the Egyptian impostor, (chap. xxi. 38;) and had quelled a very afflictive disturbance which took place between the Syrians and Jews of Cesarea. But, though Tertullus might truly say, "by thee we enjoy great quietness," yet it is evident that he was guilty of the grossest flattery, as we have seen, both from his own historians and Josephus, that he was both a bad man and a bad governor.]—Bagster.——By thy providence.—Wesley, "prudence." Doddridge, "prudent administration."

beckoned unto him to speak, answered, Forasmuch as I know that thou hast been of many years a judge unto this nation, I do the more cheerfully answer for myself:

11 Because that thou mayest understand, that there are yet but twelve days since I went up to Jerusalem for to worship.

12 And they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people, neither in the synagogues, nor in the city:

13 Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me.

14 But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets:

15 And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust.

16 And herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men.

17 Now after many years I came to bring alms to my nation, and offerings.

18 Whereupon certain Jews from Asia found me purified in the temple, neither with multitude, nor with tumult.

19 Who ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had aught against me.

20 Or else let these same here say, if they have found any evil doing in me, while I stood before the council,

21 Except it be for this one voice, that I cried standing among them, Touching the resurrection of the dead I am called in question by you this day.

22 ¶ And when Felix heard these things, having more perfect knowledge of that way, he deferred them, and said, When Lysias the chief captain shall come down, I will know the uttermost of your matter.

23 And he commanded a centurion to keep Paul, and to let him have liberty, and that he should forbid none of his acquaintance to minister or come unto him.

24 ¶ And after certain days, when Felix came with his wife Drusilla, which was a Jewess, he sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ.

25 And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled, and answered, Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee.

26 ¶ He hoped also that money should have been given him of Paul, that he might loose him: wherefore he sent for him the oftener, and communed with him.

27 But after two years Porcius Festus came into Felix' room: and Felix, willing to show the Jews a pleasure, left Paul bound.

CHAPTER XXV.

2 The Jews accuse Paul before Festus. 8 He answereth for himself. 11 and appealeth unto Cesar. 14 Afterwards Festus openeth his matter to king Agrippa. 23 and he is brought forth. 25 Festus cleareth him of having done any thing worthy of death.

NOW when Festus was come into the province, after three days he ascended from Cesarea to Jerusalem.

2 Then the high priest and the chief of the Jews informed him against Paul, and besought him,

3 And desired favour against him, that he would send for him to Jerusalem, laying wait in the way to kill him.

4 But Festus answered, that Paul should be kept at Cesarea, and that he himself would depart shortly thither.

5 Let them therefore, said he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuse this man, if there be any wickedness in him.

6 And when he had tarried among them more than ten days, he went down unto Cesarea; and the next day sitting on the judgment seat commanded Paul to be brought.

7 And when he was come, the Jews which captain, Lysias, should come to Cesarea, when he would again hear the cause; in the mean time, finding it was a malicious prosecution, he committed him to the care of a Roman centurion, with orders for his being liberally treated.

Before Lysias arrived, however, his own wife, Drusilla, came, who was a Jewess, and he seems to have considered this a proper opportunity to hear farther "concerning the faith in Christ." On this occasion Paul seems to have been regardless of his own circumstances, but reasoned so forcibly on "righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come," that even Felix trembled. And well, indeed, he might, if he was the character represented by Josephus. No topic could be better calculated to alarm a rapacious tyrant, a seducer, and an adulterer; no eloquence more adapted to make him tremble, than the masterly and energetic reasoning of St. Paul. He did tremble, and could bear no more; but hastily dismissed the preacher—"Go thy way for this time: when I have a convenient season I will send for thee." Alas! how many have thus put away from them the words of eternal life, and found no other opportunity for ever!

As to Felix, he desired no more; but hoped, as Paul was a Roman citizen, that he should have received a bribe for his liberation: but, as this was not the case, (for Paul would neither bribe nor be bribed,) after dallying with the cause two years, till Festus (his successor) came, he left him in confinement, "willing to show the Jews a pleasure."

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 1—27. Paul being accused before Festus, appeals to Cesar.—We have seen, in the close of the preceding chapter, that Felix left Paul a prisoner to please the Jews: accordingly, no sooner had Festus arrived at Jerusalem, than the High Priest and the chief of the Jews applied to him against Paul, desiring that he would send for him from Cesarea to Jerusalem, while he was there, at the same time laying in wait, on the way, to kill him. Whether Festus had seen the letter of Lysias to Felix, stating that the Jews had before done so, (ch. xxiii. 26—30,) or whether it was a special act of His providence, who controls the hearts of princes, in order to preserve Paul, Festus refused to listen to their request, but required them to go with him to Cesarea, whither he went in about ten days afterwards. The next day after their arrival, Paul and his accusers were brought before him, and they laid so many things to his charge, that though they could not prove them, Festus showed an evident disposition to oblige the Jews, by sending him back to Jerusalem. Paul, however, resisted this, as illegal and unjust, and knowing that he was to bear witness for Christ at Rome also, (ch. xxiii. 11,) at once appealed to Cesar; Festus admitted the appeal, and it appears he had no right to refuse a Roman citizen.

A few days after this, however, King Agrippa, and his sister, Bernice, came upon a visit to Festus at Cesarea, on which occasion the latter related the circumstances of Paul's case, against whom the Jews had desired judgment, on account of a pretended conviction that had previously taken place. Festus, however, gave them to understand that the Roman laws did not allow this, but required the accusers to appear face to face, and that the accused should be allowed to answer for

Ver. 10. Many years.—According to Bishop Pearson, five and a half; but according to Mr. Biscoe, seven.

Ver. 14. Heresy.—This is the same word that, in ver. 5, is translated sect, which is admitted to be its primary meaning; though it afterwards acquired a theological or ecclesiastical use, as implying the maintenance of important or fundamental error. So Dr. Waterland defines heresy to be, "Not merely a mistake of judgment, (though in fundamentals,) but espousing such erroneous judgment, either teaching or disseminating it, or openly supporting and assisting those that do. This I conceive (said he) to be the true scripture notion of heresy." Waterland's Importance of the Trinity.

Ver. 15. Just and unjust.—The Pharisees, according to Josephus, admitted only the resurrection of the just—not the unjust.

Ver. 22. Having more perfect knowledge.—Doddridge, "After I have been more accurately informed." Dr. D. remarks, that the words themselves are ambiguous, and may refer to his having obtained by this examination a better knowledge of the subject; or, more properly, (as Beza and Grotius explain them,) to a desire of obtaining farther information, when Lysias came, which seems far more natural.

Ver. 24. Drusilla.—Josephus says, this woman was the daughter of Herod Agrippa, before named, and sister to the Agrippa mentioned in the next chapter. She had been married to Azizus, king of the Emesenes, but Felix seduced her by means of one Simon, a magician; so that they, in fact, lived in adultery, under the mask of marriage.

CHAP. XXV. Ver. 1. The province.—[By the province Judea is meant; for after the death of Herod Agrippa, Claudius thought it imprudent to trust the government in the hands of his son Agrippa, who was then but 17 years of age; and, therefore, Cuspius Fadus was sent to be procurator. CHAPTER XXVI.

2 Paul, in the presence of Agrippa, declareth his life from his childhood, 12 and how miraculously he was converted, and called to the apostleship. 24 Festus chargeth him to be mad, whereunto he answereth soberly. 28 Agrippa is almost persuaded to be a Christian. 31 The whole company pronounce him innocent.

THEN Agrippa said unto Paul, Thou art permitted to speak for thyself. Then Paul himself. This was therefore done; but when the accusers came, they left their witnesses behind, and substantiated no one charge that he had expected, but "had certain questions against him of their religion, and of one Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive." Not understanding such questions, Festus had inquired if Paul was willing to go to Jerusalem to be judged, but he had declined this, and appealed to Cesar, to whom, therefore, he must be sent.

The curiosity of Agrippa being excited by this account, he expressed a great desire to see this celebrated prisoner, and to hear what he had to advance in favour of a sect which was "every where spoken against." This was immediately agreed to, and the following day was appointed for the hearing. Accordingly, next morning, Agrippa, with his sister, Bernice, came into court in great pomp, with the chief captains and principal men of the city, and Paul also was brought before them. Festus now, pointing to him, told the court that this was the man to whom he had referred, against whom the Jews had cried out that he was "not fit to live:" and he was desirous to have him examined before King Agrippa, that he might have something definite to write respecting him.

CHAP. XXVI. Ver. 1—32. Paul's defence b fore Agrippa.—Paul's rank as a public speaker has been often underrated. With a person rather diminutive, and a voice perhaps weak, or in some respects defective, (see 2 Cor. x. 10,) he every where commanded attention, except from the turbulent and bigoted Jews; and sometimes even from them, when he addressed them in their own language, (ch. xxii. 2;) and, when he spoke in Greek, Felix, his judge, trembled before him; Festus thought him transported beyond himself, in an ecstacy of frenzy; and King Agrippa was almost persuaded to be a convert. We must be cautious, however, (and he is the first to caution us,) not to ascribe too much to Paul, since, as an apostle, he certainly came within that promise, "When ye are brought before stretched forth the hand, and answered for himself:

2 I think myself happy, king Agrippa, because I shall answer for myself this day before thee touching all the things whereof I am accused of the Jews:

3 Especially because I know thee to be [a] expert in all customs and questions which are among the Jews: wherefore I beseech thee to hear [b] me patiently.

4 My manner [c] of life from my youth, which was at the first among mine own nation at Jerusalem, know all the Jews;

5 Which knew me from the beginning, if they would testify, that after the most straitest sect of our religion I lived a [d] Pharisee.

6 And now [e] I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise [f] made of God unto our fathers:

7 Unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving [g] God [h] day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews.

8 Why [i] should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?

9 I [j] verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth.

10 Which thing I also did in [k] Jerusalem: and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority [l] from the chief priests; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them.

11 And I punished them oft in [m] every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them even unto strange cities.

12 Whereupon as I went [n] to Damascus with authority and commission from the chief priests, 13 At mid-day, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed with me.

14 And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.

15 And I said, Who art thou, Lord? And he said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest.

16 But rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a [o] minister and a [p] witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee;

17 Delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto [q] whom now I send thee,

18 To open [r] their eyes, and to [s] turn them from darkness to light, and from the power [t] of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness [u] of sins, and inheritance [v] among them which are [w] sanctified by faith [x] that is in me.

19 Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision:

20 But showed [y] first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do works [z] meet for repentance.

21 For these causes the Jews [a] caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me.

22 Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which [b] the prophets and Moses did say should come:

23 That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first [c] that should rise from the dead, and should show light unto the people, and to the Gentiles.

24 ¶ And as he thus spake for himself, Festus governors and kings for my sake.... take no thought how or what ye shall speak, for in that same hour it shall be given you." (Matt. x. 19.) His orations, indeed, have in them all the fervour of prophetic inspiration, with the perfect coolness of deliberation and self-possession. With the utmost indifference to his own fate, he aims at the conversion of his hearers. "I would to God, that not only thou, (king Agrippa,) but also all that hear me this day, were both almost and altogether such as I am, except these bonds,"—holding up to view, probably, the chain with which he had been bound to the soldier under whose care he was. (See Acts xii. 6, and note.)

The account which Paul here gives of his former life and conversion, is so similar to what he had repeatedly given, particularly in chap. ix., that we shall chiefly confine our present remarks to what passed between Paul and Festus. Several circumstances mentioned by Paul seem to have formed the ground of the governor's suspicions relative to his understanding being affected. His initiatory studies in general literature at Tarsus, and his progress in Jewish and Rabbinical literature under Gamaliel, might be supposed too much for so weak a frame. The severe mortifications and multifarious devotions of his austere and superstitious sect, might strengthen the suspicion: and one article, at least, of his creed, the doctrine of a resurrection, appeared to Pagans, as well as Sadducees, so utterly irrational and ridiculous, that they would hardly think a man sound in his intellects who could cordially believe it: but what would crown the whole, and might be considered as forming a demonstration of his insanity, was his wild and visionary scheme, as Festus would consider it, of attempting to convert the whole Gentile world to the faith of the crucified Nazarene. What! a Jew, like Paul, teach morals and religion to the disciples of Socrates and Plato?—a Jew "turn from darkness unto light," the illumined philosophers of Greece and Rome! "Surely, Paul, thy learning must have made thee mad to think of it."

But what does he reply? With the utmost calmness, and the greatest respect to the governor, he denies the charge. "I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness."

This charge has been often repeated, in various forms, by the enemies of Christianity. Finding the pretence of his being an impostor, or the dupe of such, to be utterly untenable, since no rational motive could be assigned, why a man, with such prospects as Paul had from his education, talents, and connexions, should sacrifice his ease and interests, and even risk his life in such a cause—

"Starving his gain, and martyrdom his price."

On this ground modern infidels have generally considered Paul as a fanatic, an enthusiast, or insane. That his zeal was fervid, in whatever he considered to be true and just, is certain; but the strength and coolness with which he reasoned, the kindness and benevolence with which he acted, and, above all, the purity and consistency of his life and conduct, abundantly demonstrate that he was neither an enthusiast nor insane. Where is the enthusiast whose writings have borne the test of seventeen or eighteen centuries; and particularly that minute and critical comparison to be found in Dr. Paley's Horæ Paulinæ? Here all his Epistles are shown to exhibit an exact harmony with each other, and with St. Luke's History of the Acts of the Apostles, even in the most minute particulars.

But to return to Paul's own defence. Having denied the Ver. 10. I gave my voice.—Doddridge, "Vote:" but as Paul (or rather Saul) never had any vote in the Sanhedrim, Lardner explains this of his joining the popular cry, or clamour, against them. The Syriac renders it, "I joined with those that condemned them."

CHAPTER XXVII.

1 Paul shipping toward Rome, 10 foretelleth of the danger of the voyage, 11 but is not believed. 14 They are tossed to and fro with tempest, 41 and suffer shipwreck, 22, 34, 44 yet all come safe to land.

AND when it was determined that we should sail into Italy, they delivered [a] Paul and certain other prisoners unto one named Julius, a centurion of Augustus' band.

2 And entering into a ship of Adramyttium, we launched, meaning to sail by the coasts of Asia; one [b] Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica, being with us.

3 And the next day we touched at Sidon. And Julius courteously [c] entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refresh himself.

4 And when we had launched from thence, we sailed under Cyprus, because the winds were contrary.

5 And when we had sailed over the sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra, a city of Lycia.

6 And there the centurion found a ship of Alexandria sailing into Italy; and he put us therein.

7 And when we had sailed slowly many days, and scarce were come over against Cnidus, the wind not suffering us, we sailed under [d] Crete, over against Salmone;

8 And, hardly passing it, came unto a place which is called The Fair Havens; nigh whereunto was the city of Lasea.

9 Now when much time was spent, and when sailing was now dangerous, because the [e] fast was now already past, Paul admonished them,

10 And said unto them, Sirs, I perceive [f] that this voyage will be with [g] hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives.

11 Nevertheless the centurion [h] believed the master and the owner of the ship, more than those things which were spoken by Paul.

12 ¶ And because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part advised to depart thence also, if by any means they might attain to Phenice, and there to winter; which charge exhibited against him by Festus, he turns round and appeals to king Agrippa, then sitting by him. "The king knoweth of these things, before whom I speak freely, for I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner." Then, in his quick and animated manner, Paul interrogates him—"King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets?" and, without waiting for an answer, immediately rejoins, "I know that thou believest."

This implies that Agrippa was not only a Jew, but a Pharisee; for the Sadducees did not receive the prophets. (See exposition of Matt. xxii. 15, &c.) He was, therefore, "almost" persuaded by Paul's arguments to become a Christian: but, alas! it was "almost" only. The consciousness of a licentious life, together with the dread of the opposition he was sure to meet with, prevented him from going farther; and this has been the unhappy case of thousands, whose judgments have been convinced of the truth of Christianity, but either the offence of the cross, or the lusts of their own hearts, have effectually prevented them from cordially receiving it. This Paul lamented; and so will every faithful Christian minister, and pray as Paul did, "I would to God that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were not only almost, but altogether such as I am"—a devoted follower of the Lord Jesus—which is, indeed, the exact definition of a Christian.

The assembly now broke up. The governor's objections must have been silenced, and the king was almost converted. They were disposed, therefore, to hear no more; but all agreed, that if Paul had not appealed to Cesar, he might have been set at liberty. The providence of God had, however, wisely determined otherwise—He must "bear witness at Rome also."

CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 1—26. Paul's voyage to Rome.—The time now came for Paul's departure; and Julius, a centurion of the Augustan band, going to Rome, probably on other business, it was thought a convenient opportunity to send Paul, and "certain other prisoners," under his care. Whether Luke and Aristarchus had been implicated in the same charge, and are to be included among "the other prisoners," or whether they went as the companions or domestics of St. Paul, is uncertain. No doubt the enjoyment of his company was more than a counterbalance to either imprisonment or the dangers of the voyage. It is a happy event to us that Luke was there, as he has recorded the circumstances of the voyage, and afforded us, in a degree, the pleasure of travelling with them, without participating in any of their dangers.

It may be proper here to remark, that in the infancy of the art of navigation, and before the discovery of the compass, navigators dare not venture into the open sea, but were obliged to coast it near the shore. And here we may remark the harmony subsisting between the plans of providence and redemption. While the propagation of the Gospel was to be confined comparatively to a narrow boundary, the vessels then in use, and the science of early days, might be sufficient; but before the Gospel was to be sent to the farthest parts of India, and across the Atlantic to another hemisphere, the compass was invented, and vast improvements made in naval architecture: and how far the wonderful discoveries of steam navigation may be employed in rapidly extending the Scriptures and the heralds of salvation, like lightning playing on the bosom of the ocean, remains to be seen by our posterity.

If the Christian church of that age had had the direction of Paul's voyage, they would doubtless have chosen another season, and have provided for him a smoother sea and fairer

Ver. 29. Both almost, and altogether.—Gr. CHAP. XXVII. Ver. 1. We should sail.—Some ancient copies and versions read, "HE should sail," referring to Paul only; yet Luke and Aristarchus appear, by ver. 2, to have gone with him. Ver. 12. Phenice—[Was a sea-port on the western side of Crete; probably defended from the fury of the winds by a high and winding shore, forming a semicircle, and perhaps by some small island in front; leaving two openings one towards the south-west, and the other towards the north-west.]—Bagster is a haven of [i] Crete, and lieth toward the south west and north west.

13 And when the south wind blew softly, supposing that they had obtained their purpose, loosing thence, they sailed close by Crete.

14 But not long after there [k] arose against it [a] tempestuous [l] wind, called Euroclydon.

15 And when the ship was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive.

16 And running under a certain island which is called Clauda, we had much work to come by the boat:

17 Which when they had taken up, they used helps, undergirding the ship; and, fearing lest they should fall [m] into the quicksands, strake sail, and so were driven.

18 And we being exceedingly [n] tossed with a tempest, the next day they lightened the ship;

19 And the third day we cast out [o] with our own hands the tackling of the ship.

20 And when neither [p] sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on us, all hope [q] that we should be saved was then taken away.

21 ¶ But after long abstinence Paul stood forth in the midst of them, and said, Sirs, ye should have hearkened [r] unto me, and not have loosed [s] from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loss.

22 And now I [t] exhort you to be of good cheer: for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship.

23 For there stood by me this night [u] the angel [v] of God, whose [w] I am, and whom [x] I serve, 24 Saying, Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Cesar: and, lo, God hath given thee [y] all them that sail with thee.

25 Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer: for [z] I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me.

26 Howbeit we must be cast upon a certain [a] island.

27 But when the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven up and down in Adria, about midnight the shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country;

28 And sounded, and found it twenty fathoms: and when they had gone a little farther, they sounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms.

29 Then fearing lest they should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished [b] for the day.

30 And as the shipmen were about to flee out of the ship, when they had let down the boat into the sea, under colour as though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship,

31 Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved.

32 Then the soldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off.

33 And while the day was coming on, Paul besought them all to take meat, saying, This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried and continued fasting, having taken nothing.

34 Wherefore I pray you to take some meat: for this [c] is for your health: for there [d] shall not a hair fall from the head of any of you.

35 And when he had thus spoken, he took bread, and [e] gave thanks to God in presence of them all: and when he had broken it, he began to eat.

36 Then were they all of good cheer, and they also took some meat.

37 And we were in all in the ship two hundred threescore and sixteen souls.

skies. But he that "rides on the whirlwind, and directs the storm," is pleased to display his wisdom, power, and goodness, not in avoiding dangers, but in surmounting them. Paul seems to have had early apprehensions of the perils they were likely to meet with, and before he received any revelation on the subject, advised them to stop at Crete. This advice was, however, overruled by the shipmaster and the navigators; and stormy winds and darksome skies were employed as a sort of ground whereon to display the glory of God.

Paul had earnestly pressed what he thought a measure of safety, but in vain; and began now, possibly, to indulge the most painful foreboding, both as to his own safety, and that of his companions. Perhaps, also, he might have perplexing fears, relative to an object which was evidently near his heart, namely, that he might "preach the Gospel to them that were at Rome also," and bear witness to his crucified Master in the court of Nero. But all was safe; the plan was laid by infinite wisdom, and the most adverse circumstances were the appointed means for its accomplishment. To calm his mind, and support his faith, an angel is commissioned from the skies, and brings him the assurance—"Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Cesar; and lo! God hath given thee all them that sail with thee." Paul, not willing to keep the good tidings to himself, (as what good man could?) next morning came forth in the midst of all the ship's company, and related the vision. "And now I exhort you, be of good cheer, (said he,) for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you. For there stood by me this night the angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve," and he gave me this assurance—namely, what the angel had said to him, as above recited. But we must not pass without remark the noble avowal Paul here makes of his heavenly Master—"whose I am, (says he,) and whom I serve." Those who faithfully serve God assuredly belong to him; and those who have truly given themselves up to him, will assuredly study in all things to obey and serve him. "Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer: for I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me."

Here we must be allowed to add, that faith in the word of God is the way to Christian consolation; and the want of this, the cause of our dejection, discomfiture, and sometimes despair. We have only to look to the evidence, that the assertion on which we build is from himself, and we cannot rest too firmly, or act too boldly on it.

Ver. 27—44. The shipwreck of Paul and his companions, with their safe escape to shore.—Dreadfully distressing is it to think of a whole ship's company, of 276 souls, fasting, that is, taking no proper meal, for fourteen days together; but landmen know little of seamen's hardships; however, when Paul had obtained a divine assurance that they should all get safe to land, he strongly urged them to take both bread and meat, and himself set the example, giving "thanks to God" in presence of them all. By this, it appears, they were encouraged to follow his example, and, having eaten all they thought proper, threw the rest of their provisions into the sea, where they had some time before (ver. 19) cast every thing they could then spare.

The ship's crew, indeed, made an attempt to escape with their long-boat, and leave the rest to their fate; but St. Paul having told the centurion, that except these should abide in the ship none could be saved, the soldiers prevented them, by cutting Against the island Crete, mentioned in the preceding verse? Kinnoel, Townsend, &c.——Euroclydon.—Dr. Shaw explains this of the wind called a Levanter, which blows in all directions. The learned Bentley (who is followed by Hammond and others) contends here for the reading of the Alexandrian MS. and Vulgate, Euraquilo, the N. E. wind; but this is opposed by Bryant and Brenell.

Ver. 15. Could not bear up into the wind.—The original properly signifies to bear up; or, in the sea phrase, "to luff up against the wind;" or to look the storm in the face. On the prow of the ancient ships was placed a round piece of wood, called the eye of the ship, from being fixed in its foredeck.

Ver. 27. Driven up and down in Adria.—Doddridge, "In the Adriatic sea."—[Adria, strictly speaking was the name of the Adriatic gulf, now the Gulf of Venice, an arm of the Mediterranean, about 200 miles long, and 50 broad, stretching along the eastern shores of Italy on one side, and Dalmatia, Sclavonia, and Macedonia, on the other. But the term Adria was extended far beyond the limits of this gulf, and appears to have been given to an indeterminate extent of sea, as we say, generally, the Levant. It is observable, that the sacred historian does not say in the Adriatic gulf, but in Adria, which, says Hesychius, was the same as the Ionian sea; and Strabo says, that the Ionian gulf "is a part of that now called the Adriatic." But not only the Ionian, but even the Sicilian sea, and part of that which washes Crete, were called the Adriatic.]—Bagster.

Lit.* No. 1452.

Ver. 32. Let her fall off—i. e. let her drift away, that the sailors might not use it for escape.

Ver. 33. This is the fourteenth day.—Some render it, "all this fourth day." (Markland in Bowyer,) confining the fasting to one day; but this is a hard ship scarcely worth naming.

Ver. 34. Not a hair.—See Mat. x. 30, 31.

38 And when they had eaten enough, they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat into the sea.

39 And when it was day, they knew not the land: but they discovered a certain creek with a shore, into the which they were minded, if it were possible, to thrust in the ship.

40 And when they had [f] taken up the anchors, they committed themselves unto the sea, and loosed the rudder bands, and hoised up the mainsail to the wind, and made toward shore.

41 And falling into a place where two seas met, they ran the ship aground; and the forepart stuck fast, and remained unmoveable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1 Paul after his shipwreck is kindly entertained of the barbarians. 5 The viper on hi hand hurteth him not. 8 He healeth many diseases in the island. 11 They depart towards Rome. 17 He declareth to the Jews the cause of his coming. 24 After his preaching some were persuaded, and some believed not. 30 Yet he preacheth there two years.

away their boat, and leaving it to the winds and waves. It may seem strange, that, after assuring them that none should perish in this shipwreck, the apostle should afterwards insist on retaining in the ship the mariners, as absolutely necessary to that end. But, as Mr. Scott remarks, "If the end was absolutely decreed, the means of attaining it were so decreed likewise; and the case is the same in things of still higher importance." Nothing can be more inconsistent with Scripture, or with Christian philosophy, than to suppose that the end is to be attained without means: this is the rock on which enthusiasts have often split.

The soldiers seem to have acted on principles as base and selfish as those of the sailors; for whereas the latter were for deserting the vessel, and leaving the rest to shift for themselves, the soldiers were for murdering the prisoners to prevent their escape, though Paul had assured them that all should get safe to land. The proposal, however, on the part of the soldiers, seems to disclose the awful secret, that such was the state of morals, even among the Romans, that it was their practice rather to murder their prisoners, though uncondemned, than by any means to suffer them to escape. A like practice (we shudder to relate it) long obtained, and, we fear, is not yet extinct, among Europeans in the African slave trade, who drown the wretched Negroes by dozens and by scores, when they have more than they know what to do with.

Providence, however, had determined otherwise; and though the centurion expresses no horror or surprise at the proposal, yet his partiality to Paul and his companions determined him to save the whole; and therefore ordered that all who could swim should cast themselves first into the sea; and the rest, some on boards, (or planks,) and some on broken pieces of the ship; and so it came to pass that they all escaped safe to land." Practical writers have considered this as no unfit emblem of the manner in which some Christians escape spiritual shipwreck: tossed about by a tempestuous world, their lives are full of trouble and peril, and their deaths perhaps embittered with anxiety and pain; yet, casting themselves on the mercy of God, through Christ, for his sake they are all saved at last. Happy those who land on the celestial shore, with smiling skies, and under a gale of holy and heavenly consolations.

CHAP. XXVIII. Ver. 1—16. Paul's shipwreck at Melita, and arrival at Rome.—It has been generally considered that

Ver. 38. The wheat into the sea.—[The Romans imported corn from Egypt, by way of Alexandria, to which this ship belonged; for a curious account of which, see Bryant's Treatise on the Euroclydon.]—Bagster.

Ver. 39. A certain creek with a shore.—Doddridge, "with a (level) shore," convenient for landing. "A bay with a beach," says the late Mr. Newton, who was more conversant with nautical affairs than most commentators. See note on ch. xxviii. 1.

Ver. 40. Taken up—Margin, "cut"—the anchors, they committed themselves.—Margin, "they left them [the anchors] in the sea."—Loosed the rudder bands—Or, "the bands of the rudders;" for large vessels in ancient times had two or more rudders, which were fastened to the ship by means of bands, or chains, by which they were hoisted out of the water when incapable of being used. These bands being loosed, the rudders would fall into their proper places, and serve to steer the vessel into the creek, which they had in view.—Hoised—Obsolete, for "hoisted."—The mainsail.—So our translators render the Greek word: but Grotius (who contends that the original in ver. 17. signifies the mainmast, and consequently that the mainsail was now gone, ver. 19,) supposes that it was a sail near the fore part of the ship, answering either to what we call the foresail or the jib; which is more in accordance with the account that Stephens has collected from the best authorities.

Ver. 41. Where two seas met.—Bochart, "washed on each side by the sea;" meaning an isthmus, or narrow neck of land; but Bryant understands the phrase to refer to a cape, or headland, the natural barrier of a harbour. See Parkhurst in Dithalassos. See note on chap. xxviii. 1.

Ver. 43. Willing to save Paul.—Because Paul was a Roman citizen, and could not be put to death without a trial and condemnation. Some suppose, that the Centurion had become either a Christian or decidedly favourable to Christianity, and was confident of the innocence of Paul. Doddridge makes the following remark: "Thus God, for Paul's sake, not only saved all the rest of the ship's company from being lost in the sea, but kept the prisoners from being murdered according to the unjust and barbarous proposal of the soldiers, who could have thought of no worse scheme had they been all condemned malefactors, and had these guards, instead of conveying them to their trial, been carrying them to the place of execution.—They which could swim—Were commanded first to cast themselves into the sea and get to land; in order either to assist the others who were unable to swim, or, if they were soldiers, to keep a guard over the prisoners.

Ver. 44. Some on boards, &c.—Notwithstanding the revelation made to Paul, "that there should be no loss of any man's life, but of the ship," ver. 22, and "there shall not a hair fall from the head of any," ver. 34, still it was incumbent on them to use diligently all the means of safety within their reach. The purposes of God always include the means requisite for the accomplishment of those purposes. It was necessary for the shipmen to remain on board and do their duty in managing the ship, ver. 30 and 31. It was necessary that the 276 persons in the ship should either swim or use the boards and broken pieces, or they would have failed of safety. Dependance upon God does not supersede activity. But when properly viewed, it is a strong motive to the vigorous performance of all that lies in our power.

CHAP. XXVIII. Ver. 1. Melita.—Melita, now Malta, is an island in the Mediterranean sea, about fifty miles from the coast of Sicily, towards Africa: and is one immense rock of white soft freestone, twenty miles long, twelve in its greatest breadth, and sixty in circumference. It has alternately been possessed by the Phœnicians, Phenicians, Greeks, Carthaginians, Romans, Goths, Saracens, Sicilians, Knights of St. John, French, and now by the English. The present population, including troops, is 102,000, which, considering that the whole island is little else than a rock, is very large; being 670 to the square mile. "The space that in England supports 152 people and in Holland 224, contains in Malta 1103. The rock is soft and friable; and much of it has been broken up, walled into terraces, and covered with soil, some of which has been imported from Sicily. It is an island of platforms or terraces: ascend a hill, and you look down upon a surface of the richest green; but look up, from the shore, and you see only the gray walls that support the terraces, and Malta seems to be one entire rock. There are many level and fertile spots, but the enclosures are small and the walls high. The fields seem at a distance little larger than pounds, in that pleasant country where there are pounds and field-drivers. The roads are mere lanes, generally too narrow for two carriages to pass abreast and when one enters, a horn is sounded to keep others out: but most of the roads are too rough for wheels."—Modern Traveller. Some, however with the learned Jacob Bryant, are of opinion, that this island was Melita in the Adriatic gulf, near Illyricum; but it may be sufficient to observe, that the course of the Alexandrian ship, first to Syracuse, and then to Rhegium, proves that it was the present Malta, as the proper course from the Illyrian Melita would have been first to Rhegium, before it reached Syracuse, which indeed it need not have gone to at all. On the identity of this with Malta, we subjoin the following letter, extracted from the New York Observer of August 21, 1824.

"My dear Christian Brother—You will perhaps think it strange, that I should reside more than two entire years in this island, without once visiting, during that period, the spot where it is supposed the apostle to the Gentiles was shipwrecked. A few days ago, for the first time, I visited what is here called 'St. Paul's Bay,' distant from Valetta, the principal city in the island, about six miles. In reading the account of the apostle's shipwreck as it is recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, I have always encountered difficulties which I could not overcome. The difficulty of understanding this account, is much greater in our English translation than in the original. In the English, we hear of their 'falling into a place where two seas met;' the original is (eis topon dithalasson) a place washed on both sides by the sea. On the N. W. side of St. Paul's Bay, there is a tongue of land extremely rocky, that extends half a mile, perhaps, or more, into the sea, in a direction from S. W. to N. E. This, of course, is washed on both sides, as often as the wind blows from the east, or N. E., which was anciently called Euroclydon, but at present Gregale. The sea, brought in by this wind, dashes upon the point of this tongue of land, is divided, and then sweeps along on both its sides. Upon this point the natives say the vessel struck, and its present appearance renders this opinion highly probable to my own mind, though others might think differently. The vessel struck upon the rocks, probably, for I saw no sand near the place, and I believe there is none.

"Our translation informs us, that they discovered 'a certain creek with a shore.' This language, to me, conveys no idea. A creek without a shore would be a paradox. Who ever saw a creek without two shores? The original is not attended by this difficulty. They discovered a certain gulf, or bay, having a shore or convenient landing place. Such in reality is the bay of St. Paul. It can be distinctly and easily seen from the ocean, that this bay has a good and convenient shore for landing, while many other parts of the island present to the ocean a bold and appalling shore, where it would be totally impracticable, if not impossible, to land, especially during a storm.

"The depth of water in this bay is not great, for you can distinctly see the bottom when half a mile, or more, from the land; and as you approach the land the depth is gradually diminished, until you would imagine that it were possible to wade, while you are several rods distant from the shore. The bottom is solid rock, and not sand. The bay extends inland, I should think, (for we did not measure it,) at least a mile, and probably considerably farther, and is, perhaps, half a mile in width.

"There is a small church standing on the spot where it is said the apostle gathered the bundle of sticks and put them on the fire, whence the viper came forth and fastened on his hand. A bundle of sticks might easily be gathered now near the same spot, from the branches of fig trees, caroob trees, and other small trees, growing within the neighbouring enclosures.

"Our visit to this bay was by water, and from nearly the same direction in which the apostle probably was driven by the furious Euroclydon. This bay so well answers to the description given in the Acts, of the place where Paul was wrecked, that I can entertain no doubt that it is the same. It has certainly all the prominent features of the place, where the pen of inspiration informs us, the ship which bore the apostle was broken in pieces by the violence of the waves. I am not aware, that any other place is pointed out in the island, where that remarkable event is supposed to have happened.

"If we reflect on the miraculous preservation of the whole company on board, amounting to 276 persons, wrecked in a tremendous storm upon an unknown coast, the preservation of the apostle from the mortal bite of the viper, and the succeeding miracles which he afterwards wrought in the island, thus exciting universal attention, it seems to me highly probable, and almost certain, that the spot where he was wrecked would be ever afterwards well known.

"The holy apostle and his shipwrecked companions have gone, ages ago, to their long home; the vipers, which then infested the island, have long since disappeared; but every winter bears still the loud roar of the fierce Euroclydon, and the shores feel the terrible shock of the mountain waves which it sets in motion;—but, alas! though the same winds still blow, and the same ocean

2 And the barbarous [b] people showed us no little kindness: for they kindled a fire, and received us [c] every one, because of the present rain, and because of the cold.

3 ¶ And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, and fastened on his hand.

4 And when the barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his hand, they said among themselves, No doubt [d] this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, yet vengeance suffereth not to live.

5 And he shook off the beast into the fire, and felt [e] no harm.

6 Howbeit they looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly: but after they had looked a great while, and saw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and said [f] that he was a god.

7 ¶ In the same quarters were possessions of the chief man of the island, whose name was Publius; who received us, and lodged us three days courteously.

8 And it came to pass, that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a bloody flux: to whom [g] Paul entered in, and prayed, and laid [h] his hands on him, and healed him.

9 So when this was done, others also, which had diseases in the island, came, and were healed:

10 Who also honoured [i] us with many honours; and when we departed, they laded us with such things [j] as were necessary.

11 ¶ And after three months we departed in a ship of Alexandria, which had wintered in the isle, whose sign was Castor and Pollux.

12 And landing at Syracuse, we tarried there three days.

13 And from thence we fetched a compass, and came to Rhegium: and after one day the south wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli:

14 Where we found brethren, and were desired to tarry with them seven days: and so we went toward Rome.

15 And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, they came [k] to meet us as far as Appii Forum, and the Three Taverns: whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took [l] courage.

16 And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of this Melita was the well-known isle of Malta, in the Mediterranean Sea; but, a few years since, the very learned and ingenious Jacob Bryant opposed this idea, and strenuously contended, that the Melita here named must intend not Malta, but Meleda, a smaller island in the Adriatic Gulf, or Gulf of Venice; and Prebendary Townsend has presented his objections and arguments in a manner so forcible, that we were about adopting it, till we met with a letter from Rev. Daniel Temple, who has lately left the island, after residing there more than two years. His letter we have subjoined in the notes. This has fully inclined us to the former opinion, that Melita was Malta.

Several objections, however, have been raised against the tradition, that St. Paul's Melita is Malta, some of which are obviated in our notes. That which is chiefly insisted on seems to be, that the inhabitants of Malta were at this time far from being "barbarians," as here called, Malta being not only a place of trade, but containing elegant buildings and curiosities of art, as well as nature. To this we would reply, that the term barbarous was applied by the Greeks to all who spoke languages which themselves did not understand; and these were evidently not barbarians in conduct or behaviour. If we compare with this the case of a vessel wrecked on the coast of Cornwall, only in the last century, and the treatment which the crew would then and there have met with, we fear it would furnish a much stronger argument that Britons were then barbarians, than this history does, that the Maltese were so eighteen centuries before; for we read here of no wreckers flocking to the shore to plunder. As to the argument from vipers being found there, that the country was not yet cleared from wood, we believe that these animals are not even yet extinct in England; but the history before us presents one viper only, and that was thought so extraordinary, that they concluded it must be a visitation from heaven to punish murder. The people, though heathens, were not savages, but, on the contrary, displayed that kindness and hospitality which would have disgraced the inhabitants of no part of either Italy or Greece. When the strangers landed, they made a fire to warm them, and, as Paul expresses it, "showed no little kindness." They were afterwards, at least Paul and his companions, received into the house of Publius, the chief man on the island; and when Paul had cured him of a fever, this brought other sick persons to him with various disorders, and they discovered more gratitude and good sense than the apostle seems to have met with elsewhere—"Who honoured us (saith he) with many honours, and when we departed they laded us with such things as were necessary."

Here Paul and his companions, as also the centurion and his company, stopped three months, and then sailed towards Rome in the ship Castor and Pollux, (or the sign Gemini in the Zodiac.) By the way, however, they stopped three days at Syracuse, and seven at Puteoli. From thence they went on as far as Appii Forum and the Three Taverns, (a place so called,) where sundry brethren met them from Rome; "whom, when Paul saw, he thanked God and took courage:" and it is well when our Christian intercourse has the happy effect to excite our gratitude toward God, and to animate us in our Christian warfare.

Paul having arrived at Rome, accompanied by his Christian friends, the centurion who had treated him with the greatest kindness through all his journey, now surrendered him and his fellow-prisoners to the captain of the guard; doubtless, not without a recommendation to his kind attentions. Indeed, such was the conduct and behaviour of the apostle, and such the gracious protection of his heavenly Master, that wherever he went he appears to have found a friend. In the present instill roars, the same gospel which Paul preached, is preached here no longer; the same Saviour whom he adored, I fear, is known and adored only by a very few.

"After reading this short description of St. Paul's Bay, and then glancing at the present state of the island, you will unite, I trust, with me, in praying, that God would send hither another apostle, holy and zealous as Paul, to preach again the unsearchable riches of Christ, as the natives believe Paul did, when he was sent by Divine Providence to visit this island eighteen hundred years ago. I remain your very affectionate brother,

"D. TEMPLE."

Ver. 2. The barbarous people.—Bar, a Chaldee word, which signifies without. Whence Bari, a foreigner: so that the word being doubled, as Barbari, denotes a great foreigner. The inhabitants of this island, according to Bochart, were originally a colony of Phenicians, or Carthaginians, and had still their ancient language in use, which, though mixed with some Greek and Latin words, was unintelligible to the Greeks, who called all barbarians whose language was unintelligible.—Orient. Lit. No. 1459.

Ver. 3. A viper.—The most venomous and fatal of all serpents, and thought by the ancients to be sent by heaven to punish the most enormous crimes.

Ver. 4. Beast.—Rather, animal, or creature.

Ver. 6. Said that he was a god.—But it seems an unlucky conjecture of Grotius and Whitby, that they took him for Hercules, since he was a man of small stature, and weak bodily frame. We should rather have guessed Apollo, or Mercury, as in ch. xiv. 12.

Ver. 10. Who honoured us with many honours—That is, bestowed many gifts upon us: "Manoah said to the angel of the Lord, What is thy name, that when thy words shall come to pass, we may do thee honour?" that is, may give thee a gift or do thee honour with some gift. See also Num. xxii. 16. and Tim. v. 3.—Lightfoot.

Ver. 11. Whose sign—i. e. the name of the vessel, which was generally dedicated to some deity.

Ver. 12. Syracuse.—[Syracuse was the capital of Sicily, situated on the eastern side of the island, 72 miles S. by E. of Messina, and about 112 of Palermo. In its ancient state of splendour, it was twenty-two and a half miles in extent, according to Strabo, and such was its opulence, that, when the Romans took it, they found more riches in it, than they did at Carthage.]—B.

"Syracuse is built on the extremity of a point of land, (the ancient island of Ortygia,) the neck of which is so fortified that to go out we passed seven gates. Without the gates is the place of the old cities, which had 1,200,000 people, but of which there is now hardly one stone upon another. The plough has not passed over them, for the Sicilians have too little to do with that venerable implement; but the goats browse among them. Two or three columns have been raised, (I think,) and now stand upon their bases. Wherever the earth is turned up, coins, medals, or statues, are found: and old coins may be had for about their value as copper."—Modern Traveller.

Ver. 13. Rhegium.—[Rhegium, now Reggio, was a maritime city and promontory in Italy, opposite Messina.——Puteoli—Now Pozzuoli, is an ancient sea-port of Campania, in the kingdom of Naples, about eight miles S. W. of that city, standing on a hill in a creek opposite to Baiæ.]—Bagster.

Ver. 14. Tarry with them seven days.—St. Paul and the rest abide at Puteoli (a city, a very great mart-town, where there are havens for ships made by art and labour) seven days, at the entreaty of the Christians of that place: which redounded to the credit of the Centurion, whose leave must have been obtained in that case; so that his yielding so far may somewhat argue, that he favoured Christianity.—Lightfoot.

Ver. 15. Appii Forum, and The Three Taverns.—The former was a market in the Appian Way, both which received their names from the Appian family; and probably a fish-market, like Billingsgate, from its being chiefly inhabited by watermen; as "The Three Taverns," by publicans or inn-keepers. Neither place was far from Rome, but The Three Taverns nearest. Via Appia and Appii Forum are much spoken of in authors; but the mention of the three taverns is not so frequent. There is mention, in Zosimus, of the three victualling houses; where Severus the emperor was strangled by the treason of Maximianus Herculius, and Maxentius his son.—Lightfoot.

Ver. 16 Rome.—[Rome, the capital of Italy, and once of the whole world, is situated on the banks of the Tiber, about 16 miles from the sea; 410 miles S. S. E. of Vienna, 600 S. E. of Paris, 730 E. by N. of Madrid, 760 W. of Constantinople, and 780 S. E. of London.]—Bagster.——The captain of the guard.—Doddridge, "the prefect (or captain) of the pretorian band." It was customary for prisoners who were brought to Rome to be delivered to the prefect or commander of the pretorian cohorts, who had the charge of the state prisoners: as appears from the instance of Agrippa, who was taken into custody by Macro, the pretorian prefect who succeeded Sejanus.—Orient.

the guard: but Paul was suffered to dwell by himself [m] with a soldier that kept him.

17 ¶ And it came to pass, that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together: and when they were come together, he said unto them, Men and brethren, though [n] I have committed nothing against the people, or customs of our fathers, yet was I delivered [o] prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans.

18 Who, when [p] they had examined me, would have let me go, because there was no cause of death in me.

19 But when the Jews spake against it, I was constrained to appeal [q] unto Cesar; not that I had aught to accuse my nation of.

20 For this cause therefore have I called for you, to see you, and to speak with you: because that for the hope [r] of Israel I am bound with this [s] chain.

21 And they said unto him, We neither received letters out of Judea concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came showed or spake any harm of thee.

22 But we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest: for as concerning this sect, we know that every where [t] it is spoken against.

23 ¶ And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his [u] lodging; to whom he [v] expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both [w] out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening.

24 And some [x] believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not.

25 And when they agreed not among themselves, they departed, after that Paul had spoken one word, Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias [y] the prophet unto our fathers,

26 Saying, Go unto this people, and say, Hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and not perceive:

27 For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them.

28 Be it known therefore unto you, that the salvation of God is sent unto the [z] Gentiles, and that they will hear it.

29 And when he had said these words, the Jews departed, and had great reasoning among themselves.

30 ¶ And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him, 31 Preaching [a] the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

stance, Paul was suffered to dwell in his own hired house, under the care of a single soldier, and all his friends were allowed to visit him.

Ver. 17—31. Paul appeals to the Jews, and afterwards to the Gentiles.—Paul's object was one only, wherever he might go. It was to proclaim Jesus as the Messiah and Saviour of the world, both to Jews and Gentiles. Accordingly, he no sooner arrives at Rome, than he calls together his countrymen, tells them the reason of his coming thither, and the true ground of his being persecuted by his brethren—"For the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain!" exhibiting the chain which bound him to a Roman soldier. This expression, "the hope of Israel," may be applied both to the person of the Messiah, who was truly "the hope of Israel," and to the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, and especially of Christ, which was the hope for which he had repeatedly been "called in question."

His brethren expressed a readiness to hear him; and accordingly, on an appointed day, came to him at his lodging, when he "testified to them the kingdom of God," that is, of the Messiah; "persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning until evening." And the consequence was, as generally has been found, some believed, and others believed not. To the latter he applied the same Scripture (Isaiah vi. 9.) that our Lord had applied to them at Jerusalem, about thirty years before—"The heart of this people is waxed gross," &c. (see Matt. xiii. 14, 15;) and in consequence confined his chief attention to the Gentiles. Thus Paul dwelt two years in his own hired house, preaching with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

Paul's arrival in Rome is dated in Bible chronology, in A. D. 63, and by others two years earlier; but his Epistle to the Romans is supposed to have been written in 57 or 58; and even then we hear that their faith was spoken of throughout the world, so that the gospel must have been planted in the capital of the Roman empire at a very early period, though by whom is not recorded. On Paul's approaching the city, we find a deputation from the church went out to meet and welcome him, by whom he was much encouraged and refreshed. While here, beside constant preaching, both to Jews and Gentiles, he appears to have written his Epistles to the Ephesians, Philippians, and Colossians; probably that to the Hebrews, and more certainly that to Philemon. His second to Timothy was also written from Rome, but at a later period, and but just before his death.

Cust. No. 1331.—To dwell by himself.—Doddridge, "to dwell apart from the other prisoners, in a house of his own."—With a soldier—i. e. chained to one. See note on ch. xxvi. 29.

Ver. 20. This chain—[That is, the chain with which he was bound to the "soldier that kept him," (ver. 16;) a mode of custody which Lardner has shown was in use among the Romans. It is in exact conformity, therefore, with the truth of St. Paul's situation at this time, that he declares himself to be "an ambassador in a chain," (Eph. vi. 20;) and the exactness is the more remarkable, as a chain is no where used in the singular number to express any other kind of custody.]—Baxter.

Ver. 25. Well spake the Holy Ghost, &c.—This passage from Isa. vi. 9, 10, is quoted in the New Testament oftener than any other—six times; namely, in each of the gospels, here, and in ch. xx. 8; yet in such variety of expression, as plainly proves the apostles did not confine themselves exactly either to the words of the original, (Hebrew,) or the Greek version.

Ver. 30. In his own hired house.—"Lardner proves from Ulpian, that the proconsul was to judge whether a person under accusation was to be thrown into prison, or delivered to a soldier to keep, or committed to sureties, or trusted on his parole of honour. It appears from hence, that the persecution of Christians at Rome was not then begun; and perhaps Paul's friends in Nero's family, (Phil. iv. 22,) used their interest with the Emperor to procure him this liberty."—Doddridge.

Much of Paul's time was also occupied in corresponding; and at the end of two years, it is highly probable he was set at liberty. Whether he went again into the East, is doubtful; but Clement of Rome (in his first epistle) expressly says, that he preached in the West to its utmost bounds, which must include Spain: and Theodoret adds, that he went to the islands of the sea, of which Britain is understood to be one: and there is the best authority to believe that, after this, he returned to Rome, where, according to primitive tradition, he was beheaded by order of Nero, A. D. 66, at Aquæ Salviæ, three miles from Rome, and interred in the Via Ostensis, two miles from the city, where Constantine erected a church.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF ACTS.

[THE Acts of the Apostles is a most valuable portion of Divine Revelation; and, independently of its universal reception in the Christian church as an authentic and inspired production, it bears the most satisfactory internal evidence of its authenticity and truth. It is not a made up history: the language and manner of every speaker are different; and the same speaker is different in his manner according to the audience he addresses. St. Luke's long attendance upon St. Paul, and his having been an eye-witness of many of the facts which he has recorded, independently of his divine inspiration, render him a most respectable and credible historian; and his medical knowledge, for he is allowed to have been a physician, enabled him both to form a proper judgment of the miraculous cures which were performed by St. Paul, and to give an authentic and circumstantial detail of them. The plainness and simplicity of the narrative are also strong circumstances in its favour. The writer evidently appears to have been very honest and impartial; and to have set down, very fairly, the objections which were made to Christianity, both by Jews and Heathens, and the reflections which were cast upon it, and upon its first preachers. He has likewise, with a just and honest freedom, mentioned the weaknesses, faults, and prejudices, both of the Apostles and their converts. There is also a great and remarkable harmony between the occasional hints dispersed throughout St. Paul's epistles, and this history; so that the Acts is the best clue to guide us in studying the Epistles of that Apostle. The other parts of the New Testament are likewise in perfect unison with this history, and tend greatly to confirm it; and the doctrines and principles are every where the same. The Gospels close with a reference to those things recorded in the Acts, particularly the promise of the Holy Spirit, which we know from this history, was poured out by Christ upon his disciples after his ascension; and the Epistles of the other Apostles, as well as those of St. Paul, plainly suppose, that these facts had actually occurred which are related in the Acts of the Apostles. So that the history of the Acts is one of the most important parts of the Sacred History; for, without it, neither the Gospels nor Epistles could have been so clearly understood; but, by the aid of it, the whole scheme of the Christian Revelation is set before us in a clear and easy view. Lastly, even the incidental circumstances mentioned by St. Luke, correspond so exactly, and without any previous view of such correspondence, with the accounts of the best ancient historians, both Jews and Heathens, that no person who had forged such a history in later ages, could have had the same external confirmation; but he must have betrayed himself by alluding to some customs or opinions which have since sprung up, or by misrepresenting some circumstance, or using some phrase or expression not then in use. The plea of forgery, therefore, in later ages, cannot be allowed; and, if St. Luke had published his history at so early a period, when some of the Apostles, and many other persons concerned in the transactions, were alive, and his account had not been true, he would have exposed himself to an easy confutation, and certain infamy. Since, therefore, the Acts of the Apostles are in themselves consistent and uniform; the incidental relations agreeable to the best historians that have come down to us; and the main facts, supported and confirmed by the other books of the New Testament, as well as by the unanimous testimony of the ancient fathers, we may justly conclude, that if any history of former times deserves credit, the Acts of the Apostles ought to be received and credited; and, if the history of the Acts of the Apostles be true, Christianity cannot be false.]—Baxter

INTRODUCTION TO THE EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL.

HAVING gone through the historical books of the New Testament, what remain (except the last) are Epistolary; and by far the larger part of these were written by the Apostle to the Gentiles. The Epistles, especially Paul's, being addressed to persons or societies already initiated into the principles of Christianity, enter more deeply into the distinguishing doctrines of the Gospel, and the controversies which in that early age were raised thereon, and particularly by Jewish converts, who were extremely loth to relax their prejudices in favour of the Jewish institutions.

Much has been said for and against Paul's style. Dr. Macknight, who objects to some of the strong language of the learned Beza, still admits that it contains beauties of the highest character, and passages to which it would be difficult to find any of superior merit among the most admired classical writers of Greece and Rome.

"Paul," says Mr. Locke, "is full of the matter he treats; and writes with warmth, which usually neglects method, and those partitions and pauses which men, educated in the schools of rhetoricians, usually observe." It must be remembered that Paul's object was not to advance his own fame as a writer, but the glory of his Saviour: that classical writers did not always furnish words or phrases sufficient to explain the mysteries of the Gospel: that the connexion between the New and Old Testaments often led him necessarily to adopt Hebrew allusions, terms, and phrases, which, though they may be considered as blemishes in Greek composition, form some of his chief beauties as a Christian teacher; and we be to them who hang the perishing garlands of human eloquence on the cross of Christ, thereby in any degree to hide him from our view.

The Epistle to the Hebrews, though it does not bear the author's name, is now universally ascribed to St. Paul, and was written from Italy, and probably from Rome, in the years 62 or 63. This, with the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians, are perhaps the most difficult to explain, as referring frequently to the prophetic writings and to Jewish literature.

We shall only here add, that in addition to Doddridge and other Expositors of the New Testament, we shall, throughout the Apostolical Epistles, carefully compare them with the popular versions ("New Translations and Commentaries") of Macknight and Boothroyd, and pay a particular attention to those writers who have devoted their attention to single Epistles only.

Considerable additional interest will be felt in the Epistles of Paul, by simply reading them in the chronological order in which they were written. The above table gives that order, according to the best information which at so late a period can be collected. A knowledge of the place from whence the letter was written, also the occasion which called it forth, throw much light upon its contents. The place is named in the table, and the occasion, when known, will be found either in the introductory remarks or the notes.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE ROMANS.

[THAT St. Paul was the author of the Epistle to the Romans is proved, not only by the whole current of Christian antiquity, but by the most satisfactory internal evidence. We find that it was dictated by the Apostle in the Greek language to his amanuensis Tertius, (ch. xvi. 22,) and was forwarded to the Church at Rome by Phœbe, a deaconess of Cenchrea, a port of Corinth, (ch. xvi. 1.) It is further evident that it was written from that city, from his mentioning Gaius with whom he lodged at Corinth, (ch. xvi. 23. 1 Co. i. 14,) as well as Erastus the chamberlain of that city, (2 Tim. iv. 20.) It also appears that it was written there, at the time that the Apostle was preparing to take the contributions of the churches to Jerusalem, (ch. xv. 25—27;) and consequently, the most probable date assigned to this Epistle is A. D. 58, which is supported by Bishop Tomline, Lardner, Lord Barrington, Benson, and others.

It is not certain at what time, or by whom, the gospel was first preached at Rome; but it has been conjectured, with much probability, that it was carried thither by some of the Jews who were converted on the day of Pentecost. (Ac. ii. 10.) St. Paul himself had not yet visited that city; but being made fully acquainted with the circumstances of the church there by Aquila and Priscilla, (ch. xvi. 3,) he deemed it proper to adopt this method of establishing believers in the faith, and of giving them such a comprehensive view of the Christian religion, as might guard them against the insinuations of false teachers of various descriptions.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER I.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—16. Paul glories in preaching the Gospel, both to Jews and Gentiles.—"St. Paul commences this Epistle (as Cox observes) by a short but comprehensive inscription, in which he asserts his authority as an apostle, endeavours to impress the Jews with a favourable opinion of the gospel, and gives an interesting summary of its principal doctrines, and of the privileges of real Christians. He then proceeds to state his ardent affection for the Christians at Rome, and his earnest desire to preach to them; which naturally leads him to refer to the grand distinguishing doctrine of the gospel, Justification by faith, a topic which he fully explains and vindicates in several of the subsequent chapters of this Epistle." In the introduction to this, as to most of his Epistles, the apostle fails not to introduce the dear and honoured name which he adored, as the foundation of his hope and joy; Jesus, the Son of God, who "was made (or born) of the seed of David, according to the flesh;" but "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of Holiness, (or the Holy Spirit,) by the resurrection from the dead."

The apostle proceeds to state, how much he rejoiced in finding that their faith was spoken of "throughout the whole world;" that is, so far as the gospel had been preached—namely, the boundaries of the Roman empire, which was, "all the world" to them. (See note on Luke ii. 1.) And at the same time he assures them, with what persevering earnestness he prayed for their spiritual prosperity, and how earnestly he desired to visit them, that he might impart to them some spiritual gifts, which the Holy Ghost had intrusted him with, for the church's be-

CHAP. I. Ver. 1. Paul, &c.—It was anciently the practice to prefix the name, instead of subscribing it at the end of letters, as is now customary. —Called to be an apostle.—Paul not being converted till after the death of Jesus, the judaizing teachers were ready to dispute his title to be an apostle, which seems to be the reason of his so constantly insisting on the heavenly vision, wherein he was called by Christ himself to the apostleship. See Acts xxvi. 16–18.

Ver. 4. And declared.—Doddridge, "determinately marked out." Boothroyd, "proved to be the Son of God with power." Cox, "powerfully demonstrated," &c.—The spirit of holiness—(or Holy Spirit.) Doddridge says, "It seems to me so little agreeable to the style of Scripture in general, to call the divine nature of Christ the spirit of holiness, (or the Holy Spirit,) that, highly as I esteem the many learned and accurate commentators who have given it this turn, I rather refer it to the operation of the Spirit of God in the production of Christ's body, by which means the opposition between "according to the flesh," and "according to the spirit," will be preserved; the one referring to the materials acted upon, the other to the divine and miraculous agent. See Luke i. 35.—By the resurrection.—Macknight, "By (his) resurrection."

Ver. 5. Grace and apostleship.—Doddridge, "Grace and an apostolical mission."—For obedience to the faith.—"In order to promote the obedience of faith."—Prof. Stuart.

Ver. 7. Called to be saints.—As in ver. 1. Paul is not said to be "called an apostle," but "called to be" one: so here these Romans are not merely called saints, but "called" by the grace of God "to be such:"—"the called of Christ Jesus." See chap. viii. 30.

length I might have a prosperous journey by [p] the will of God to come unto you.

11 For [q] I long to see you, that [r] I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established;

12 That is, that I may be comforted together with you by the mutual [t] faith both of you and me.

13 Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that oftentimes I purposed to come unto you, (but was let hitherto,) that I might have some fruit [s] among you also, even as among other Gentiles.

14 I am [u] debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise.

15 So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also.

16 For I am not ashamed [v] of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power [w] of God unto salvation to every one that [x] believeth; to [y] the Jew first, and also to the Greek.

17 For therein [z] is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is [a] written, The just shall live by faith.

18 For the wrath [b] of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness;

19 Because that which may be known of God is manifest [c] in them; for [d] God hath showed it unto them.

20 For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things [e] that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; [f] so that they are without excuse:

21 Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became [g] vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened.

22 Professing themselves to be wise, they [h] became fools,

23 And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image [i] made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things.

24 Wherefore God also gave [j] them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts, to dishonour their own bodies between themselves:

25 Who changed the truth of God [k] into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature [l] more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever. Amen.

26 For this cause God gave them up unto vile [m] affections: for even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature:

27 And likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust one toward another; men with men working that which is unseemly, and receiving in themselves that recompense of their error which was meet.

28 And even as they did not like [n] to retain nefit. For in this respect he considered himself as indebted to all nations, and to all classes of society, to whom he owed his utmost exertions in the propagation of the gospel: "for (adds he) I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ." And why not? "Because it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth." The Jewish Rabbies, indeed, were ashamed of it, for it was to them "a stumbling-block;" and the Greeks, because it was to them "foolishness;" but Paul, on the contrary, gloried in it, because it is, "to them that believe, the wisdom of God, and the power of God;" that is, a way of salvation in which the wisdom and power of God, as well as his mercy, are eminently displayed, both to Jews and Gentiles. In bringing this subject home to our own times, and to our own bosoms, it must be confessed, that there are many professing Christians who are both ashamed of, and a disgrace to the gospel: but those who are not a disgrace to it—that is, those who believe and act upon its principles—will never be ashamed of it; because, 1. It meets and satisfies all their necessities: they are sinners, such as Christ came to save. 2. It provides them a guide in all difficulties, namely, the Holy Spirit, whom the Father has promised to all who ask him. 3. It animates and encourages them under all their fears and trials; for it is by the gospel that "life and immortality are brought to light." 4. In its tendency and effects, it affords the brightest evidence of its own divinity. (See Dr. Waits' Serm. xv. xvi. xvii.—three of the best discourses ever printed.)

Ver. 17—25. The necessity of faith, and awful consequences of infidelity.—In the gospel of Christ, as a divine scheme of salvation, is the righteousness of God gloriously revealed. 1. It is displayed and illustrated in the doctrine of Christ's atonement for human guilt; and, 2. In the sanctification of believers by the influences of the Holy Spirit.

Thus it is that "the righteousness of God is gradually revealed," or (as it is here expressed) "from faith to faith;" that is, from one degree of faith to another, till it is completely revealed, and crowned with everlasting life. Thus it is that our salvation, "all through, from one end to the other," as Locke expresses it, is founded on faith in God through Christ; accordingly, as the prophet Habakkuk assured the Jews, that by believing in his word of promise, they should escape the miseries of the Babylonish captivity; so believers trusting in Christ shall be delivered from the miseries of sin, and of eternal death.

And as the righteousness of God is revealed in the salvation of believers, so is it awfully displayed in the punishment of unbelievers. "For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men." The former term, [ungodliness,] when used alone, may comprehend every kind of sin; but when used with unrighteousness or lasciviousness, (which plainly relates to the second table of the law,) refers more particularly, as we conceive, to impiety, or sins against God, comprehending the opposite crimes of atheism and idolatry. In the former, [atheism,] men were without excuse, because, even "from the creation of the world, the invisible things of him," [God,] namely, "his eternal power and Godhead, were clearly seen; so that they [who denied his being and perfections] were utterly without excuse." For as every work of art (a watch or clock, for instance) clearly proves the previous existence of an artist; so, much more does the immense machinery of nature demonstrate the being and perfections of the Creator.

The far greater part of the heathen world fell into the contrary error of idolatry and polytheism. "Professing themselves to be wise"—that is, to be sophists and philosophers—"they became fools;" and such fools, that they "changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image [or images] made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things:" for instance, the bull and the eagle, the beetle and the serpent. Thus they changed the truth of God into a lie, conceived of the true God as of an idol; and "served the creature more than," or rather instead of, "the Creator." He therefore "gave them up to uncleanness, through the lusts of their own hearts;" and thus licentiousness became connected with idolatry, and the most unnatural lusts were admitted to form part of their religious rites.

It is true that the philosophers had a twofold doctrine, public and secret: in the former they encouraged the idolatries of Ver. 11. Some spiritual gift.—This refers probably to a miraculous gift. See 1 Co xii. 1—9; xiv. 1. 12.

Ver. 12. By the mutual faith both of you and me.—A pious soul, says Calvin, refuses not to seek confirmation even from mere beginners in knowledge. There is non so poor in the church of Christ, that he cannot add to our stores. We are hindered by pride from availing ourselves of this advantage.

Ver. 13. But was et—i. e. hindered.

Ver. 16. For it is—Cox, Boothroyd, &c., "Because it is," &c.

Ver. 17. For the rin is the righteousness, &c.—Macknight, "For the righteousness of God by faith is revealed in it, in order to (produce) faith," &c. The righteousness of God is the justification or pardoning mercy bestowed on sinners who are under the curse of the divine law.—The just shall live by faith.—This appears to be quoted from Hab. ii. 4, and very nearly corresponds with the reading of the LXX. To "live by" (or "from," Gr. ek) faith, implies, that the righteous (or justified) man derives his safety here, and his salvation hereafter, from his faith in God.

Ver. 18. Who hold the truth in unrighteousness.—The original verb means either to gain hold, or to keep hold; and the latter, sometimes in the sense of keeping back, or withholding. 2 Thes. ii. 6. 7. See Parkhurst in Katecho. The heathen did retain, in the works of nature, a sufficient proof of the Divine Providence to render their infidelity inexcusable, and still more so their vices; and those vices also did withhold, or restrain the progress of the truth. Doddridge, "restrain." Macknight, "confine." "Who hinder the truth by unrighteousness."—Prof. Stuart. The Apostle here particularly designates the heathen as hindering the truth by unrighteousness.

Ver. 19. In them.—Macknight, "among them." So Doddridge.

Ver. 20. The invisible, &c.—Macknight, "His invisible things, even his eternal power," &c. "God," says Aristotle, "who is invisible to every mortal, is seen by his works."

Ver. 24. Gave them up.—See Gen. vi. 3.

Ver. 26. Gave them up unto vile affections—"Those unnatural crimes, which are now considered most scandalous, and most severely punished when discovered, so far from being prohibited by the religion and laws of the heathen, were authorized in both, and avowedly practised by persons of the greatest celebrity among them."—Cox. See also Macknight. Many of the heathen philosophers represent virtue and vice as the mere creatures of statute and the multitude; in the latter it is supposed they taught the spiritual and eternal nature of God; but we believe this was the case in very few instances; those who rejected the vulgar superstition, often sunk into a sort of philosophic atheism, and worshipped Nature.

In the course of eighteen centuries the worshipping of idols, stocks, and stones, has been in great part abolished from the Pagan world; much, however, remains to be done in this respect in India, China, Africa, and elsewhere; but as the Spirit of God accompanies the progress of missionary labours, we trust that these nations will follow the example of the South Sea Islanders, and give "their idols to the moles and to the bats," or rather scatter them to the winds and to the seas; no more substituting the creature for "the Creator, who is blessed," and shall be "blessed for ever. Amen."

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—29. Those are most inexcusable, who commit themselves the sin they condemn in others.—The apostle having delivered the most awful, and at the same time the most accurate description of the heathen world, which was perhaps ever written, he was sure of the approbation of the Jews, who would instantly pronounce them deserving of God's eternal curse, and everlasting condemnation. He then suddenly turns the argument upon his countrymen, and endeavours to convince them that they were not only equally guilty, but more inexcusable; as they had been favoured, not only with the same natural light, but with a divine revelation also, in the law of Moses and the prophets; and this circumstance, so far from excusing them, was a great aggravation of their guilt, and made their case more dreadfully alarming. That the Jews were, indeed, equally guilty of the crimes here enumerated, we have not only the authority of the apostles, but the testimony of Josephus, their own historian, who declares that there was not a more wicked nation under heaven. And he afterwards adds, "I verily believe, that if the Romans had delayed to destroy these wicked wretches, their city would either have been swallowed up by the earth, or overwhelmed by the waters, or struck with fire from heaven, as another Sodom; for it produced a far more impious generation than those who suffered such punishment."

This being the awful case with both Jews and Gentiles, the custom; or to use the words of Justin, they maintain, "that there is nothing either virtuous or vicious, but that things are made good or evil merely by the force of opinion."

Ver. 28. Things not convenient.—"A figure of speech, intimating the most detestable crimes."—Cox.

Ver. 30. Inventors of evil things—That is, probably, of false and scandalous reports, agreeing with the preceding articles—"Backbiters," &c.

Ver. 31. Without natural affection.—This is supposed to refer particularly to the Stoics

Ver. 32. Have pleasure in them that do them.—"To behold vice with complacency, is the last stage of a degenerate mind."—Cox. Paul considers this as the very climax of all the charges that he had to bring against the heathen, that they not only plunged into acts of wickedness, but had given their more deliberate approbation to such doings.—Prof. Stuart.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. Therefore.—This word here has been the subject of much discussion, from the difficulty of showing how it stands connected as an illative particle, with the preceding discourse. "The connexion," says Prof. Stuart, "appears to be this: Since it will be conceded, that those who know the ordinances of God, against such vices as have been named, and still practise them, and applaud others for doing so, are worthy of punishment; it follows, therefore, that all who are so enlightened as to disapprove of such crimes, and who still commit them, are even yet more worthy of punishment."

Ver. 2. The judgment.—Macknight, "The sentence;" i. e. the judgment pronounced. Compare chap. v. 16. Chrysostom thus paraphrases this verse: "Thou hast not escaped thine own condemnation, and shalt thou escape that of God?"

Ver. 4. Or despisest thou.—Macknight, "Dost thou misconstruct?" But Doddridge, Cox, and Boothroyd, prefer the common rendering.

Ver. 5. Hardness and impenitent.—Macknight, "Obdurate and impenitent."——Revelation of the righteous, &c.—When God's righteous judgment shall be revealed—i. e. in the great day of judgment.—Stuart.

Ver. 6. His deeds.—Doddridge, "His works." This word, "works," should be preserved throughout, on account of the argument founded on it.

Ver. 8. Them that are contentious.—Gr. "Are of contentions." Doddridge, "Children of Contention," which preserves the Hebrew idiom.

Ver. 12. Without law.—Doddridge and Boothroyd understand this of "the law of Moses;" Macknight and Cox, of divine revelation generally; but we must remember, that at this time (A. D. 60,) scarcely any of the New Testament was published.——Sinned in.—Doddridge, &c., "under the law."

Ver. 13. For not the hearers, &c.—Not those who merely enjoy the external privilege of a revelation have any just claim to divine approbation; it is only those who obey the precepts of such a revelation who have any ground to expect this.—Stuart.——The doers of the law shall be justified.—This is the first time the important term "justified," occurs in this epistle: and it is evidently used in a forensic sense, referring to a judicial sentence, as in Mat. xii. 37.—"If a Jew sinned in respect of any of the precepts [of the Mosaic law,] and did not offer the prescribed sacrifice, he could not be acquitted or justified."

Ver. 14. For when the Gentiles.—Thus the voice of conscience, which proceeds from a moral feeling of dislike or approbation, and the judgment of the mind when it examines the nature of actions, unite in testifying, that what the moral law of God requires, is impressed in some good measure on the hearts even of the heathen.—Prof. Stuart.

Ver. 15. Their thoughts the mean while, &c.—Doddridge, "Their mutual reasonings among themselves, accusing or defending," &c.

Ver. 16. In the day, &c.—This verse connects with verse 12, the three intervening verses (13, 14, and 15) being a parenthesis; and the sense is, that "in the day of judgment, the heathen who sinned against the light of nature, and their own consciences, will be thereby judged; but the Jews, who had been favoured with a written revelation by Moses and the prophets, will be subjected to a severe scrutiny, according to their obedience or disobedience to it."——According to my gospel.—"Not any written gospel or history of Jesus Christ, but the doctrine of the gospel, which had been preached by Paul."

Ver. 17. Called a Jew.—"Bearest the name of a Jew." Doddridge, Cox, &c. But Boothroyd, following Griesbach, reads, on the authority of some MSS. and ancient versions, "But if thou be called a Jew, and rest in the law and glory in God," &c.

19 And art confident that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, a light of them which are in darkness, 21 Thou [z] therefore which teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal?

22 Thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege?

23 Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonourest thou God?

24 For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles, through you, as it is [a] written.

25 For circumcision verily profiteth, if thou keep the law: but [b] if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision.

26 Therefore if [c] the uncircumcision keep the righteousness of the law, shall not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision?

27 And shall not uncircumcision which is by nature, if it fulfil the law, [d] judge thee, who by the letter and circumcision dost transgress the law?

28 For he [e] is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh:

29 But he is a Jew, which is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the [f] heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise [g] is not of men, but of God.

CHAPTER III.

1 The Jews' prerogative: 3 what if they have not been faithful? 5 howbeit the law cannot be the occasion of sin: 9 therefore no flesh is justified by the law, 28 and all, without difference, by faith only: 31 and yet the law is not made void.

WHAT advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision?

2 Much every way: chiefly, because that unto them [a] were committed the oracles of God.

3 For what if [b] some did not believe? shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect?

4 God forbid: yea, let God be true, but every man a liar; as it is [c] written, That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged.

5 But if our unrighteousness commend the righteousness of God, what shall we say? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? (I speak as a man,)

6 God forbid: for then how [d] shall God judge the world?

7 For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory; why yet am I also judged as a sinner?

8 And not rather, (as we be slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say,) Let [e] us do evil, that good may come? whose damnation is just.

9 What then? are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before [f] proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin; apostle proceeds to argue the impossibility of either being saved by their own works of righteousness, and that on two grounds: First, a fallen and guilty creature can never be justified by his good works; and, secondly, if even that were possible, neither Jews nor Gentiles had any such works to boast. Consequently, that to neither Jew nor Gentile was there any hope of salvation, but through the mercy of God in Christ Jesus. For as to the former, there was no merit in hearing a law which they neglected to obey; nor had the Gentiles any ground to be vain of their science, while, whatever they might know, they did not acknowledge and adore the Author of their being.

When it is said, (verse 13,) "The doers of the law will be justified," we must not, however, infer hence, that they will be justified by any merit in either their faith or their obedience, which would be contrary to the whole tenor of Paul's reasoning in this Epistle; but only that obedience to the will of God is the necessary evidence of our interest in his mercy. So, on these words, Mr. Cox judiciously remarks—"The apostle does not here refer to the originating cause of a person's justification, which is the mercy of God; or to the meritorious cause, which is nothing less than the obedience and intercession of Christ; but to the character of those who will finally be justified."

As to the covenant of circumcision, in which the Jews boasted and placed their confidence, it was an external rite only, and "he is not a Jew," in the best sense, who is such only "outwardly;" "But he is a Jew" indeed—a worshipper of the God of Israel—"who is one inwardly; and [the true] circumcision is that of the heart; in the spirit, (and,) not in the letter; whose praise (as the term Jew intimates) is not of men, but of God."

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—19. Some Jewish objections answered, and all men proved guilty before God.—The apostle here introduces and answers several objections which a Jew might be expected to make to his doctrine in the preceding chapter, relative to circumcision.—If a Jew have no preference to a Gentile, "what advantage then is there in being a child of Abraham, or in receiving circumcision?" To this the apostle replies, "Much every way"—or in every respect; but chiefly, because that to them [the Jews] were intrusted the oracles of God, containing at once the revelation of man's duty and of God's mercy. And what if some—yea, if many—did not believe, could their unbelief disannul or make of no effect the truth and faithfulness of God?—Far be that! Let God be reverenced as true, though every man should thereby be convicted of falsehood. But, rejoins the unbelieving Jew, supposing our unrighteousness to recommend the righteousness of God, or his glory to be advanced by our unbelief, which has opened the door of salvation to the Gentiles, are we to be condemned on that account?—In this case, is not God unjust in taking vengeance on those who promote his glory?—I speak and reason as a man.

At this St. Paul again spurns, (ver. 6,) and deprecates the idea of God's injustice: if God were unjust, how then would he be qualified for the universal judge?—Or "how should God judge the world?"—In verse 7 the objector again comes forward in a somewhat different form—"Suppose, (says he,) in denying Jesus to be the Christ, I have been guilty of error or falsehood; yet if that falsehood has been the means, as you (Paul) pretend, of bringing a host of Gentiles to believe in him, and has thereby increased the number of his worshippers, and advanced the glory of God, why am I to be condemned as a sinner on that account?"—The following verse (8) is evidently Paul's language; but it is not easy to trace the connexion. Dr. Doddridge explains it, as taking up the objector abruptly, and asking, "And why may not I [Paul] say, upon the same principles of reasoning, (as is indeed reported of us,) Let us do evil that good may come—Let us sin to magnify divine grace?" A sentiment which, we fear, if not openly avowed or acted upon, has been secretly cherished and encouraged by some popular preachers of the present day, who, instead of being abashed and confounded, seem to glory in the magnitude of their former sins. But of such principles, or practices, the apostle subjoins this awful censure, "their damnation is just." This decree also strikes directly at the root of an error which prevailed too early in some parts of the Christian church, that duplicity, and prevarication, and even persecution, are then lawful, when they subserve the interests of the church—a principle from which the church of Rome has not yet cleared

Ver. 5. Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance?—Doddridge, Macknight, &c. taking this to be the objection of a Jew, (as ver. 1,) render the words, "Is NOT God unrighteous?" which version the latter has shown the Greek will bear: but taking them as the words of the apostle, the negative must be omitted.

Ver. 6. God forbid.—Gr. "Let it not be."—So ver. 4, and frequently. Macknight, "By no means;" and others, "Far be it." We confess the common rendering is more animated and pointed; but we fear the introduction of God's name here and elsewhere, (when not in the original,) has occasioned too often a light and trifling use of the divine name.

Ver. 8. Whose damnation.—Doddridge and Macknight, "Condemnation."

Ver. 9. Proved.—Gr. "charged."

10 As it is [g] written, There is none righteous, no, not one:
11 There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God.
12 They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.
13 Their [h] throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison [i] of asps is under their lips:
14 Whose mouth [j] is full of cursing and bitterness:
15 Their feet [k] are swift to shed blood:
16 Destruction and misery are in their ways:
17 And the way of peace have they not known:
18 There [l] is no fear of God before their eyes.
19 Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law: that every [m] mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become [n] guilty before God.
20 Therefore [o] by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for by the law is the knowledge of sin.
21 But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the [p] law and the prophets;
22 Even the righteousness of God which is by faith [q] of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe: for there is no difference:
23 For all [r] have sinned, and come short of the glory of God;
24 Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus:
25 Whom God hath [s] set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the [t] remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God;
26 To declare, I say, at this time his righteousness: that [u] he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.
27 Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law? of works? Nay: but by the law of faith.
28 Therefore we conclude that [v] a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law
29 Is he the God of the Jews only? is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also:
30 Seeing it is one God, which [w] shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith.
31 Do we then make void the law through [x] faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the law.

CHAPTER IV.

1 Abraham's faith was imputed to him for righteousness, 10 before he was circumcised. 13 By faith only he and his seed received the promise. 16 Abraham is the father ... that believe. 24 Our faith also shall be imputed to us for r gute...

WHAT shall we then say that Abraham, our father [a] as pertaining to the flesh, hath found?
2 For if Abraham were justified by works, he hath whereof to glory; but not [b] before God.
3 For what saith the [c] Scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness.
4 Now to him that worketh [d] is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt.
5 But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith [e] is counted for righteousness.
6 Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works,
7 Saying, [f] Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered.
8 Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin.
9 Cometh this blessedness then upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision herself, nor can, till in the most public manner she denounces and anathematizes the diabolical decree of the Council of Constance—that "no faith is to be kept with heretics."

St. Paul now reverts to the doctrine of the preceding chapter, that both Jews and Gentiles are equally guilty before God; and after citing several passages from the Old Testament, in proof of this, most of which we have already noticed, he draws this most important inference—That "no flesh" neither Jew nor Greek—can possibly be justified before God by any works or righteousness of their own.

Ver. 20—31. Both Jews and Gentiles, being equally guilty before God, can only be justified through Christ.—St. Paul establishes his position, that "by the deeds of the law can no flesh living be justified in his sight," by this consideration, "that by the law is the knowledge of sin;" and that which convicts us of sin can never justify us in the sight of God. The question now arises, How then can we be saved? The answer is short and easy—We must be "justified freely by God's grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." Here we have, first, the primary, originating cause of our salvation, namely, the grace (or mercy) of God in choosing and ordaining us to everlasting life—"God so loved the world" as to give his Son for man's salvation, (John iii. 16.) 2. We have the meritorious and procuring cause—the propitiatory atonement offered in the obedience and death of Jesus Christ—who "suffered for us—the just for the unjust, that he might bring us unto God," (1 Pet. iii. 18.) 3. The instrumental cause—it is "through faith in his blood for the remission of sins," and this faith is not of ourselves, it is the gift of God, (Ephes. ii. 8.) Now, by this scheme of salvation, we are taught—1. That "the righteousness of God is manifested"—that is, it is displayed and magnified in the death and atonement of Jesus Christ, whereby God can "be just and the justifier of them that believe in Jesus:" and, 2. That, with this faith, no works of the law, either ceremonial or moral, are to be mixed, though undoubtedly they will result from it. This doctrine appears to us sufficiently evident in the Scriptures we have quoted.

On this doctrine of justification by faith alone, we shall subjoin the eleventh Article of the Church of England, which appears to us drawn up with remarkable judgment and precision. It says, "We are accounted righteous before God, only for the merit of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, by faith, and not for our works or deservings: wherefore that we are justified by faith only, is a most wholesome doctrine, and very full of comfort, as more largely is expressed in the Homily of Justification."

This was also the doctrine of all the Reformed churches, particularly those of Helvetia, Belgia, and Augsburgh.

The great objection to this doctrine is, that it "makes void the law of God through faith." This our apostle not only denies in the strongest manner; but, on the contrary, asserts that it establishes the law. This refers chiefly to the moral law, the authority of which was eminently honoured and established by the obedience of the Son of God, and by the strict obligation enjoined on all Christians to follow his example: and even as to the ceremonial law, though its obligation is removed, its injunctions are specially honoured by being shown to be uniformly typical of Christ and his redemption.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—25. Abraham's faith imputed to him for righteousness, as ours shall also be, if we believe in Christ.—There is some difference among the most learned commentators in explaining the opening verses of this chapter. Had this Epistle been addressed to Hebrew converts, we should have had no hesitation in explaining the term "according to the flesh" in the most natural and obvious sense, as referring to the natural seed of Abraham: but since it is expressly ad-also? for we say that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness.

10 How was it then reckoned? when he was in circumcision, or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision.

11 And [z] he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised; that he might be the father [h] of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also:

12 And the father of circumcision to them who are not of the circumcision only, but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumcised.

13 For the promise, that [i] he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith.

14 For if [j] they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect:

15 Because the law [k] worketh wrath: for where no [l] law is, there is no transgression.

16 Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham; who is the father of us all,

17 (As it is written, [m] I have made thee a father of many nations,) [n] before him whom he believed, even God, who quickeneth [o] the dead, and calleth those [p] things which be not as though they were.

18 Who against hope believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations, according to that which was spoken, [q] So shall thy seed be.

19 And being not weak in faith, he considered not his own body now dead, when he was about a hundred years old, neither yet the deadness [r] of Sarah's womb:

20 He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God;

21 And being fully persuaded that, what he had promised, he was [s] able also to perform.

22 And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness.

23 Now [t] it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him;

24 But for us [u] also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe [v] on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead;

25 Who was delivered [w] for our offences, and was raised [x] again for our justification.

CHAPTER V.

1 Being justified by faith, we have peace with God, 2 and joy in our hope, 8 that since we were reconciled by his blood, when we were enemies, 10 we shall much more be saved being reconciled. 12 As sin and death came by Adam, 17 so much more righteousness and life by Jesus Christ. 20 Where sin abounded, grace did superabound.

THEREFORE [a] being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ:

2 By whom [b] also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice [c] in the hope of the glory of God.

3 And not only so, but we glory [d] in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience;

4 And patience, experience; and experience, hope:

dressed to Gentile converts, namely, the Romans, we are more disposed, with Hammond and Whitby, Claude, Boothroyd, and Cox, to refer it to circumcision. "What advantage, then, did our father Abraham derive from circumcision?" that is, Was he justified thereby? If so, he hath "whereof to glory" before God; but, surely, neither he, nor any man, hath whereof to glory before God; therefore Abraham was not justified by circumcision, nor by any other works. And if Abraham was not justified by works, then neither can we be. And that Abraham was not thus justified is farther evident, because he was justified "in uncircumcision;" that is, before he was circumcised.

But how, then, was Abraham justified? By faith in God's promise relative to the Messiah, in whom all nations were to be blessed, as we shall find the apostle clearly explains himself in his Epistle to the Galatians, ch. iii. Abraham was, therefore, justified by faith in Christ, as we also shall be, if we believe in him. But neither was Abraham, nor can we be justified by any merit either of our faith or of our works; for, as stated in this chapter, (ver. 16,) our salvation is of faith, that it might be by grace, that is, by God's free favour: to make, therefore, our justification, which is one grand branch of our salvation, to be of works, is to attempt to defeat God's great design in the plan of our redemption.

But, it is said, this faith was reckoned or imputed to Abraham, as it shall be to us Christians, for righteousness or justification—not as a debt or claim, but as a favour bestowed on us for Christ's sake, on whom our faith must rest. "I think (says Dr. Doddridge) nothing can be easier than to understand how this may be said in full consistence with our being justified by the imputation of the righteousness of Christ; that is, our being treated by God as righteous, for the sake of what he has done and suffered: for, though this be the meritorious cause of our acceptance with God, yet faith may be said to be imputed to us in order to our being justified, or becoming righteous; that is, as we are charged as debtors in the book of God's account, what Christ has done in fulfilling all righteousness for us, is charged as the grand balance of the account: but that it may appear that we are, according to the tenor of the Gospel, entitled to the benefit of this, it is also entered in the book of God's remembrance "that we are believers;" and this appearing, we are graciously discharged, yea, and rewarded, as if we ourselves had been perfectly innocent and obedient."

Christ was not only "delivered (to death) for our offences, but raised again for our justification."—"In the death of Christ (says Mr. Cox) we see an atonement made for sin, and in his resurrection a proof that his atonement was accepted. He may also be said to be raised for our justification, because we are justified through his intercession; and he could not have interceded had he not been raised."

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—21. The happy consequences of our justification.—The apostle having laid down "the most wholesome" doctrine of justification by faith, proceeds now to consider the practical effects arising from it; and, in the first place, the consolation derived therefrom by true believers. Assured of pardon and justification through our Lord Jesus Christ, the love and peace of God are shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Spirit—they have access to communion with God here, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God to be revealed hereafter. Thus are they supported in tribulations of every kind; "tribulation worketh patience—patience (produces) experience" of the divine goodness—and "experience (engenders) hope"—a hope that will not disappoint the expectation, but infinitely exceed it; and of which the possessor will never have reason to be ashamed.

The apostle now enters upon another topic: from the consideration of their having obtained pardon while in a state of sin and unbelief, he draws an argument to hope for farther blessings. He now shows the ground on which we receive be completely in opposition to what the apostle states in a subsequent part of this Epistle;) but merely that they had been ungodly, and consequently that their justification originated from the free mercy of God."

Ver. 10. In uncircumcision.—["Faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness," at least 14 years before he was circumcised; the former having taken place some time before Ishmael's birth, at which time he was 86 years old, and the other when Ishmael was 13 years of age, and Abraham 99. Ver. 14. They which are of the law—i. e. they who seek salvation by the law, and not by faith, are not the children of Abraham's faith, nor heirs with him of the same promises. See Heb. xi. 9.

Ver. 15. Where no law is.—[When no law, or rule of duty, is enacted and acknowledged, there is no transgression, and consequently no punishment. "Nomos," says Bishop Middleton, "is used by St. Paul, of every rule of life, of every revelation, especially of the Mosaic law. Our English version, by having almost constantly said the law, whatever be the meaning of nomos in the original, has made this most difficult epistle still more obscure." When without the article, it is commonly used for law in general, when with the article, of the Mosaic law.]—Bagster.

5 And hope [e] maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the [f] Holy Ghost which is given unto us.

6 For when we were yet without strength, [g] in due [h] time Christ died for the ungodly.

7 For scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die.

8 But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while [i] we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

9 Much more then, being now justified by his [j] blood, we shall be saved [k] from wrath through him.

10 For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much [l] more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by [m] his life.

11 And not only so, but we also [n] joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the [o] atonement.

12 Wherefore, as by [p] one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, [q] for that all have sinned:

13 (For until the law sin was in the world: but sin is not [r] imputed when there is no law.

14 Nevertheless death reigned [s] from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, who is the [t] figure of him that was to come.

15 But not as the offence, so also is the free gift. For if through the offence of one many be dead, much more the grace [u] of God, and the gift by grace, which is by one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto [v] many.

16 And not as it was by one that sinned, so is the gift: for the judgment was by one to condemnation, but the free gift is of many [w] offences unto justification.

17 For if [x] by one man's offence death reigned by one; much more they which receive abundance [y] of grace and of the gift [z] of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ.)

18 Therefore, as [a] by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so [b] by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all [c] men unto justification of life.

19 For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous.

20 [d] Moreover the law entered, that the offence might abound. But where sin abounded, grace did much more [e] abound:

21 That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace [f] reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord.

CHAPTER VI.

1 We may not live in sin, 2 for we are dead unto it, 3 as appeareth by our baptism. 12 Let not sin reign any more, 15 because we have yielded ourselves to the service of righteousness, 23 and for that death is the wages of sin.

WHAT shall we say then? Shall [a] we continue in sin, that grace may abound?

2 God forbid. How shall we, that are dead [b] to sin, live any longer therein?

these benefits, namely, our relation to Christ Jesus, in the covenant of grace made with him, of which he is the head and surety. Here a comparison is drawn between Adam the first, as the head and father of all mankind, and Christ, the second Adam, as he is expressly called in 1 Cor. xv. 47. The former being the head of all his natural descendants, to whom his first sin, whereby he violated God's covenant with him, conveyed death with all its fatal consequences: the latter, being in like manner the head of all his people, to all who believe, and are justified by faith in him—he eventually conveys not only temporal, but also spiritual and eternal life; and this by a resurrection both spiritual and literal—raising them to newness of life here, and to a new and immortal life hereafter.

That all men—Jews as well as Gentiles—are sinners and guilty before God, our apostle had largely proved in the preceding part of this Epistle, and he now asserts that their guilt commenced in Adam, and therefore extended to all his posterity, who were alike connected with him.

What follows, with reference to the two great heads of mankind, Adam and Christ, requires some explication; the sin of the one fell upon man universally, and all men are sinners: the righteousness of the other [Christ] is offered to the same extent, though it avails only to them who by faith receive it. Mr. Cox says, that the meaning of the apostle seems to be .... "That the Gospel reveals a remedy fully adequate to the salvation of all men; and actually effectual to the salvation of all who do not wilfully reject the remedy. As far as Christians are concerned, their loss by the fall is more than repaired to them; for they enjoy a capacity of obtaining [he might have said a promise of receiving] a far greater degree of happiness and glory than that of Adam in Paradise." The effects of Christ's atonement exceed those of Adam's sin in some other respects. We were involved in misery by one transgression; but are saved from infinite offences. Our misery admitted of a perfect remedy; but our salvation, when completed, is beyond all danger of relapse.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—23. We must not live in sin, nor suffer it to reign in us.—By a strong and beautiful imagery here introduced, believers are said to be crucified, dead and buried with Christ, by their baptism and Christian profession, in which indeed the early Christians were often exposed to martyrdom: but the figures used may farther intimate, 1. Their spiritual union with Christ as the members of his mystical body, "growing together," more and more, into intimate union subject into the royal presence by the king's son?—This grace wherein we stand—Namely, the grace of adoption: Christ introduces his adopted brethren into the Father's presence.

Ver. 6. Yet without strength.—"The original," (Asthenon,) says Mr. Cox, signifies weak through sickness: and here refers to the pernicious influence of sin, which affects, as it were, the whole man with an incurable malady." See Isa. i. 5.—In due time—viz. the time predicted.

Ver. 7. A righteous man—i. e. one remarkable for honour, equity, and strict justice.—A good man.—A man of kindness and benevolence. Godwyn thinks that this and the preceding verse allude to a rabbinical distinction of the Jews into three classes—good, just, and ungodly.

Ver. 10. Saved by his life—i. e. by his being raised from the dead. Compare ch. iv. 25.

Ver. 11. Received the atonement.—Doddridge and Macknight, "the reconciliation." The Greek noun is nearly related to the verb twice rendered reconciled in the preceding verse. Reconciliation, however, certainly implies atonement.

Ver. 12—19. Wherefore, as by one man sin entered, &c.—"The main design of this passage," says Professor Stuart, "is indeed plain. It lies, one may say, upon the very face of it. It is this; viz. 'to exalt our views respecting the blessings which Christ has procured for us, by a comparison of them with the evil consequences which ensued upon the fall of our first ancestor, and by showing that the blessings in question not only extend to the removal of these evils, but even far beyond this; so that the grace of the gospel has not only abounded, but superabounded.'

"A full synopsis of what is taught in ver. 12—19, comprises the following particulars; viz. Sin entered the world [commenced] by the offence of Adam; and death, i. e. punishment or misery, came in as the necessary result of it. In like manner, death came upon all men, because that all became sinners, ver. 12.

"It is indeed true, that all men have been the subjects of sin and death; for that even those have been so, who have not lived under the light of revelation, or been made acquainted with any express commands of God, is proved from the fact, that all those who lived between Adam and Moses, were sinners, and as such under sentence of death, ver. 13, 14.

"Adam, who was the occasion of introducing sin into the world, and of bringing sin and death upon all men, may be considered as a Tupos of Christ, in respect to the influence which he has had on others; (but not as to the kind of influence, or the degree of it, for here is a wide diversity;) ver. 14, last clause.

"That the kind and degree of influence which Adam had on all men, is not like that which Christ has on them; or that Adam, when regarded as a Tupos of Christ, is not to be so regarded in these respects, is plain: 1. From the fact, that Adam occasioned the condemnation of all men; but Christ delivers mankind from condemnation, and bestows eternal happiness on them, ver. 15. 2. The condemnation of which Adam was the occasion, has respect only to one offence; the pardon which Christ procured, extends to many offences, ver. 16. Hence, 3. If death reigned over men because of one offence; much more shall they reign in life, who through Christ receive pardon for many offences, and a title to future blessedness, ver. 17.

"Having thus guarded his readers against extending the idea of Tupos to points of which Tupos cannot be predicated; and having shown that the influence of Christ on the human race is exactly the reverse of that of Adam, in respect to its kind or nature; and also that it far surpasses it in degree; the apostle now returns to the consideration of the real point of resemblance or Tupos between Adam and Christ, viz. the universality or extent of influence. This he states as follows:

"As the consequences of Adam's sin were extended to all men, so the consequences of Christ's obedience [viz. unto death] are extended to all; i. e. Jews and Gentiles all come on an equal footing into the kingdom of Christ, or the blessings which the gospel proffers are made equally accessible to all men without exception; and to all on the same terms or conditions, ver. 18, 19. Compare, as an illustration of this last idea, Rom. iii. 23—30."

Ver. 14. Figure of him.—[Or, "type, pattern or resemblance, of him who was to come," i. e. the Messiah; in this, says Beza, that each of them shares what he has with his; but they are clearly unlike in this, that Adam by nature communicates sin unto death to his posterity, but Christ by grace communicates his righteousness unto his people, unto life.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. By the offence of one.—"The whole context," says Dr. Hawes, "clearly shows that the Apostle is reasoning against a common error of his day, viz. that the benefits of Christ's mediation were to be restricted to the Jews, and not extended at all to the Gentiles. To disprove this, he runs a sort of parallel between Adam and Christ; and argues, that, as in consequence of the first transgression all have fallen into a state of sin and condemnation, so the provisions of mercy, through Christ, extend to all—to all classes of men, whether Gentiles or Jews."

Ver. 21. As sin hath reigned, &c.—"Sin and grace are here most happily personified under the character of two mighty monarchs exercising their power over their respective subjects."—Cox.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1. What shall we say then?—Margin and Doddridge, "What shall we say then?—(Shall we say) Let us continue," &c. Compare ch. iii. 8.

Ver. 2. God forbid.—Macknight, "By no means."—How shall we, &c.—i. e. How shall we who are dead to lust live in adultery? How shall we who are dead to the world, live in the pursuit of its wealth and pleasures?

3 Know ye not, that so many of us as [c] were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into [d] his death?

4 Therefore we are buried [e] with him by baptism into death: that like [f] as Christ was raised up from the dead by [g] the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness [h] of life.

5 For if [i] we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection:

6 Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body [j] of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin.

7 For [k] he that is dead is [l] freed from sin.

8 Now if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him:

9 Knowing that [m] Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him.

10 For in that he died, he died [n] unto sin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God.

11 Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be [o] dead indeed unto sin, but [p] alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

12 Let [q] not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof.

13 Neither yield ye your members [r] as [s] instruments of unrighteousness unto sin: but yield [t] yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God.

14 For sin shall not have [u] dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace.

15 What then? shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid.

16 Know ye not, that to whom [v] ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?

17 But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form [w] of doctrine [x] which was delivered you.

18 Being then made free [y] from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness.

19 I speak after the manner of men, because of the infirmity of your flesh: for as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity unto iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness.

20 For when ye were the servants [z] of sin, ye were free [a] from righteousness.

21 What fruit [b] had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end [c] of those things is death.

22 But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life.

23 For [d] the wages of sin is death: but the gift [e] of God is eternal [f] life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

CHAPTER VII.

1 No law hath power over a man longer than he liveth. 4 But we are dead to the law. 7 Yet is not the law sin, 12 but holy, just, good, 16 as I acknowledge, who am grieved because I cannot keep it.

KNOW ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth?

2 For [a] the woman which hath a husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband.

3 So then if, while [b] her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

4 Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law [c] by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth [d] fruit unto God.

5 For when we were [e] in the flesh, the [f] motions of sins, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit [g] unto death.

6 But now we are delivered from the law, [h] that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter.

and communion with him. 2. Their tender sympathy in his sufferings and death, their lively joy in his resurrection, and the influence of both in mortifying the flesh and sin, and in raising them to newness of life, and animating them with the prospect of future and everlasting felicity. 3. Their increasing conformity to his sufferings and death, by being crucified to the world, and separated from its criminal pleasures, even as a man dead and buried is from all the concerns of the present life. The consequence of which was, that they who had formerly been the slaves of sin, and laboured only for the wages of eternal death, were now enlisted as volunteers in the service of their Redeemer; and so far from living in sin, as had been slanderously reported, they had for ever renounced both its service and its delights: all the members of their body were turned into weapons against the enemy of their souls. And being now liberated from sin, and become the servants of God, they were bringing forth the fruits of holiness, which would end in nothing short of everlasting life; and their continual prayer is—

"O for a heart submissive, meek,
My dear Redeemer's throne;
Where only Christ is heard to speak,
Where Jesus reigns alone."

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—25. The law of Moses compared to that of marriage, and the Christian's deliverance therefrom:—the contest between the flesh and spirit.—The law of marriage was originally ordained for life, and no law can follow us beyond the grave. Even the law of Moses, to which the Jews

Ver. 5. Planted together.—Wells and Doddridge, "Made to grow together." Boothroyd, "United together." See Ephes. ii. 21; iv. 15.

Ver. 6. Old man crucified.—"Five persons," says Brooks, "were studying what were the best means to mortify sin; one said, to meditate on death; the second, to meditate on judgment; the third, to meditate on the joys of heaven; the fourth, to meditate on the torments of hell; the fifth, to meditate on the blood and sufferings of Jesus Christ; and certainly the last is the choicest and strongest motive of all. If ever we would cast off our despairing thoughts, we must dwell and muse much upon, and apply this precious blood to our own souls; so shall sorrow and mourning flee away."——Might be destroyed.—Doddridge, "enervated," that it might not destroy us.

Ver. 7. Is freed.—Doddridge says, "the word here seems to import, being delivered from future claims of subjection." So Macknight.

Ver. 13. As instruments—i. e. military instruments.——Unto sin—i. e. as soldiers armed in the cause of sin.

Ver. 14. Not under the law, but under grace.—The two dispensations are here contrasted, as in John i. 17.

Ver. 17. But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin.—This is one of the most unhappy translations in the New Testament. Bishop Louth renders it, "But thanks be to God, that [though] ye were the slaves of sin; yet have ye obeyed from the heart the doctrine, on the model of which ye were formed." Doddridge translates it to the same effect thus—"Thanks be to God, that whereas ye were the servants of sin, ye have obeyed from the heart the model of doctrine into which ye were delivered." The allusion undoubtedly is to the casting of figures in a mould.——Form of doctrine which was delivered you.—The margin reads, "whereto ye were delivered." So Macknight.

Ver. 19. After the manner of men.—See chap. iii. 5.

Ver. 20. Free from righteousness—i. e. not under the control of its precepts.

Ver. 21. What fruit had ye, &c.—i. e. what advantage did ye derive from a life of sinful pleasures?

Ver. 23. The wages of sin is death.—The term "wages," according to Macknight, is an allusion particularly to the pay of soldiers. Sin is here described as a tyrant, whose service is sure to end in misery and death; Jesus, as a conqueror, bestowing the rich reward of eternal life and happiness. The death here mentioned must certainly be more than temporal.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1. Over a man—[Or person, either man or woman; anthropos and homo having this extent of signification.]—Bagster.——As long as he liveth.—Doddridge, "as IT liveth," meaning the law: but by the gospel the relation is dissolved on both sides. The Christian is dead to the Mosaic law, and the law to him, as to all hopes of salvation from it.

Ver. 2. The woman—[Rather, a woman. The apostle here illustrates the position laid down in the preceding verse by a familiar instance.]—Bagster.

Ver. 6. In newness of spirit—i. e. in a new and spiritual manner.—Ca-

7 What shall we say then? Is the law sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not [h] known sin, but by the law: for I had not known [i] lust, except the law had [k] said, Thou shalt not covet.

8 But sin, taking occasion by the commandment, wrought in me all manner of concupiscence. For without the law sin was dead.

9 For I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died.

10 And the commandment, which was ordained to [l] life, I found to be unto death.

11 For sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me.

12 Wherefore the law [m] is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good.

13 Was then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid. But sin, that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which is good; that sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful.

14 For we know that the law is spiritual: but I am carnal, sold [n] under sin.

15 For that which I do I [o] allow not: for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I.

16 If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law that it is good.

17 Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.

18 For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh,) dwelleth no [p] good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not.

19 For [q] the good that I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do.

20 Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.

21 I find then a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present [r] with me.

22 For I delight [s] in the law of God after the inward [t] man:

23 But I see another law in [u] my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity [v] to the law of sin which is in my members.

24 O [w] wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from [x] the body of this [y] death?

25 I [z] thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin.

had been married by the Sinai covenant, had dominion over a man no longer than he lived. But this law was become metaphorically dead, as to any authoritative command over them, upon their being married to Christ by faith. So, on the other hand, they were dead to the law, no longer looking to it for justification or eternal life. This mode of reasoning, though it may appear to us somewhat obscure, was perfectly familiar and intelligible to the Jews, and we shall find several similar examples in Paul's Epistles, and especially in those to the Galatians and to the Hebrews.

The first part of this chapter seems addressed particularly to Jewish converts—"I speak (says he) to them that know the law"—and of these there were probably many, as a great number of Jews resided in Rome. And when Paul adverts to himself and to his own experience, it must be remembered that he also was a Jew, and born under the Mosaic law. The great majority of members might be, however, Gentile converts, who had lived under the law of Nature only, to which they were as much wedded as were the Jews to the Mosaic law; that is, they expected life and salvation therefrom: Paul therefore now adverts to this, and shows that, as a covenant of life, they must be divorced from that also, though not as a rule of life, in which respect the obligation of the moral law is universal and eternal: and therefore Paul himself still obeyed it with his heart and mind, notwithstanding the leanings of his corrupt nature to flesh and sin.

But the chief difficulty in the chapter now before us relates to the contest between the flesh and spirit—the old and new man. Many learned commentators are of opinion that the Apostle here speaks not in his own, but in a borrowed character; and the great majority of them, among whom are Drs. Hammond, Taylor, and Macknight, consider him as speaking in the character of an unconverted Jew. It is plain the speaker was a convinced sinner, for he says, (ver. 11,) that sin had "deceived him," and that the law had "slain him." He was convinced that in himself, naturally, there dwelt nothing good. He felt within him the struggle of the contrary principles of flesh and spirit—of good and evil: his flesh or corrupt nature tempting him to sin, whilst in his new or regenerate nature he delighted in the law of God; and though he confessed and bewailed his union to that corrupt nature which was a body of sin and death, yet he thanked God, through Jesus Christ, that notwithstanding all his temptations and his failures, with the heart and mind he "served the law of God." Now, then, whether the apostle spake this "of himself, or of some other man," that man must have been converted by the grace of God. But it is equally plain that he spake this of himself only: for what can be more express than, "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord—with the mind I MYSELF serve the law of God."

The only remaining question is, How can we consistently apply to a pious and virtuous man, as Paul now was, some of the expressions here used? And, first, we would remark that it was his manner—even his glory—to debase himself, and to magnify his Lord. He not only had been the chief of sinners, but even now, when not inferior to the chief of the apostles, still he speaks of himself as "less than the least of all saints." 2. The best and holiest of men in all ages have not scrupled to apply these confessions to themselves and their own experience. Of this Augustine is a striking and well-known instance in the primitive church; and without making a parade of modern names, those of Bp. Hall and Dr. Watts, are abundantly sufficient. Will any living Christian say to such men as these, "Stand by, for I am holier than thou?"

Let us now inquire which of the expressions here used is inapplicable to a wise and good man, as was St. Paul. The strongest expression here used is in verse 14—"I am carnal, sold under sin:" but it is very obvious the expression is not used absolutely, but comparatively—"The law is spiritual, but I am carnal,"—not absolutely and wholly so; but as to the flesh, (ver. 18,) and in comparison with the infinitely pure law of God. With regard to the expression "sold under sin," it is materially different from what is said of Ahab, (with which it often has been compared,) who "sold himself to work evil;" (1 Kings xxi. 20;) whereas the apostle was "sold under sin;" brought into captivity by that "carnal mind," of which he says in the next chapter, (ver. 7,) it is "not subject to the law of God, neither, indeed, can be."

Again, he complains that, in his flesh, he finds, "no good thing:"—that though he had a will to do good, he had not of himself strength to perform it; so that the good which he would he often did not, while he often did what he could neither allow nor approve: but this language is so far from suiting the character of an unconverted man, that he could not use it with propriety; for though such a one may often sin against his judgment and his conscience, yet his heart goes

Ver. 7. Is the law sin?—i. e. sinful, or inclining us to sin?—I had not known lust—Or what lust was, namely, that it was an inordinate or unlawful desire.—Thou shalt not covet.—Paul here refers to his own experience, were it not for his knowledge of God's law, he would not have known the criminality of lust.

Ver. 8. Concupiscence.—Macknight, "strong desire," which here means lust, and is so rendered in the preceding verse.—For without the law—[Rather, "For without a law sin is dead." Where there is no law, there is no transgression; for sin is the transgression of the law: the very essence of sin consists in the violation of some positive law.]—Bagster.

Ver. 9. I was alive, &c.—Notwithstanding what is said in the exposition, we do not think this proves the speaker to be either Jew or Gentile, but a converted man. Before he understood the law in its spirituality, as explained by our Lord in Mat v. 28, he was "alive" and well; or, as our Lord expresses it, he was, like other Pharisees, "whole, needing no physician," Mat. ix. 12: but "when the law came," i. e. appeared to him as it really is, he was "sick;" he felt the danger he was in, and "died," as to all hope of life or salvation thereby.

Ver. 10. Which was ordained to life.—See chap. x. 5.

Ver. 13. Might become—i. e. might evidently appear—exceeding sinful—i. e. in its true colours—altogether criminal and inexcusable.

Ver. 14. The law is spiritual.—See on verse 9.

Ver. 15. I allow not.—Gataker, Doddridge, Macknight, and Cox, "approve not."

Ver. 20 Sin that dwelleth in me.—To illustrate this passage, Doddridge alludes to the story of Arastes, in Xenophon's Cyropædia, who on being reproved by Cyrus for some improper conduct toward Panthæa, replied—"Alas! now I know myself, and perceive plainly that I have two souls; one that inclines me to good, and the other to evil: in your presence the former prevails, but when I am alone, I am conquered by the latter."

Ver. 24. The body of this death.—Margin, "this body of death," alluding to a cruel custom of fastening the living to the dead. Doddridge says—"It is well known that some ancient writers mention this as a cruelty practised by some tyrants on miserable captives who fell into their hands; and a more forcible and expressive image of the case represented, cannot surely enter into the mind of man." That such a cruelty was once practised is certain from Virgil:—

> "What words can paint those execrable times;
> The subjects' sufferings, and the tyrant's crimes!
> The living and the dead, at his command,
> Were coupled, face to face and hand to hand:
> Till chok'd with stench, in loath'd embraces tied,
> The ling'ring wretches pined away and died."—Dryden.

Ver. 25. But.—Doddridge, "though;" (Gr. de)—with the flesh, &c.—Macknight and others read these words in the interrogative, but, we think, in direct contradiction to the apostle's train of argument. See the opening of chap. viii. A more full, and, we think, a complete justification of the application of this chapter to Paul's own case, may be found in Gill's Cause of God and Truth. Prof. Stuart, in his Commentary, interprets ver. 5–25 as having respect to a person under the law, and not under grace.

CHAPTER VIII.

They that are in Christ, and live according to the Spirit, are free from condemnation. 5, 13 What harm cometh of the flesh. 6, 14 and what good of the Spirit: 17 and what it is to be Christ's children. 19 whose expectation all things long for. 29 Who were predestinated from God. 35 What can sever us from his love?

A. M. cir. 4062.

THERE is therefore now no [a] condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk [b] not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

2 For the law of the Spirit of life [c] in Christ Jesus hath made me free [d] from the law of sin and death.

3 For what the law could not [e] do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son [f] in the likeness of sinful flesh, and [g] for sin, condemned sin in the flesh:

4 That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk [h] not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

5 For they that are after the [i] flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things [j] of the Spirit.

6 For [k] to be carnally minded is [l] death; but [m] to be spiritually minded is life and peace.

7 Because [k] the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.

8 So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God.

9 But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell [n] in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.

10 And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness.

11 But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, [o] he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies [p] by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.

12 Therefore, brethren, we are debtors, not [q] to the flesh, to live after the flesh.

13 For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify [r] the deeds of the body, ye shall live.

14 For as many as are led [s] by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.

15 For ye have not received the spirit of bondage [t] again to fear; but [u] ye have received the Spirit of [v] adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.

with his sin. When St. Paul says, "If I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me;" we are aware the language has been often adopted by bad men as an apology for sin; but for what sin did Paul thus apologise? His language is that of penitence and regret: "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" or this dead body of sin, which, like a corpse chained to him, dragged down his new and spiritual nature towards the earth and sin.

It is also a mistake to attribute moral perfection, or even infallibility of conduct, to any inspired person, even the chief of the apostles; for not only does Paul thus bewail himself, but James says, "In many things WE ALL offend," (James iii. 2:) and even the amiable and beloved John, "If WE say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." 1 John i. 8.

CHAP. VIII. 1—16. The privileges of believers in conversion and adoption.—This chapter is generally considered as closely connected with the preceding; so much so, that Dr. Doddridge considers their separation as one of the most unhappy divisions made of the chapters of the New Testament. "With the mind," (says Paul,) that is, with the nobler powers of my spirit, "I myself serve the law of God, though with the flesh the law of sin:" but the main question is, While this contention prevailed within, which way was his life and conversation bent? Did he "walk after the flesh," fulfilling the lusts thereof? or did he not, notwithstanding the struggle which it cost him, turn his back upon these, and follow the dictates of his new nature, and of the Spirit of God, by which it was inspired? His well known character and conduct must give the answer. "Walking," therefore, "after," or according to "the Spirit," he justly inferred that there was no condemnation to him: "For (saith he) the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus," that is, the spiritual life which I enjoy, hath "prevailed and triumphed over the law" or power "of sin and death;" and liberated me from its dominion. "For what the law could not do"—What was that? The law could neither justify nor sanctify; but "what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the [depravity of the] flesh," that God hath done by "sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh;" though himself perfectly unstained by sin, God visited our sins upon him as our substitute, that by him "the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled" both for and in us, and all who "walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit." This walking after or according to the things of the spirit, or spiritual things, is here explained by "minding," that is, being devoted to spiritual things; as walking after the flesh is also interpreted of attachment and devotion to carnal and worldly objects. To be thus carnally minded is declared to be death in the most awful sense, as implying not only spiritual, but eternal death; for the carnal mind cannot be subjected to God's law, nor can the carnally minded, while in that state, please him. The cause of this distinction is plainly shown to originate in the work of the Spirit of God; for "if any man have not the Spirit of God, he is not one of his children;" but if the Spirit of God dwell in us, then do we mortify the deeds of the flesh; then are we his children. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God," by adoption and grace;—and having received the Spirit of adoption, they are so far delivered from alarm and fear, and call upon God, as their Father which is in heaven.

"The Mosaic dispensation (says Mr. Cox) indirectly tended to excite in the minds of the Jews an awful and servile dread of the Supreme Being: but the Gospel is eminently calculated to inspire believers with a spirit of love towards God, and a lively confidence in his favour and protection. A 'spirit of adoption,' the happy privilege of all real Christians, entitles them to address God under the endearing character of a friend who is reconciled to them, and a Father who loves them with more than paternal affection. The word Father being expressed both in Syriac and Greek, beautifully represents Jewish and Gentile believers as joining in the same worship, and enjoying the same filial relationship to God."

The close of this section leads us to speak of the grace of adoption as bestowed on those who, by faith, are received into the family of God. In every act of adoption, a child is taken from another family, (or perhaps from a more distant branch of the same,) and introduced as the son and heir of the adopter, a practice that is observed, more or less, in almost all countries. But the most important point for our present consideration is, the witness of the Spirit here spoken of: "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." And it is the more important that we should understand the nature of this blessing, as, by mistakes on this subject, many have been led into the errors of a dangerous enthusiasm: to avoid which, we shall refer our readers to the temperate and judicious remarks of the pious and amiable Dr. Watts:—"The substance of this testimony of the Spirit to our adoption, may (says the Doctor) be represented after this manner:—The Spirit of God, in his word, has described the marks and characters of his children; and, by his gracious influence, he works these holy dispositions, these characters, in our hearts: God has given us a conscience, which is a faculty of comparing ourselves with the rule of his word, and judging accordingly. The Spirit of God, by his power and by his providence, awakens these holy dispositions into lively exercise: he assists our inquiring and our judging faculties; helps us to compare our own souls with his word; and thus confirms our own spirits in the belief of this proposition, that we are the children of God. This is the more common and ordinary way and method, whereby God is pleased to give the comforts of adoption to his people." (Evang. Disc. No. xi.)

The same judicious writer, however, (in his subsequent discourse,) admits that there are instances of a more extraordinary nature to be found in the experience of men eminent for piety and usefulness, (such as the venerable John Howe, for example;) but we ought to be very cautious not to reason from them in any way that should lead us to slight the ordinary means of grace, or to act under the influence of extraordinary impressions, instead of following the written word.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1. No condemnation.—The Greek is emphatic, "Not one condemnation."——Who walk not after—(Greek, kata) "according to;" so throughout the chapter.

Ver. 3. What the law could not do.—Literally, "the impossible of the law." This expression is evidently elliptical. and Boothroyd thus supplies the ellipsis —"What the law could not do . . . God (hath done,) sending, &c.——And for sin.—The word sin is, in both Testaments, sometimes used in the sense of a sacrifice for sin. See 2 Corinthians v. 21.——Condemned sin in the flesh—i. e. punished it in our surety under a legal sentence, on our account.

Ver. 4. In us.—This is the most usual sense, but it often means for us, and both senses may be here included. The law was fulfilled for us by Christ, and is fulfilled in us by the work of his Holy Spirit.

Ver. 6. For.—Doddridge, "Now."

Ver. 7. Because the carnal mind is enmity, &c.—The carnal mind is the object of aversion to God.

Ver. 8. They that are in the flesh—i. e. that "walk after the flesh;" as in verse 1.

Ver. 10. The body is dead—i. e. mortal, or condemned to die.

Ver. 15. Spirit of bondage—Or "of slaves." See Gal. iv. 3.——We cry Abba, Father.—Abba is Syriac for Father. M. Claude says, "St. Paul alludes to a law among the Jews, which forbade slaves to call a freeman Abba."

16 The Spirit itself beareth [w] witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God:

17 And if children, then heirs; [x] heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; [y] if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.

18 For I reckon [z] that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.

19 For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God.

20 For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope, 21 Because [a] the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

22 For we know that [b] the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now.

23 And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first-fruits [c] of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan [d] within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption [e] of our body.

24 For we are saved by hope: but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope [f] for?

25 But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it.

26 Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but [g] the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered.

Ver. 17—27. The blessedness of believers, and the vanity of the world.—The concluding paragraph of our preceding section connects so intimately with the present, that we cannot avoid reverting to it in the beginning of this. The Spirit, according to St. Paul, bearing "witness with our spirit," that we are the children of God; it bears witness also, that "if children, then are we heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ: if so be that we suffer with him, that we also may be glorified together." These, indeed, are great and mysterious truths, and must appear utterly unintelligible and incredible to those who are strangers to the spiritual and divine influences above referred to. To those, however, who by faith are enabled to cry, "Abba, Father," they afford consolation under all their trials, because they reasonably infer, that if they are made partakers with their Lord and Saviour in the trials and sufferings of the present life, they also shall be glorified together in a better world. "For I reckon (says the apostle) that the sufferings of this present time, are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in (and to) us," in another life.

The following passage, however, is confessedly obscure, and being attended with such difficulty, has of course met with a variety of interpretations. It has been asked, 1. What is meant by the creature of creation (for it is the same word in the original) here referred to? 2. What is the vanity to which it was involuntarily subjected? And, 3. What the glory to which it is hereafter to be restored?

Not having room to enumerate the different answers which have been given to these questions, we shall simply state our own conceptions on the subject. 1. It may be recollected that our Lord commanded his Gospel to be preached "to every creature," (Mark xvi. 15;) and that St. Paul asserts in his Epistle to the Colossians, (i. 23,) written but a few years after this, that it had been so preached—meaning to every rational creature: to such, therefore we restrain it.—2. This rational creation, as our apostle stated in chap. v. 12, &c., had been made "subject to vanity" and death, not willingly or through any act of their own, but by the sin of their first father, Adam; in consequence of which they were continually groaning together under the miseries which their own sin, and that of their first progenitor, had drawn upon them.—And, 3. Not only was there an infinitude of heavenly bliss set before them in the heavenly world, but a far better state of things was promised them, even in the present life: first, in the Gospel dispensation; secondly, in the glories of the millennium; and, finally, in the general resurrection of the dead.

All these particulars might admit of an enlargement that would, we think, tend to establish our interpretation; but suffice it to add, upon the second head only, it is well known that a general expectation was prevalent through the world, from the time of the Hebrew prophets and the pagan sybils, that some mighty revolution would take place under the expected Saviour of the world: and both our Lord and his apostles encouraged such expectations by promises of the universal spread of knowledge, peace, and happiness. Then shall "the creature"—the rational creation—and, in a figurative sense, even the inanimate creation, be "delivered from the bondage of corruption," and admitted to participate "the glorious liberty of the children of God."

When the apostle, in the preceding verses, speaks of the creature being "made subject to vanity," he says it was "by reason of," or rather, "by Him who had subjected (the same) in hope." This is differently referred: by some (as Doddridge) to Adam, whose fall subjected our unhappy world to misery and corruption; but by others (as Macknight, Boothroyd, Cox, &c.) to God himself, who, upon that event, doomed the world to such subjection: but the former, in the act of his fall, had certainly no thought about his recovery, and the Supreme Being cannot be the subject of either hope or expectation: He who can command all things can hope nothing. The best modern critics and commentators, therefore, read the passage with a parenthesis, thus:—"The earnest expectation of the creature (or creation) waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God:—(for the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by [or through] him that subjected the same:)—IN HOPE that the creature (or creation) itself also shall be delivered," &c. Here hope is properly applied to the general expectation of mankind, of another and better state of things, and this hope, or earnest expectation, was entertained, not only by the world at large, but even by believers, who, notwithstanding they had received the first-fruits of the Spirit, still lived under the expectation of greater things in the present state, and the final completion of their hopes and expectations in the redemption of their bodies from the grave, which is attributed to the same Holy Spirit, who in the present life quickens the soul from spiritual death. (See ver. 10, 11.)

When, in the next verse, the apostle adds, "even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption," he intimates a weariness of the world, and an indifference to both its riches and pleasures, very uncommon with Christians in the present day, who frequently seek with anxiety those very things with which the primitive Christians were weary and disgusted. And though here and there are doubtless some, and even many, who look beyond the present state, there are few who carry forward their wishes to the grand period of the resurrection, when the body shall be redeemed from the grave. Whether it be from a more lively view of the intermediate state, or a more distant one of the resurrection, this doctrine seldom affects us as it did believers of the apostolic age.

Still, however, our religion consists in hope—in the hope of "another and a better world;" in the mean time it is our duty to wait with patience, and pursue with ardour, the path of duty: and when our strength fails, (as, alas! it soon does,) and the Ver. 18—25. For I reckon, &c.—"These verses," says Prof. Stuart, "constitute one of those passages, which the critics call loci vexatissimi, (a most difficult passage.) The general object of the passage, however, cannot fail to be evident to every considerate reader. In ver. 18 the apostle asserts, that the sufferings of the present life are not worthy of any comparison with the glory which is to be revealed; i. e. future glory is great beyond all comparison or expression. Such is the proposition to be illustrated or confirmed. But, how is this effected? I answer, that the theme being thus introduced by the apostle, he proceeds in the following manner: 'Now that such a glory is yet to be revealed, (in other words, that there is a world of surpassing glory beyond the grave,) the whole condition of things or rather of mankind, in the present world, abundantly proves. Here a frail and perishable nature serves to show, that no stable source of happiness can be found on earth. From the commencement of the world down to the present time, it has always been thus. In the midst of the sufferings and sorrows, to which their earthly existence exposes them, mankind naturally look forward to another and better world, where happiness without alloy and without end may be enjoyed. Even Christians themselves, joyful as their hopes should make them, find themselves still compelled by sufferings and sorrows to sigh and groan, and to expect a state of real and permanent enjoyment only in heaven; so that they can only say, for the present, that they are saved, because they hope or expect salvation in another and better world. The very fact that here they, like all others around them, are in a state of trial, and that they only hope for glory, shows that the present fruition of it is not to be expected.'

"The practical conclusion from all this the apostle now proceeds to draw, viz. 'that Christians, in the midst of sufferings and trials, ought not to faint or to be discouraged, inasmuch as a glory to be revealed is in prospect, which should make them regard their present temporary sufferings as altogether unworthy to be accounted of.'"

Some have hence inferred a resurrection, not only of the rational, but animal creation; for this, however, we can find no authority in the text; and not being revealed, we are not called to give an opinion on the subject.—Travaileth in pain.—The world at this time was big with revolutions, and with convulsions.

Ver. 23. The adoption, &c.—The Romans had a twofold form of adoption: the first, was a private transaction between the parties, receiving the person adopted into the family; the second, was a public recognition in the forum. Hence thinks the latter here alluded to. Compare 1 John iii. 2.

burdens of life become too heavy for us, the Comforter, whom our Lord long since had promised his disciples, lays hold, as it were, of the other end of the load, and supports both us and it. Thus it is we teach our infant children frequently to try their strength, by assisting them to carry things beyond it; supporting them from falling, yet, at times, relaxing that support, that they may learn the necessity of our assistance.

The expression, "he intercedeth for" the saints, Dr. Macknight renders "he complaineth"—and the second time (verse 27) "strongly complaineth" for them; which suggests this beautiful idea, that when believers "groan within themselves," and know not "what to pray for as they ought," the Spirit gives energy to their complaints, and aids their pleas "with groans inarticulate," or "unutterable." And "he who searcheth the heart," hears "the groaning" of the oppressed, and the "sighing of the needy;" (Exod. ii. 24. Ps. xii. 5;) he also knoweth the mind of the Spirit, and that he always makes "intercession for them according to the will of God." When, therefore, believers think their prayers pass unheard or unregarded, it may be well to consider whether their heavenly Father may not have listened rather to the pleadings of his own Spirit, who may substitute what we need for what we desire; and, instead of what might really be injurious, gives that only which is good for us.

Ver. 28—30. The golden chain of a believer's privileges.—So we hesitate not to call the series of divine blessings here introduced, and which we shall feel it our duty to examine with some distinctness, for every link of it was formed in heaven. In the preceding verses St. Paul had been speaking of bondage, groans, and travailing pains; but, adds he, distressing as these things may be—"We know that all things work together," or co-operate, for good to them that love God. Many of the heathens uttered fine things on the advantages of affliction, particularly Plato, who says, "Whether a righteous man be in poverty, sickness, or any other calamity, we must conclude that it will turn to his advantage, either in life or death." (Republic, Book IX.) But Paul's representation is far more beautiful. He looks not only to the end of these evils, but assures us that, even at the present time, all things "are working together" (so Mr. Cox) for our good. Some have illustrated this metaphor from "the art of the apothecary," who so compounds a variety of heterogeneous ingredients, some nauseous, and others dangerous, as to produce a salutary medicine; or it may be explained in allusion to the mechanism of a machine, in which a variety of motions, simple and compound, vertical and horizontal, are combined to produce certain mechanical effects.

It has been disputed whether, among the "all things" here named, moral evil should be included. Far be it from the writer to offer one word in apology for sin, or attempt to palliate its malignity; yet, as the skilful physician can produce the most salutary effects from poisons, and, in so doing, most eminently display his skill; so we consider it nothing derogatory to his honour, that the Divine Being overrules the worst actions of men to promote his glory. The apostacy of our first parent was an evil of immense magnitude; yet, when the great scheme of redemption shall be completed, who shall say that the evil has not been overbalanced by that redemption? The crucifixion of Christ was a crime of the most fearful character; and yet out of that has arisen, through the operation of infinite wisdom, the salvation of mankind. "All things, therefore, work together for good;" but no thanks to the guilty agents. Thus, also, it was, in the conduct of Joseph's brethren, as himself afterwards told them, "Ye thought evil against me, but God meant it unto good." (Gen. l. 20.) Sin, so far as man is concerned in it, is "the abominable thing which God hateth," (Jer. xliv. 4;) yet may all the divine attributes be gloriously displayed in its subjection and counteraction, and in the infinite benefits which arise therefrom.

Yet, when all things are said to work together for good, we must inquire to whom they eventually do this? and the answer is to those "who are the called according to" God's eternal purpose." By "effectual calling," as divines call it, we understand the drawing of sinners to Christ by God the Father; (John vi. 44;) or, which is the same thing, their conversion by the Holy Spirit. We have said, these are the called according to God's eternal purpose, and so does the apostle, "for whom he foreknew he also did predestinate." That the Almighty does foreknow future events—all future events, and that to the infinite extent of his own existence, cannot be denied, without denying his omniscience; though, at the same time, to reconcile this with man's free-will, soas to silence all objections, is that to which we do not pretend; yea, it is that to which neither Milton was equal, nor yet his angels. This is one of the things which we "know not now," but probably may know hereafter. (John xiii. 7.)

We must carefully observe, however, the object of predestination, namely, that the elect may be conformed to the moral image of Christ; for that this, and not merely a conformity either in present sufferings or in future glory, is intended, is most evident from the comparison of other Scriptures, particularly from Ephes. i. 3, where the very end of their election is stated to be, "that they should be holy:" and thus St. Peter (1 Epis. i. 3) speaks of believers as "elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience," &c. And while this truth is borne in mind, namely, that holiness is the great end of election, this doctrine can surely do no harm; unless, indeed, any man should be so awfully perverse as to say, I will persevere in sin, because God has predestinated me to be holy! But predestination originates in foreknowledge; "whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate;" from which some have nastily inferred, that God predestinated those to holiness whom he fore saw would be holy, making their holiness the source of God's decree, instead of the reverse. It is true, indeed, as Mr. Cox observes, that "As knowledge frequently in the language of Scripture implies approbation, so fore-knowledge often includes the notion of love and favourable regard." (Rom. xi. 2. Amos iii. 2.) But thence to infer that our election originates in works foreseen, is to make our salvation not "of grace," as the Scriptures teach us, but of human merit, and the sinner the first moving cause in his own salvation.

Other divines, to avoid the doctrine of personal election, and its supposed consequences, have considered it in reference to the Jewish nation; but it would be as difficult to believe that the Almighty could foresee any thing in the Jewish nation to attract his love, as it would be to believe the same of any individual sinner: indeed, we shall find St. Paul, in our next chapter, (verse 11,) expressly arguing to the contrary. Besides, as Dr. Macknight remarks, (who was far enough from being a Calvinist,) as the foreknowledge here mentioned "is connected with sanctification, justification, and glorification, it must be a foreknowledge of individuals, as heirs of eternal life." We are therefore compelled to believe, that this predestination refers to God's unmerited love to sinners, whom he "predestinated to be conformed to the image of his Son," as is here said, and not in any foreseen resemblance which could occasion God's decree. We shall only here add, that, with the venerable Fathers of the church of England, we consider that "the godly consideration of predestination, and of our election in Christ, is full of sweet, pleasant, and unspeakable comfort to godly persons, and such as feel in themselves the working of the Spirit of Christ, mortifying the works of the flesh, and their earthly members, and drawing up their mind to high and heavenly things; as well as because it doth greatly establish and confirm their faith of eternal salvation to be enjoyed through Christ, as because it doth fervently kindle their hope towards God." But "for curious and carnal persons, lacking the Spirit of Christ, to have continually before their eyes the sentence of God's predestination, is a most dangerous downfall, whereby the devil doth thrust them into desperation, or into wretchlessness of most unclean living, no less perilous than desperation."

Ver. 31—39. The Christian triumph.—It should seem that the apostle Paul did not consider the Scripture doctrine of predestination in that alarming view that some modern divines

Ver. 27. He (the Holy Spirit) maketh intercession.—The word intercession seems to be used not only in the sense of pleading, or interceding, but Doddridge thinks it is here used in the sense of managing a person's affairs as their agent. So Schleusner, in allusion to this passage, says, "The phrase signifies either in a legal sense, to be the agent, attorney, or advocate in a cause; or, in common life, to interpose on another's behalf . . . . to assist, to aid."—Macknight's translation, "complaineth," relates to the same idea of agency: the attorney lodges complaints on the behalf of his clients.

Ver. 28. Work together for good.—When the Rev. Bernard Gilpin was on his way to London, to be tried before the Popish party, he broke his leg by a fall, which put a stop for some time to his journey. The person in whose custody he was, took occasion from this circumstance to retort upon him an observation he used frequently to make, "that nothing happens to us but what is intended for our good:" asking him, "Whether he thought his broken leg was so?" He answered meekly, "He made no question but it was." And, indeed, so it proved; for before he was able to travel, Queen Mary died. Being thus providentially rescued, he returned to Houghton through crowds of people, expressing the utmost joy, and blessing God for his deliverance.

Ver. 29. Foreknow.—To constitute or appoint beforehand—to fore-ordain. Rob. Wahl.—The first-born among many brethren.—See Ps. lxxxix. 27

Ver. 30. Them he also glorified.—The term sanctification being here omitted, though the doctrine is necessarily implied, some have supposed (as Barclay, for instance) that it must be included under justification: but we should rather include it under the last article, glorification, which is its completion since sanctification and glorification differ not in nature but in degree

Ver. 32. His own Son.—Macknight, "his proper Son;" the original being emphatic, corresponding with John v. 18.—For us all—i. e. as an atonement for the sins of men.

livered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?

33 Who [r] shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It [s] is God that justifieth.

34 Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us.

35 Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?

36 As it is [t] written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter.

37 Nay, in [u] all these things we are more than conquerors through him [v] that loved us.

38 For I am persuaded, that [w] neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come,

39 Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

have done; for no sooner has he stated it, than he bursts into the language of triumph and exultation, in "thoughts that breathe and words that burn."—"What, then, shall we say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?" The energy and rapidity with which he proceeds to the close of the chapter defies analysis, and would be injured by the tameness of paraphrase or exposition; we shall, therefore, only offer two or three cursory observations on particular passages.

1. The argument which our apostle derives from the love of the Father, and the incarnation and sufferings of the Son, to satisfy the believing Romans that they should be suffered to want nothing really necessary and good for them, is most forcible and conclusive. "Can he deny you any thing who has given his own Son for your redemption?" Can God, who justifies, become your accuser? Or shall the Judge condemn you that died for your redemption, and lives to intercede on your behalf. The very idea is infinitely absurd.

2. They are not only assured that they shall not be deserted by their heavenly Father, or their elder brother; but also that none of the evils of the present life, nor even the world of spirits, shall be able to separate them from God, or happiness, or heaven. On the contrary, we are assured that, in all these things, they shall be conquerors, and more than conquerors—they shall triumph over all their foes.

On this last expression we give the beautiful comment of an excellent practical writer. "In our patient bearing of the trials allotted to us, (says Dr. Evans,) we are not only conquerors, but more that conquerors, that is, triumphers. Those are more than conquerors that conquer with little loss. Many conquests are dear bought; but what do the suffering saints lose? That which the gold loses in the furnace—nothing but the dross.—They are more than conquerors whose rewards are exceedingly rich: glory, honour, and peace, a crown of righteousness that fadeth not away. In this the suffering saints have triumphed. . . . . As afflictions abound, consolations much more abound.

"There was one more than a conqueror when 'pressed above measure.' He that embraced the stake, and said, 'Welcome, the cross of Christ; welcome, everlasting life: he that dated his letter 'from the delectable orchard of the Leontine prison:' he that said, 'In these flames I feel no more pain than if I was on a bed of down:' she that, a little before her martyrdom, being asked how she did, said, 'Well and merry, and going to heaven:' those who have gone smiling to the stake, and stood singing in the flames—these were more than conquerors."

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1—16. Paul's deep concern for the salvation of his countrymen:—believers Abraham's true seed.—In the opening of this chapter all commentators are agreed that the apostle meant to express, in the strongest terms, his attachment to his Jewish brethren, though they are much divided in their interpretations of his phraseology. We shall mention here only two or three of them, which we consider as the most probable.

Dr. John Edwards, taking the words as they lie in our translation, thus paraphrases them: "For such is my affection, that, if it were lawful and consistent, I could wish that I myself were anathema, that is, separated from Christ, (so Marg.;) or (after his example) subjected to all temporal miseries, or even eternal, for the salvation of my brethren." This, however, must be considered as a strong hyperbole; for surely nothing could reconcile Paul to the idea of eternal separation from his Lord and Master. (See on Exod. xxxii. 33.) Others, therefore, confine the anathema to temporal calamities united with ecclesiastical excommunication, a punishment which the Jews considered in a light so serious, that their relations fasted and went into mourning for them. (Orient. Lit. No. 1464.) Many, however, render the words more literally, and, by enclosing part of them in a parenthesis, read the passage thus—"I have . . . . continual sorrow in my heart (for I once did wish myself anathema from Christ) for my brethren, my kinsmen," &c., thus making the recollection of his past state before conversion, when he gloried in his opposition to Christ, and probably imprecated on himself the most dreadful curses if ever he should believe in him, the ground both of his distress and of his supplications on their behalf.

St. Paul now enumerates the peculiar privileges of the Hebrews, (more fully than in chap. iii.,) among which he reckons the shechinah, or the glory which attended the tabernacle and temple in ancient time, but of which they had long since been deprived by their sins; and crowns the climax by a reference to the Messiah, as descended from their fathers: "Of (or from) whom Christ came, (or descended,) who is over all, God blessed for ever: Amen." In this his object appears to be, to turn their attention from the crucified Nazarene, whom they despised, to the exalted Saviour whom he adored, and recommended to their faith.

Ver. 33. Who shall lay any thing, &c.—Doddridge, "Who shall lodge any accusation against," &c. —It is God.—Dr. S. Harris (who is followed by Doddridge, Newcome, Boothroyd, &c.) renders the whole of this and the following verse interrogatively, as follows—"Who shall lodge any accusation against the elect of God? Shall God who justifieth? Who is he that condemneth? Shall Christ who died?" &c.

Ver. 37. More than conquerors—i. e. we enjoy a triumph, with which none but conquerors of the first class were honoured. The following passage has been quoted from Demosthenes, (De Corona, § 92,) as somewhat parallel with this of St. Paul, ver. 38. "As for me," says Demosthenes, "neither tempting opportunity, nor insinuating speech, nor great promises, nor hope, nor fear, nor favour, nor any other thing, has ever induced me to betray my country, or to forbear doing what I thought would contribute to its advancement and honour."

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1. I say the truth in Christ—i. e. I speak as a Christian, and as an apostle of Christ. But Smith explains this as an appeal to Christ in the nature of an oath.

Ver. 3. I could wish—i. e. "if it were lawful and consistent," says Edwards, "supposing the indicative to be here used for the optative, of which there are some examples. Waterland, who is followed by Doddridge, approves this, but instead of rendering the Greek preposition (apo) "from," renders it, "after the example of Christ;" for which, however, we think 1 Tim. i. 3 (the only text cited) very insufficient authority. Taking the words in the indicative, we may remark, that the verb (eucomai) is used for to wish, desire, pray, vow, and even glory; (see Jones's Lex.;) all which apply to St. Paul's state of enmity to Christ prior to his conversion, when he gloried in his opposition to our Saviour. See an elaborate article in defence of this interpretation in the Edinburgh Christian Instructor for April, 1815.

Ver. 4. To whom pertaineth.—Doddridge, "Whose (is) the adoption;" that is, the privilege of being reckoned the children of Abraham and of God.—The glory—i. e. the shechinah, or pillar of light and fire, which resided first on the tabernacle, and afterwards in the temple.—The service of God.—Doddridge, "the (temple) service."

Ver. 5. As concerning the flesh.—Greek, "According to the flesh." See chap. i. 3. For a full and able defence of this passage against the Unitarians, see Smith's Messiah, vol. ii.

Ver. 6. Not as though, &c.—That is, "I speak not as though," &c. Macknight, "Now it is not possible that the promise of God hath fallen." It is a metaphor taken from ships missing their port, &c.

Ver. 7. Neither because they are the seed, &c. Compare chap. iv. 12, 16.

purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth;)

12 It was said unto her, The [s] elder shall serve the [t] younger.

13 As it is [u] written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated.

14 What shall we say then? Is [v] there unrighteousness with God? God forbid.

15 For he saith to Moses, I [w] will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion.

16 So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy.

17 For the scripture saith [x] unto Pharaoh, Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might show my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth.

18 Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will, have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth.

19 Thou wilt say then unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? for who [y] hath resisted his will?

20 Nay but, O man, who art thou that [z] repliest against God? Shall [a] the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?

21 Hath not the potter [b] power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honour, and another unto dishonour?

22 What [c] if God, willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering the vessels [d] of wrath [e] fitted to destruction:

23 And that he might make known the riches [f] of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which [g] he had afore prepared unto glory,

24 Even us, whom he hath called, not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles?

25 As he saith also in Osee, [h] I will call them my people, which were not my people; and her beloved, which was not beloved.

26 And [i] it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people; there shall they be called the children of the living God.

27 Esaias also [j] crieth concerning Israel, Though the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, a remnant shall be saved:

28 For he will finish [k] the work, and cut it short in righteousness: because [l] a short work will the Lord make upon the earth.

29 And as Esaias said before, [m] Except the Lord of Sabaoth had left us a seed, we [n] had been as Sodoma, and been made like unto Gomorrah.

The inspired writer now returns to his former topic, chap. iii. 3. "What (said he) if some did not believe, shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect?" So here, "Now it is not possible that the word of God should have failed" of its effect; but "they are not all Israel," in the true sense of the word, that are of the posterity of Jacob; nor "because they are the seed of Abraham, are they therefore all children" of the promise, for the promise was limited to the seed of Isaac, saying, "in Isaac shall thy seed be called." And, again, when Isaac had two children, the younger was preferred: "Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated." We have, however, before had occasion to observe, on Luke xiv. 26, that the term hate is not always to be taken absolutely, for no man is bound "to hate his own flesh;" but the text before us is quoted from Mal. i. 3, where it evidently means that God loved Jacob in a sense in which he did not love Esau; and gave to his posterity the land of Canaan, with many privileges that were given to no other nation. And this preference of Jacob to Esau, was declared before the birth of either, that it might not be supposed dependent on the conduct of the individual; but the result of mere favour. This instance of the divine conduct is here given to show, that neither the blessings of providence nor grace are given in consideration of human merit; but according to his own words, "I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy." So God bestows or withholds his favours as he thinks proper; and salvation is "not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth;" that is, the blessings of providence, and, by analogy, those of grace also, depend not on man, but on God only. To apply this doctrine to the argument before us, the dispensation of the gospel was given neither to Jews nor Gentiles under any consideration of their merits or deservings; but merely because such was the good pleasure of God, who claims the right to confer his blessings as he pleases.

Ver. 17—33. God's judgments on Pharaoh and the unbelieving Jews, and his mercy to the Gentiles.—Another case, of a nature somewhat different, is now brought forward in the person of Pharaoh, king of Egypt. There were possibly other kings as wicked as Pharaoh, and equally meriting the divine displeasure; but as Jehovah had selected Jacob to display his gratuitous mercy to himself and his posterity, so Pharaoh was raised up by the Almighty, in order to display in him the divine power as superior to the highest throne on earth, and the divine wisdom as confounding even that of Egypt: that thus the name of Jehovah might be "declared throughout all the (then known habitable) earth." And comparing this instance with that of Jacob above mentioned, in the one, (Jacob,) the God of Israel exhibited his sovereignty in showing mercy to whom he pleased, and preparing him as a vessel of mercy for his glory; and in the other, (Pharaoh,) by making his power known, after much long-suffering, in executing his wrath on those who had previously fitted themselves for destruction, as was the case with Pharaoh.

It is indeed said of the Lord, in verse 18, that "whom he will he hardeneth; and in the history of Pharaoh, it is repeatedly remarked, (in Exodus, ch. ix. 12; x. 1, &c.,) that the Lord "hardened Pharaoh's heart." In addition to what we have there remarked on this event, we now add the following observations from the late judicious Mr. Fuller. "God is said to do that which is done upon the minds of men by the ordinary influence of second causes, which causes would not have been productive of such effects but for their depravity. The hardness of clay, no less than the softness of wax, is ascribed to the sun; yet the sun's producing either of these effects is entirely owing to the qualities of the object on which it shines. God hardened the heart of Pharaoh, by so ordering things in his providence, that certain considerations should present themselves to his mind when under certain circumstances, and which (he being righteously given up of God) would be certain to provoke his pride and resentment, and to determine him to run all risks, for the sake of having his will. In other words, God led him into temptation, and there, in just judgment, left him to its influence."

But here arises an objection—If God hardens the hearts of sinners, "Why doth he yet find fault?"—"The apostle had justly concluded (says Cox) that God might bestow his favours on whom and according to what terms he judged fit, and permit those who rejected such terms to be hardened. A caviller might, however, object that the continuance of the Jews in a state of disobedience, was the consequence of the determination of God to leave them to themselves; and hence might arrogantly demand, How God could still find fault with them? To such an objector the apostle indignantly rejoins. 'Nay, but, O man, who art thou,' with all thy imagined wisdom and discernment, 'who enterest into a debate with God?' If God for a season spare wicked persons, who, by filling up the measure of their iniquities, have fitted themselves for destruction, that he may deduce greater good for those who, by his grace are prepared for glory, viz. for the believing Gentiles, as well as for the remnant of believers among the Jews,—have the repudiated Jews any reason to complain? May not a sovereign, without injustice, delay the execution of a criminal, if such delay appear to him likely to be beneficial to his obedient subjects, and calculated to subserve some important purpose for the welfare of his kingdom in general? God had thus acted in the case of Pharaoh, and He was about to do the same in the case of the Jews. The apostle then shows that the calling of the Gentiles in general, and the rejection of many of the Jews for their unbelief, had been plainly predicted by the prophets, so that any objections which the Jews might raise against the equity of the divine proceedings, in these respects, would at once be futile and anti-scriptural."

Some learned men, indeed, wish to confine all that is here said to the dealings of Providence with nations only, on which Scott remarks—"It is wonderful that the great Locke should confidently assert, that the apostle here speaks of men nationally and not personally, in reference to their eternal estate; when the rejection of the Jewish nation, with the reservation of 'a remnant, according to the election of grace,' was the

Ver. 21. Hath not the potter.—Doddridge remarks, that Plutarch has used the same similitude. But see Jer. xviii. 6.

Ver. 22. What if God, &c.—"This (says Pres. Edwards) is spoken of as the end of the day of judgment, which is the time appointed for the highest exercises of God's authority as moral governor of the world, and is the day of the consummation of God's moral government with respect to all his subjects in heaven, earth, or hell."——Fitted.—The original, being in the middle voice, implies, that they fitted themselves.—Macknight. [The Apostle, by employing the appellation of the vessels of wrath, carries on the similitude of the potter, by which he had illustrated the sovereignty of God.]—Bagster.

30 What shall we say then? That [o] the Gentiles, which followed not after righteousness, have attained to righteousness, even the righteousness [p] which is of faith.

31 But Israel, which [q] followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness.

32 Wherefore? Because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law. For they stumbled at that stumbling-stone;

33 As it is written, [r] Behold, I lay in Sion a stumbling-stone and rock of offence: and whosoever believeth on him shall not be [s] ashamed.

CHAPTER X.

5 The scripture showeth the difference betwixt the righteousness of the law, and this of faith, 11 and that all, both Jew and Gentile, that believe, shall not be confounded, 14 and that the Gentiles shall receive the word and believe. 19 Israel was not ignorant of these things.

BRETHREN, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved.

2 For I bear them record that they have a zeal [a] of God, but not according to knowledge.

3 For they being ignorant [b] of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God.

4 For Christ is the end [c] of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth.

5 For Moses describeth [d] the righteousness which is of the law, That the man which doeth those things shall live by them.

6 But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, Say [e] not in thy heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? (that is, to bring Christ down from above:)

7 Or, Who shall descend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead.)

8 But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith which we preach;

9 That if [f] thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thy heart [g] that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved.

10 For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation.

11 For the scripture saith, [h] Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed.

12 For [i] there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for [j] the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him.

13 For [k] whosoever shall call [l] upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.

14 How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?

15 And how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, [m] How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!

16 But [n] they have not all obeyed the gospel. For Esaias saith, [o] Lord, who hath believed [p] our [q] report?

17 So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

18 But I say, Have they not heard? Yes verily, their [r] sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world.

19 But I say, Did not Israel know? First Moses saith, [s] I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish [t] nation I will anger you.

apostle's main subject, to illustrate which all the other examples are introduced. This remnant consisted of a small number of individuals, not of a nation; and the Gentile converts were individuals out of their several nations, forming, with the Jewish converts, the Christian church: and not whole nations, or one whole nation, chosen, as a collective body, to succeed to the external advantages, which the nation of Israel had forfeited: and surely 'the vessels of mercy before prepared unto glory,' which the apostle next mentions, must have been chosen, not to external advantages, but to eternal life."

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—21. Paul farther distinguishes between the law and the gospel, and shows that the call of the Gentiles had been foretold.—It has been said that the doctrine of predestination has a tendency to harden the heart against feelings of tenderness for our fellow sinners; and to render persons indifferent to their salvation, under the suspicion of their not being elected. But with God's secret will we have really no concern: "the things that are revealed belong to us and to our children for ever," and our only concern with them is, to believe and to obey them: "to do all the words" of God's blessed book. (See Deut. xxix. 29.) Among those precepts, some of the first and most important are, to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ ourselves, and to recommend faith in him and obedience to his will, so far as our means extend, to all our fellow sinners. And without attempting any invidious comparison, it cannot be denied that many predestinarians rank among the most zealous and active propagators of the gospel. St. Paul himself, who had written more in the support of this truth than all the other writers of the New Testament, was certainly not exceeded by any of them in the zeal with which he sought the conversion of both Jews and Gentiles; and "his heart's desire and prayer to God" for both was, "that they might be saved."

But it is to the former class that the apostle chiefly addresses himself in this and the following chapters, bearing them record "that they had a zeal for God," that is, for their religion; but it was "not according to knowledge." They were ignorant even of the great and important doctrine of justification, and being ignorant of God's righteousness, that is, the righteousness which he had provided in his Son, they went about seeking to establish their own righteousness; whereas he assures them that "Christ is the end of the law;" as in him was exhibited the perfection of the moral law, and the fulfilment of the ceremonial.

In what follows, the apostle refers to the farewell discourse of Moses to the Israelites, in which he speaks of the laws which he had delivered, as not so high that they must be again fetched from heaven, as at Sinai; nor so foreign and obscure that the deep must be fathomed for them; but as brought near, that is, rendered easy and familiar to them: so God had "brought near his righteousness for their salvation." (Isa. xlvi. 13.) After exhibiting it in the types and figures of the law at a distance, he had now, in the gospel, applied it home to their hearts and consciences, saying, "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thy heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." Knowledge is, however, necessary, previous to faith; it is necessary, therefore, that the gospel should be preached to both Jews and Gentiles; and those who feel their need of it, and its suitableness to their necessities, will hail it with a hearty welcome, and say, with the prophet Isaiah, (chap. lii. 7,) "How beautiful are the feet of them that publish it!" But this is no-

Ver. 30. Which followed not after.—The terms here used are agonistical. To "follow after," or pursue, was to engage in the races—to attain, was to gain the prize, which was righteousness, or justification; which the unbelieving Jews lost by stumbling, verse 32.

CHAP. X. Ver. 2. For I bear, &c.—By this fine apology for the Jews, the Apostle prepares them for the harsher truths which he was about to deliver.

Ver. 6. Say not in thy heart.—[The Apostle here takes the general sentiment, and expresses it in his own language; beautifully accommodating what Moses says of the law to his present purpose.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Into the deep—(Greek, abyss.) Campbell refers it to hades, the world of spirits. Bishop Louth thinks that Moses here alludes to a custom of the Egyptians, who buried their dead on the other side of a lake, in what they called "the isles of the blessed."

CHAPTER XI.

1 God hath not cast off all Israel. 7 Some were elected, though the rest were hardened. 16 There is hope of their conversion. 18 The Gentiles must not insult upon them. 25 for there is a promise of their salvation. 33 God's judgments are unsearchable.

I SAY then, Hath [a] God cast away his people? God forbid. For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin.

2 God hath not cast away his people which he [b] foreknew. Wot ye not what the scripture saith [c] of Elias? how he maketh intercession to God against Israel, [d] saying,

3 Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars; and I am left alone, and they seek my life.

4 But what saith the answer of God unto him? I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal.

5 Even [e] so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace.

6 And if by [f] grace, then is it no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace: otherwise work is no more work.

7 What then? Israel [g] hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were [h] blinded.

8 (According as it is written, God hath given them the spirit of [i] slumber, [k] eyes that they should not see, and ears that they should not hear;) unto this day.

9 And David saith, Let [l] their table be made a snare, and a trap, and a stumbling-block, and a recompense unto them:

10 Let their eyes be darkened, that they may not see, and bow down their back alway.

11 I say then, Have they stumbled that they should fall? God forbid: but rather through their fall salvation is come unto the [m] Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealousy.

12 Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the [n] diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles; how much more their fulness?

13 For I speak to you Gentiles, inasmuch as I [o] am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office:

14 If by any means I may provoke to emulation them which are my flesh, and might save [p] some of them.

15 For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?

16 For if [q] the first-fruit be holy, the lump is also holy: and if the root be holy, so are the branches.

17 And if some of the branches [r] be broken the case with all. Many will reject and despise the messengers of mercy, as the prophet himself foresaw, when he exclaimed, "Who hath believed our report?" &c. (See Isaiah liii. 1, and expositon.)

From the preceding premises the apostle draws this general inference, that "faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God;" that word, that is, the gospel, must therefore be universally promulgated, like the sunbeams which shine from east to west and from one extremity of the world to the other: and has not this been accomplished? Even at the time when the apostle wrote, he and his colleagues had been employed nearly thirty years in preaching; and churches had been founded not only in Jerusalem and Judea, but at Rome, Corinth, Ephesus, and in most parts of the Roman empire; so that, in his Epistle to the Colossians, not long after this, he tells them, as he does the Romans here, that it had spread into all the world, (Col. i. 6,) meaning (of course) so far as it was then known.

Nor were the Jews themselves unapprized of this, since it was foretold by Moses and the prophets in several passages here referred to; though it must be confessed that they showed the greatest obstinacy in refusing to believe or to understand it, even such of them as had been converted to Christianity.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1—15. The Jews not finally cast off by God; but a remnant of them shall be saved, together with the Gentiles.—Locke gives us the subject of this interesting chapter in the few following lines:—"St. Paul, in this chapter, goes on to show the future state of the Jews and Gentiles, as to Christianity, viz. that though the Jews were, for their unbelief, rejected, and the Gentiles taken in their room to be the people of God, yet there was a few of the Jews that believed in Christ, and so a small 'remnant' of them continued to be God's people, being incorporated with the converted Gentiles into the Christian church. But when the fulness of the Gentiles is come in, (see verses 25, 26,) the whole nation of them [as this ingenious commentator thinks] shall be converted to the gospel, and again be restored to be the people of God."

Some have, indeed, supposed that what is said by Paul, both here and elsewhere, of the conversion of the Jews, might relate to those converted in the first propagation of the gospel; but it is an important observation of Dr. W. Harris, that this Epistle was written, as above remarked, about thirty years after that event. And supposing it to have reference to some future time, no event has since occurred which can reasonably be considered as its fulfilment.

But let us examine Paul's own statement.—That God had finally and totally rejected his beloved nation, is a proposition of which the apostle refuses for a moment to admit the thought—"God forbid!" In former instances, indeed, when Israel fell into idolatry, they were sent into captivity and bondage for a certain time, but restored on their repentance: now they have rejected the Messiah, such a crime cannot be less severely punished, but demands far heavier judgments. Then they were sent to Egypt or to Babylon; now they shall be scattered over the face of the whole earth: still, however, while on earth, they are not beyond the reach of mercy. In the first place we see, as in former instances of apostacy from God, even now (that is, in the apostolic age) there is a considerable "remnant" saved, "according to the election" of grace, as had formerly been the case in the Babylonish captivity. (Isa. x. 21, 22.) And, at a future period, when "the fulness of the Gentiles shall be brought in," then the body of the Jews, as a nation, shall be converted also, and thus, "all Israel shall be saved."

The strain of the apostle's reasoning in this chapter is, by Dr. Macknight, thus elucidated:—"Our Lord having declared to the chief priests and elders, ... that the kingdom of God was to be taken from them and given unto the Gentiles, (Mat. xxi. 43; xxii. 7, &c.,) we cannot think the Christian preachers would conceal these things from their unbelieving brethren. Stephen seems to have spoken of them, Acts v. 13, and Paul often. . . . . Wherefore that the foreknowledge of the evils which were coming on their brethren might not affect the Jewish Christians too much, the apostle, in this chapter, comforted them that they were not to be total . . [nor] final, but for a limited time only, to make way for the entering of the Gentiles into the church, by whose reception the Jews at last will be provoked to emulate them, and will receive the gospel. (Ver. 11—16.")

Dr. Macknight here evidently considers the conversion of the Gentiles, when that shall be accomplished in its full extent, as a powerful means of converting the Jews; on the other hand, many consider the conversion of the Jewish nation to Christianity as a no less effective instrument for the conversion of the Gentiles. The controversy is needless and unprofitable. It is highly probable these events may be, in a great measure, coincident. When it shall please God to "pour out his Spirit from on high," the infidelity of both must yield to the invincible efficacy of his grace. When the Jews shall witness the conversion of the Gentile nations among whom they reside, especially the Hindoos, the Chinese, and the Mahometans, it must naturally lead them to reflections on their own infidelity, and may be the means of bringing them to Christ; at the same time there can be no doubt but that the conversion of the Jews, in a body, to Christianity, must, with the divine blessing, have a like influence on the heathen, nominal Christians, and avowed infidels. (See exposition of Ezek. xxxvi. latter part.)

Ver. 16—36. Gentiles cautioned against insulting the Jews; and both called upon to admire and adore the mysteries of grace and providence.—If the branches of Abraham's generous olive-tree be broken off, and Gentile nations, who were like the boughs of the wild olive, grafted in, then ought the 18 Boast [u] not against the branches. But if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee.

19 Thou wilt say then, The branches were broken off, that I might be graffed in.

20 Well; because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not high-minded, but [v] fear:

21 For if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee.

22 Behold therefore the goodness and severity of God: on them which fell, severity; but toward thee, goodness, [w] if thou continue in his goodness: otherwise thou [x] also shalt be cut off.

23 And they also, if [y] they abide not in unbelief, shall be graffed in: for God is able to graff them in again.

24 For if thou wert cut out of the olive tree which is wild by nature, and wert graffed contrary to nature into a good olive tree: how much more shall these, which be the natural branches, be graffed into their own olive tree?

25 For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that [z] blindness in part [a] is happened to Israel, until the fulness [b] of the Gentiles be come in.

26 And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, [c] There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob:

27 For [d] this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins.

29 For the gifts and calling of God are without [f] repentance.

30 For as ye in times [g] past have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief:

31 Even so have these also now not [h] believed, that through your mercy they also may obtain mercy.

32 For God [i] hath [j] concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all.

CHAPTER XII.

1 God's mercies must move us to please God. 3 No man must think too well of himself, 6 but attend every one on that calling wherein he is placed. 9 Love, and many other duties, are required of us. 19 Revenge is specially forbidden.

I BESEECH you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies [a] a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service.

2 And [b] be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your latter to be doubly careful lest they should provoke the Almighty, by their infidelity, in like manner to reject them. Indeed, the calamities which, but a few years since, had nearly overwhelmed the French nation, ought to be a warning to others against imbibing their infidel principles, which are now rapidly spreading in the countries round them; but to which there is happily a great counteraction in the erection of Bible, missionary, and other religious societies on the Continent; and it is to such institutions that we look, in God's good time, for the introduction of the glorious period of the Millennium. In the mean time, let us pray that God may not give to those nations "the spirit of slumber," lest they dream away the opportunities of mercy thus afforded them.

But, to return to the text before us, we find the apostle concludes all the great doctrinal truths which he had advanced, with this solemn warning to us Gentile Christians—"Boast not against the [original] branches" of God's church, namely, the Jews: "but, if thou dost boast, [remember,] thou bearest not the root, but the root thee." And if "Thou wilt say, The [natural] branches were broken off, [namely, the Jews,] that I might be graffed in, Well! [remember] because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not, therefore, high minded, but fear, ... lest he also spare not thee. Behold, therefore, [and at once consider,] the goodness and severity of God!"

The apostle then compares the calling of the Gentiles, as founded on the rejection of the Jews, to the grafting of the branches of the wild olive into a good and fruitful olive-tree: a practice contrary to nature, and what is never done by man, though the opposite is not uncommon. But "God's ways are not our ways:" He can control nature, and command fertility. The apostle concludes this interesting discourse with observing, that Jews and Gentiles, in their turn, having been disobedient to God, he hath locked them all up as condemned criminals, that he might, in one and the same manner, have mercy on all, by making them his people, and bestowing on them, from mere favour, the blessings promised in the covenant with Abraham. (Ver. 30—32.) And being deeply affected with the survey which he had taken of God's dealings with mankind, he cried out, as ravished with the grandeur of the view, O the riches both of the wisdom and of the knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out! (Ver. 33, 34, 35,)

"In this sublime manner hath the apostle finished his discourse concerning the dispensations of religion which have taken place in the different ages of the world. And from his account it appears that these dispensations were adapted to the then circumstances of mankind; that they are parts of a grand design, formed by God, for delivering the human race from the evil consequences of sin, and for exalting them to the highest perfection of which their nature is capable; and that, both in its progress and its accomplishment, the scheme of man's salvation contributes to the establishment of God's moral government, and to the displaying of his perfections in all their lustre to the whole intelligent creation." (Macknight.)

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1—21. A practical exhortation to devotedness to God.—"The nature and excellency of the gospel having been fully developed, (says Cox,) the apostle labours to persuade all professing Christians [and especially true believers] to act in a manner suitable to their high vocation. For this purpose he commences by urging upon them the necessity of an entire consecration of themselves to God, and an earnest endeavour to glorify him in their respective stations. I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy [and] acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service. The terms here used are sacrificial, and forcibly intimate that, as under the Old Testament dispensation, the burnt-offerings were wholly the Lord's property, so Christians are required to give up themselves entirely to the service of God." And this service is most reasonable, both in itself and as compared with other forms of worship. It is reasonable in itself, because thereby we render nothing to God but what we have received from him, "our life, our soul, our all:" and because we are gainers by the surrender; for, in giving up ourselves to him as a faithful Creator and as a merciful Redeemer, we know that he will preserve us to that great day, when he will receive his chosen into everlasting felicity. (2 Tim. i. 12.)—Viewed comparatively, it is also not only infinitely more reasonable than any of the Pagan superstitions, but also far preferable to the carnal services of the Jews, which, indeed, owed all their excellency to a prospective reference to Christianity.

The first thing here recommended is Devotion—and "Devotion (as Law justly observes) signifies a life given, or devoted to God. He, therefore, is the devout man, who lives no longer to his own will, or the way and spirit of the world, but to the sole will of God: who considers God in every thing, who serves God in every thing, who makes all the parts of his common life parts of piety, by doing every thing in the name of God, and under such rules as are conformable to his glory."

mind, that ye may prove [c] what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God.

3 For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly [d] than he ought to think; but to think [e] soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure [f] of faith.

4 For as we have many [g] members in one body, and all members have not the same office:

5 So we, being many, are one body [h] in Christ, and every one members one of another.

6 Having then gifts differing [i] according to the grace that is given to us, whether prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith;

7 Or ministry, let us wait on our ministering: or he that teacheth, on teaching;

8 Or he that exhorteth, on exhortation: he that [j] giveth, let him do it [k] with simplicity; he that ruleth, with diligence; he that showeth mercy, with [m] cheerfulness.

9 Let love be without [n] dissimulation. Abhor [o] that which is evil; cleave to that which is good.

10 Be kindly [p] affectioned one to another [q] with brotherly love; in honour preferring one [r] another;

11 Not slothful in [s] business; [t] fervent in spirit; serving [u] the Lord;

12 Rejoicing [v] in hope; patient [w] in tribulation; continuing [x] instant in prayer;

13 [y] Distributing to the necessity of saints; given to [z] hospitality.

14 Bless [a] them which persecute you: bless, and curse not.

15 Rejoice [b] with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep.

16 Be [c] of the same mind one toward another. Mind [d] not high things, but [e] condescend to men of low estate. [f] Be not wise in your own conceits.

17 Recompense [g] to no man evil for evil. Provide [h] things honest in the sight of all men.

18 If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably [i] with all men.

19 Dearly beloved, avenge [j] not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, [k] Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord.

20 Therefore if [l] thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head.

21 Be [m] not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 Subjection, and many other duties, we owe to the magistrates. 8 Love is the fulfilling of the law. 11 Gluttony and drunkenness, and the works of darkness, are out of season in the time of the gospel.

LET every soul be subject [a] unto the higher powers. For there [b] is no power but of God: the powers that be are [c] ordained of God.

2 Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation.

3 For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? do [d] that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same:

4 For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil.

5 Wherefore [e] ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience' sake.

6 For, for this cause pay ye tribute also: for they ar[e] God's ministers, attending continually upon t[h]is very thing.

7 Render therefore to all [f] their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom cus-

The first instance required of devotedness to God, is nonconformity to the world—its pleasures, its hopes, and its pursuits: and it is only by a "transformation"—not conforming to the world, but under the temper and spirit of Christ Jesus, that we can possibly prove by our own experience what really is the good, acceptable, and perfect will of God. And so far is this devotedness of heart from implying a neglect or contempt of moral duties, that it is, in fact, the only source from which they can arise, so as to be acceptable to God: for when moral, or even religious duties are performed from motives of ostentation, to excite the praise of men; or from views of merit in them, and with the mercenary hope of reward, they are so far from being acceptable to God, that they are abhorred by him. Such good works as these constituted the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees; and except our righteousness be of a nature far superior to theirs, our Lord himself assures us there is no hope of our acceptance—we "shall in no case enter the kingdom of heaven." (Mat. v. 20.)

The duties principally here enjoined are humility, and especially a low and modest estimation of our spiritual gifts and graces: (ver. 3—8:) sincere and intense affection to the brethren: vigour, and activity, and fervent zeal in the service of Christ: Christian sympathy and charity to the afflicted and necessitous: and that duty which is the peculiar glory of Christianity, however despicable it may appear to carnal men the rendering good for evil.

> "Tender and kind be all our thoughts;
> Through all our lives let mercy run:
> So God forgives our numerous faults,
> For the dear sake of Christ, his Son."—Watts.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—14. St. Paul enforces obedience to civil authorities, and to all their just dues.—We agree with the venerable and pious Mrs. Hannah More, that "the gospel was never intended to dissolve the ancient ties between sovereign and subject, master and servant, parent and child; but rather to draw them closer, to strengthen a natural by a lawful and moral obligation. As the charge of disaffection was from the first most injurious to the religion of Jesus, it is obvious why the Apostle [Paul] was so frequent and so earnest in vindicating it from this calumny. It is apparent from every part of the New Testament, that our Lord never intended to introduce any change into the civil government of Judea, where he preached, nor into any part of the world to which his religion might extend. As his object was of a nature specifically different, his discourses were always directed to that other object. His politics were uniformly conversant about his own kingdom, which was not of this world. If he spake of human governments at all, it was only incidentally, as cir-

Ver. 2. That ye may prove.—Doddridge, "Experimentally know."

Ver. 3. The measure of faith.—This refers, perhaps, to the faith by which they were enabled to work miracles.

Ver. 6. Prophecy.—Preaching by inspiration, whether in the way of prediction, or otherwise.——According to the proportion of faith.—"If we suppose the prophetic gift to be given in proportion to the exercise of faith, i. e. dependance on God . . . . we have, I think, the clearest explication the phrase will admit."—Doddridge.

Ver. 7. Ministry.—Literally, "deaconship." The sense appears to us to be, that all the servants of Christ were to exert themselves to the utmost, in their different lines of duty, whether in public or in private—whether as inspired or uninspired teachers, catechisers, or Scripture readers—all were to do their best. So Mr. Cox.

Ver. 8. He that ruleth—Or "presideth," as Doddridge renders it after Lord Barrington; but as the same word is in the last chapter (verse 2) applied to Phebe, it probably means a person taking the lead in any department, either of ministerial duty or Christian charity. But see ch. xvi. 1.

Ver. 10. Be kindly affectioned.—The original term, philostorgos, Mr. Cox observes, "is exceedingly expressive; philos, signifying delight in a thing, and storge, that tender affection which mothers naturally bear to their own offspring."

Ver. 13. Given to hospitality.—This was a virtue of primary importance in the East, where there are few public inns; and at this time, as Doddridge observes, it was peculiarly important, as Christians were persecuted both by Jews and heathens.

Ver. 16. Be of the same mind.—Cox, "be united in affection to each other."

Ver. 17. Provide things honest.—Gr. Kala, good, useful, profitable.—Parkhurst.

Ver. 19. Give place unto wrath—i. e. submit, and do not return it. Leave that to him who hath said—Vengeance is mine.—Vengeance here means retributive justice, as chap. iii. 5.

Ver. 20. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him.—Prov. xxv. 21, 22.——Thou shalt heap coals of fire, &c.—The expression here quoted from Solomon, refers to the method adopted in melting and purifying certain metals: and is generally explained to imply, that the enemy shall by such means be melted down; but Dr. Whitby explains it to import, rather, that by such means the Almighty will be engaged to take the sufferer's part. See Ps. cxl. 9, 10.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1. The higher powers—i. e. "the supreme authority," whether it be vested in the people, or the nobles, or the sovereign, or be shared among these three orders, or whatever form of government may be established.—Macknight.—No power but of God—i. e. derived from him, and ordained by him.

Ver. 2. They that resist—Namely, the lawful exercise of authority, of whatever nature the government may be.——Shall receive . . . damnation.—(Gr. krima.) Doddridge and Cox, "Condemnation." Macknight, "Punishment." Boothroyd, "Judgment."

Ver. 3. Rulers are not a terror—i. e. such is not the design for which they are appointed.

Ver. 4. A revenger.—Doddridge, "An avenger."

Ver. 6. Upon this very thing.—Doddridge. "To this one affair."

tom; fear to whom fear; honour to whom honour.

8 Owe no man any thing, but to love one another: for [g] he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law.

9 For this, Thou [h] shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, [i] Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

10 Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law.

11 And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake [j] out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed.

12 The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us [k] therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put [l] on the armour of light.

13 Let us walk [m] [n] honestly, as in the day; not in [o] rioting and drunkenness, not in [p] chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying.

14 But put [q] ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make [r] not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof.

CHAPTER XIV.

1 Men may not contemn nor condemn one the other for things indifferent: 13 but take heed that they give no offence in them: 15 for that the apostle proveth unlawful by many reasons.

HIM that is weak in the faith receive ye, but [a] not to doubtful disputations.

2 For one believeth that he may eat all things: another, who is weak, eateth herbs.

3 Let not him that eateth despise him that eateth not; and let not him which eateth not judge him that eateth: for God hath received him.

4 Who [b] art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth. Yea, he shall be holden up: for God [c] is able to make him stand.

5 One [d] man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be [e] fully persuaded in his own mind.

6 He that [f] regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it. He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for he giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God thanks.

7 For [g] none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself.

8 For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's.

9 For [h] to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living.

10 But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? for we shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ.

11 For it is written, As [i] I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God.

12 So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God.

13 Let us not therefore judge one another any cumstances occurred, and as it gave him occasion to display or enforce some act of obedience. He discreetly entangled the Pharisees in the insidious net which they had spread for him, by directing, in answer to their ensnaring question, that the things which belonged even to their sovereign whom they detested [the Roman emperor] should be rendered to him.

"St. Paul exhibited at once a striking proof of the soundness of his own principles, and of the peaceable character of Christianity, in his full and explicit exposition of the allegiance due to the ruling powers. It is observable, that in the very short period from the origin of Christianity, under Augustus, to the time at which St. Paul wrote, there were four successive Roman emperors, each of whom was worse than the preceding, as if it had been providentially so determined, as a test of the meek and quiet spirit of Christianity, whose followers never manifested resistance to any of these oppressive masters. St. Paul knew how to unite a respect for the government with a just abhorrence of the vices of the governor." In this instance, Mrs. More farther remarks, no governor is named; and as the Roman emperor and senate did not always act in concurrence, with his usual exquisite prudence, in addressing the people of Rome, Paul makes choice of an ambiguous expression, "the higher powers, without specifically determining what those powers were."

In citing these remarks from Mrs. More, we would add with her, that "we are not advocating the cause of passive obedience;" for it would be quite inconsistent with the mild and peaceable spirit of Christianity, to advocate the cause of arbitrary power in a land of liberty, as ours happily is.

Our obedience, therefore, while nothing contrary to our consciences is enforced, ought to be voluntary, cheerful, and uniform; and as St. Paul, as well as his Divine Master, enjoins the paying tribute to Cesar, we should scorn to avoid, by any mean evasion, our just proportion to the expenses of the state, or to defraud the public revenue, by encouraging smuggling or any illicit commerce. Such practices, however lightly they may be thought of by some, are equally contrary to the gospel and to the law: and how those who practise them can attempt to claim the protection of the government to their persons and their property is utterly unaccountable.

Next to obedience to governors, St. Paul enforces the principles of equity between man and man, comprehending the precepts of the second table, all of which the apostle comprehends, as his Master had before done, in one word, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself."

The conclusion of the chapter is particularly animated and beautiful. Considering mankind, and even in a great measure professing Christians, as sleeping in ignorance and sin, the apostle admonishes them that their night is nearly ended, and the hour is come to awake to the service of God, and cast off the works of darkness (as the rising sun dissipates the shades of night,) and clothe themselves with the armour of light, that is, with the suit of Christian graces: (Ephes. vi. 13, &c.:) or, as he afterwards expresses it, "Put on the Lord Jesus Christ." Chrysostom (the most eloquent of the Greek Fathers) has been cited to show, that, to put on another person, was to imitate his character. The allusion appears to us theatrical. To put on Cesar or Cato, is to act his part, the hero or the patriot; and to put on Christ is to copy his tempers and his example.

We cannot close our exposition without remarking that this verse and the preceding, as himself tells us, were mainly instrumental to the conversion of St. Augustin, in the fourth century, by inducing him to put away the works of darkness, and "put on the Lord Jesus."

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1—23. Christians not to censure, nor to give offence to one another.—The church of Rome, we have before remarked, consisted partly of Jews and partly of Gentiles, from which circumstance disputes appear to have arisen in it at a very early period, and that chiefly on two points—on the eating of certain meats, and the observance of certain days. These originated in the same principle as the question

Ver. 7. Fear to whom fear.—Doddridge, "Reverence to whom reverence."

Ver. 11. It is high time.—Macknight, "It is already the hour."——Our salvation is nearer—i. e. the completion of it—than when we believed—i. e. than when we [first] believed. So Doddridge, Cox, &c.

Ver. 13. Let us walk honestly.—Doddridge, "honourably."——Not in rioting.—Macknight, "revelling." The Greek (komois) denotes feasting, with lascivious songs and dances in honour of Bacchus.

Ver. 14. But put ye on.—[This is a Greek phrase, signifying to assume the interests of a person, to enter into his views, to imitate him.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 2. Eateth herbs.—Cox, "vegetables." Whitby refers this to the Essenes, a Jewish sect, who in Gentile countries (as was Italy) ate no meat at all, as they often could not have it killed according to their law.

Ver. 5. Another esteemeth.—[The Apostle is here speaking of the Jewish feasts and festivals: and of course his observations do not regard the sabbath, which was instituted at the creation; and which being a type of "the rest which remaineth for the people of God," must continue in force, as all types do, till the antitype, or thing signified, takes place, that is, till the consummation of all things.]—Bagster.——Let every man be fully persuaded.—Doddridge "Let every man freely enjoy his own sentiment." So Cox. The allusion is to a vessel in full sail, with wind and tide: "Let every man go on in his own way without impediment."

Ver. 6. To the Lord he doth not regard it.—Perhaps the English idiom, and the true sense of the words, would be better preserved by rendering, "He that disregardeth the day, to the Lord he disregardeth it." This, we apprehend, refers only to the Judaic holydays, and especially the seventh-day sabbath, to which the Gentiles, having adopted the first day of the week instead, might reasonably refuse conformity.

Ver. 7. None liveth to himself, &c.—Macknight, in both members of the sentence, "BY himself." Cox, "according to the will of."

"Live whilst you live," the epicure would say,
And seize the pleasures of the present day.
"Live whilst you live," the sacred preacher cries,
And give to God each moment as it flies.
Lord, in my views, let both united be;
I live in pleasure whilst I live to thee.

Ver. 9. Lord both of the dead and living—i. e. our Lord both in life and death.

more: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way.

14 I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus, that there is nothing [j] unclean of itself: but to him that esteemeth any thing to be [j] unclean, to him it is unclean.

15 But if thy brother be grieved with thy meat, now walkest thou not [k] charitably. Destroy [l] not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died.

16 Let not then your good be evil spoken of:

17 For [m] the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but [n] righteousness, and [o] peace, and joy [p] in the Holy Ghost.

18 For he that in these things serveth Christ is acceptable to God, and approved of men.

19 Let [q] us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and [r] things wherewith one may edify another.

20 For meat destroy not the work of God. All things indeed are [s] pure; but it is [t] evil for that man who eateth with offence.

21 It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.

22 Hast thou faith? have it to thyself before God. Happy [u] is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth.

23 And he that [v] doubteth is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith: for whatsoever [w] is not of faith is sin.

CHAPTER XV.

1 The strong must bear with the weak. 2 We may not please ourselves, 3 for Christ did not so, 7 but receive one the other, as Christ hath received all, both Jews, 9 and Gentiles. 15 Paul excuseth his writing, 23 and purposeth to see them, 30 and requireth their prayers.

WE then that are strong ought to [a] bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves.

2 Let every one of us please his neighbour [b] for his good to edification.

3 For even Christ [c] pleased not himself; but, as it is written, [d] The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me.

4 For whatsoever [e] things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope.

5 Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be like-minded [f] one toward another [g] according to Christ Jesus:

6 That ye may with one [h] mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

7 Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also [i] received us to the glory of God.

8 Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm [j] the promises made unto the fathers:

9 And that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy; as it is written, [k] For this cause I will confess to thee among the Gentiles, and sing unto thy name.

10 And again he saith, [l] Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people.

11 And again, [m] Praise the Lord, all ye Gentiles; and laud him, all ye people.

12 And again, Esaias saith, [n] There shall be a root [o] of Jesse, and he that shall rise to reign over the Gentiles; in him shall the Gentiles trust.

13 Now the God of hope fill you with all [p] joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost.

14 And I myself also am persuaded [q] of you, my brethren, that ye also are full of goodness, filled with all [r] knowledge, able also to admonish one another.

of circumcision, namely, the perpetuity of the Jewish law, and its obligation on the Gentiles. The last question had, however, been decided by the Council of Jerusalem, and should not have been revived; but St. Paul, instead of interposing officially, and deciding the question by apostolical authority, recommends a spirit of conciliation and forbearance between the parties. Without examining the chapter verse by verse, we shall offer only two or three general remarks.

1. We have the great principle of communion originally adopted in the Christian church, namely, to receive all whom God receives: for thus it is decided—him that ate meats in general, as did the Gentiles, was not to judge him who ate those only allowed by the law of Moses; nor was he who followed the strictness of the Mosaic law to censure the Gentile, who not being born under that law, was not governed by it; neither was to reject the other, because "God had received him;" but each was cordially to receive the other into Christian fellowship and communion. "For the kingdom of God is . . . . righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost:" and "he that in these things serveth Christ, (says Paul,) is acceptable to God, and approved of men." Consequently, converted Jews and Gentiles ought to "receive one another," (chap. xvi. 7,) as both of them had been received by Christ himself.

2. We have the great law of Christian toleration, as it respects the conduct of Christians towards each other. Each may consider the other as "weak in the faith;" but "God hath received him," and so must we: for while each acts from a conscientious principle, whether he eat meat or vegetables—whether he observes the Jewish holydays, or not—his eating or refraining, observing or disregarding holydays—while arising from a sense of duty, are alike acceptable to God. The kingdom of God, as already stated, consists in "righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost," in comparison with which, in themselves considered, ritual observances, under this dispensation, are of little value.

3. Christians, having devoted themselves wholly unto God, as expressed in chap. xii. 1, are no more their own masters; but whether they live, they must study to live to his glory, or whether they die, it must be in his service; even by martyrdom, if called thereto. And not only are Christians not their own masters, but they are fellow-servants, and not only fellow-servants, but fellow-sinners, who must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, and render an account to him of all their conduct. Let them not, therefore, put a stumbling-block in the way of any of their weaker brethren, lest they should occasion him to fall for whom Christ died, as well as for themselves.

4. So far from wantonly or carelessly offending weak believers, Christians should rather deny themselves even in lawful things; refraining from any action that might grieve or offend their brethren, and so unhinge their minds and unsettle their principles, than do which, the apostle says, "it were good neither to eat flesh or to drink wine" at all; and Paul declares that, sooner than do so, he would himself "eat no flesh while the world standeth." (1 Cor. viii. 13.) A noble declaration, and highly worthy of imitation.

The concluding verse of this chapter has been often misunderstood; the sense given in the margin of our Bibles, and by the ablest commentators, is, that he who, in his own mind, discriminates between meats, and yet eats them against his conscience, is condemned both in his own conscience and before God; that being always criminal which a man does contrary to his conscience and better judgment.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1—33. In this chapter the same subject is continued, and, in the close of it, the apostle implores for the church at Rome the divine benediction.—The first thing on which we remark is, that "whatsoever was written aforetime was written for our learning" (or instruction;) Paul, therefore, quotes a variety of passages from the Old Testament, which, if all of them did not refer directly or immediately to the subject to which he applies them, admit of an easy accommodation; indeed, from the manner in which the apostolic writers apply both the law and the prophets to Christ and the gospel, there seems good reason to conclude they contain more of both than has generally been supposed.

Dr. Macknight remarks, that "the apostle, in the 7th verse of this chapter, having exhorted the Jewish and Gentile Chris-

Ver. 15. Not charitably.—[" According to love;" which charity, from the Latin charitas, properly signified, though now restricted to alms-giving.]—B. —Destroy not.—The words used both here and in ver. 20 imply, literally, destruction by loosening the materials of which a building, &c. may be composed; and seem to imply the loosening or disturbing of a person's faith and principles, and peace of mind: for it does not appear how our uncharitable conduct can destroy the soul of a fellow Christian: the greater danger is to ourselves. Compare ver. 21; also 1 Co. viii. 11.

Ver. 23 Is damned.—Doddridge and Macknight, "condemned;" i. e. both in his own conscience and before God.—Whatsoever is not of faith.—Macknight, "from (Gr. ek) faith;" that is, whatsoever a person does, while his own conscience and judgment condemn him, is sin before God.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 3. The reproaches of them that reproached thee.—On this quotation Bishop Horne remarks, "The usage our Lord met with from his brethren [the Jews,] for his zeal for the house of God, should comfort those who meet with the same usage, on the same account."

Ver. 9. For this cause I will confess to thee.—Bishop Horne says, "This verse is by the apostle produced as a proof that the Gentiles were one day to glorify God, for the mercy vouchsafed them by Jesus Christ."

15 Nevertheless, brethren, I have written the more boldly unto you in some sort, as putting you in mind, because [s] of the grace that is given to me of God,

16 That I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles, ministering the gospel of God, that the [t] offering [u] up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being sanctified [v] by the Holy Ghost.

17 I have therefore whereof I may glory [w] through Jesus Christ in those things [x] which pertain to God.

18 For I will not dare to speak of any of those things which Christ hath not wrought by me, to make [y] the Gentiles obedient, by word and deed,

19 Through mighty [z] signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God; so that from Jerusalem, and round about unto Illyricum, I [a] have fully preached the gospel of Christ.

20 Yea, so have I strived to preach the gospel, not where Christ was named, [b] lest I should build upon another man's foundation:

21 But as it is written, [c] To whom he was not spoken of, they shall see: and they that have not heard shall understand.

22 For which cause also I have been [d] much hindered [e] from coming to you.

23 But now having no more place in these parts, and having a great desire these many years to come unto you;

24 Whensoever I take my journey into Spain, I will come to you: for I trust to see you in my journey, and to be [f] brought on my way thitherward by you, if first I be somewhat filled [g] with your company.

tians at Rome to a cordial union, from the consideration that Christ had received both into his church, naturally turned his thoughts to an objection which might be made to this doctrine, namely, that if Christ had meant to receive the Gentiles he would have preached to them himself. To this the apostle replied, that Jesus Christ was born a Jew, and preached to the Jews only; [being "a minister of the circumcision;"] because thereby, in the end, he most effectually accomplished God's promises to the fathers, concerning the blessing of the nations in Abraham's seed. (Ver. 8, 9.)—Farther, because the Jews were unwilling to be united with the Gentiles in one church, the apostle quoted various passages from their own prophets, foretelling that the Gentiles in future times would be Messiah's subjects, and join the Jews in worshipping the true God. (Ver. 9—12.) Wherefore, God having determined from the beginning to make the Gentiles his people, the Jewish believers were bound to acknowledge such of them as were converted, for their brethren and fellow-heirs of the promises of God, notwithstanding they did not obey the law of Moses. And having thus established the title of the Gentiles to all the privileges of the people of God under the gospel dispensation, the apostle prayed that God would fill them with all joy and peace, through the firm belief of their title to these great blessings. (Ver. 13.)

"Both the doctrinal and practical part of this Epistle being now finished, the apostle makes a handsome apology to the Romans for writing so long a letter to persons with whom he was not personally acquainted. He tells them, that having a good opinion of their virtue and knowledge, (ver. 14,) he had on that account written to them with the more freedom, to bring things to their remembrance." He then refers to his office as apostle to the Gentiles, and to the success with which he had already been favoured: he tells them that he was now going up to Jerusalem with the contributions of the brethren of Macedonia and Achaia, and hoped afterwards to pass through Rome in his way to Spain; and adds his earnest entreaty, for Christ's sake and for the love of the Spirit, that they would strive together in their prayers to God for him, that he might have a prosperous journey, by the will of God, to visit and commune with them, and that he might be delivered from his unbelieving brethren in passing through Jerusalem.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1—27. Paul's salutations, and those of his brethren, to eminent characters in the church of Rome.—Some of these have been before mentioned, and of others we shall add such particulars as history affords. Phebe is called a servant or deaconess of the church at Cenchrea, by whom Paul sent this Epistle to the church at Rome. "In the apostolic age (observes Cox) grave and pious females were frequently appointed to the office of deaconess. Their duty appears principally to have consisted in giving private instruction to catechumens, or persons who were candidates for baptism, especially to those of their own sex, and in ministering to the temporal and spiritual wants of such as were sick, or imprisoned on account of their profession of Christianity. It is probable, from the second verse, that Phebe was a person of some property, and one who entertained the apostles and preachers who came to minister at Cenchrea."

Of Priscilla and Aquila we had some mention before. (Acts xviii. 2 and 26.) They had gone to Corinth at the time that Claudius banished the Jews from Rome, but returned, as it should seem, on the repeal of that decree. They were persons eminent both for Christian knowledge and piety, and being of the same occupation with Paul, (that is, tent-makers,) they had worked together at Corinth; and, on some occasion not expressly mentioned, it appears that they had risked their lives in his defence. Paul calls them his "helpers in Christ Jesus:" and mentions a church or congregation held in their house. Of the assistance which they afforded to the cause of Christ,

Ver. 18. I will not dare to speak of any of those things which Christ hath not wrought—i. e. Not exaggerate the facts, &c. Dr. Pye Smith renders it, "I would not dare to speak of any things, except of those which Christ hath wrought through me," &c. He adds, "the two negatives appear to be put for strengthening the affirmation." Q. d. "I may venture to speak freely of what Christ has done, for that is to his glory, not my own."

Ver. 19. Round about unto Illyricum—i. e. as far as its western shores. (Illyricum, or Illyria, was a country of Europe, lying N. and N. W. of Macedonia, on the eastern coast of the Adriatic gulf, opposite Italy. It was distinguished into two parts; Liburnia north, now Croatia: and Dalmatia south, still retaining the same name. The account of St. Paul's second visit to the peninsula of Greece, Ac. xx. 1, 2, says Dr. Paley, leads us to suppose, that in going over Macedonia, he had passed so far to the west, as to come into those parts of the country which were contiguous to Illyricum, if he did not enter Illyricum itself. The history and the Epistle therefore so far agree; and the agreement is much strengthened by a coincidence of time; for much before the time when this epistle was written, he could not have said so, as his route, in his former journey, confined him to the eastern side of the peninsula, a considerable distance from Illyricum.]—Bagster.

Ver. 24. Whensoever I take my journey into Spain.—Doddridge infers hence, compared with verse 20, that no Christian church had hitherto been founded in that country, though an ancient legend makes James to have resided there fifteen years. ¶ Written to the Romans from Corinthus, and sent by Phebe servant of the church at Cenchrea.

we have a farther specimen in the instruction which they gave to Apollos, in the chapter already referred to. Of the other persons here mentioned little is known, except that Aristobulus, who had been sent prisoner to Rome on some political account, was of the royal house of the Maccabees, and that Narcissus was the prime minister of Claudius: yet in both their households there were saints and followers of the Lord Jesus.

From no mention being made, however, of Peter among the persons saluted, it is sufficiently evident he was not then at Rome, much less could he have been bishop of the church there, as the Roman Catholics pretend. The charge to salute one another with a holy kiss, alludes, as we well know, to an Oriental custom, which it is thought the Christians borrowed from the Jewish synagogue; and was not promiscuous between the two sexes, but each saluted their own sex only. Yet, "chastely and prudently as it was managed, (says Dr. Doddridge,) it seems to have been the occasion of those false and scandalous reports, which were so industriously propagated among the heathen, of practices in Christian assemblies; on which account it seems to have been laid aside very early."

Having remembered distinctly those who were chiefly eminent for their Christian piety, he now cautions the believers at Rome against certain persons of a contrary description; chiefly, it is thought, those Jewish zealots, who, as mentioned in the early part of this Epistle, corrupted the gospel by an intermixture of Hebrew ceremonies, and strongly opposed the important doctrine of salvation by grace alone. He beseeches the Christians of Rome to mark them which cause divisions and offences, contrary to the doctrine which they had learned from him, and from the other apostles of our Lord. These men caused divisions by endeavouring to separate the Jewish and Gentile converts; and they caused offences by introducing stumbling-blocks in the way of weak and simple Christians. They served not Jesus Christ, but their own bellies, by consulting their own interests and gratification, in preference to the cause and glory of our Saviour. He assures the brethren, however, that as, according to the first promise, Satan (the old serpent) had been trampled under our Saviour's feet; so also, shortly, he should be bruised under their feet, by a restoration of peace and harmony in the church.

St. Paul then adds the salutation of Timothy, Luke, and other brethren that were with him, and the usual apostolical benedictions; and concludes, finally, with an animated doxology "to God the only wise," through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Ver. 3. Greet Priscilla.—[Had the notes of time in this epistle fixed the writing of it to any date prior to St. Paul's first residence at Corinth, the salutation of Aquila and Priscilla would have contradicted the history, because it would have been prior to his acquaintance with these persons. If they had fixed it during that residence at Corinth, during his journey to Jerusalem, or during his progress through Asia Minor, an equal contradiction would have been incurred, because, during all that time, they were either with St. Paul, or abiding at Ephesus. Lastly, had they fixed this epistle to be either contemporary with the first epistle to the Corinthians, or prior to it, a similar contradiction would have ensued, for they were then with St. Paul. As it is, all things are consistent. See Paley.]—Bagster.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.

[THE Epistle to the Romans is "a writing," says Dr. Macknight, "which, for sublimity and truth of sentiment, for brevity and strength of expression, for regularity in its structure, but above all for the unspeakable importance of the discoveries which it contains, stands unrivalled by any mere human composition, and as far exceeds the most celebrated productions of the learned Greeks and Romans, as the shining of the sun exceeds the twinkling of the stars."—St. Paul, as Dr. Taylor justly observes, "was a great genius and a fine writer; and he seems to have exercised all his talents, as well as the most perfect Christian temper, in drawing up this Epistle. The plan of it is very extensive and it is surprising to see what a spacious field of knowledge he has comprised; and how many various designs, arguments, explications, instructions, and exhortations, he has executed in so small a compass.... The whole Epistle is to be taken in connexion, or considered as one continued discourse; and the sense of every part must be taken from the drift of the whole. Every sentence, or verse, is not to be regarded as a distinct mathematical proposition, or theorem, or as a sentence in the book of Proverbs, whose sense is absolute, and independent of what goes before, or comes after: but we must remember, that every sentence, especially in the argumentative part, bears relation to, and is dependent upon, the whole discourse; and cannot be understood unless we understand the scope and drift of the whole. And therefore, the whole Epistle, or at least the eleven first chapters of it, ought to be read over at once, without stopping. As to the use and excellency of this Epistle, I shall leave it to speak for itself, when the reader has studied and well digested its contents .... The Apostle's manner of writing is with great spirit and force, I may add, perspicuity too; for it will not be difficult to understand him, if our minds are unprejudiced, and at liberty to attend to the subject he is upon, and to the current scriptural sense of the words he uses. For he keeps very strictly to the standard of Scripture phraseology. He takes great care to guard and explain every part of his subject. And I may venture to say he has left no part of it unexplained or unguarded. Never was an author more exact and cautious in this than he. Sometimes he writes notes upon a sentence, liable to exception and wanting explanation, as ch. ii. 12—16. Here the 13th and 15th verses are a comment upon the former part of it. Sometimes he comments upon a single word; as ch. x. 11—13. The 12th and 13th verses are a comment upon pas, every one, in the 11th. He was studious of a perspicuous brevity, as ch. v. 13, 14. For until the law sin was in the world, &c.—Surely never was there a greater variety of useful sentiments crowded into a smaller compass; and yet so skilfully, that one part very clearly explains another .... It is by this unparalleled art, that the Apostle has brought such a variety of arguments, instructions, and sentiments, all stated, proved, and sufficiently guarded, explained, and defended, within the limits of a letter; which has made it a magazine of the most real, extensive, useful, and profitable knowledge. He treats his countrymen, the Jews, with great caution and tenderness .... His transitions and advances to an ungrateful subject are very dexterous and apposite; as ch. ii. 1—17. viii. 17. He often carries on a complicated design, and while he is teaching one thing, gives us an opportunity of learning one or two more. So ch. xiii. 1—8, he teaches the duty of subjects, and at the same time instructs magistrates in their duty, and shows the grounds of their authority. He is a nervous reasoner, and a close writer, who never loses sight of his subject, and who throws in every colour that may enliven it. He writes under a deep and lively sense of the truth and importance of the Gospel, as a man who clearly understood it, and in whose heart and affections it reigned far superior to all temporal considerations."]—Bagster.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

[THAT the first Epistle to the Corinthians is the genuine production of St. Paul, has been universally admitted by the Christian church in all ages; nor indeed can it be doubted, as it is supported by the strongest internal evidence. It purports to have been written by him after he had already been at Corinth, (ch. iii. 1,) when upon the eve of another visit to that church, (ch. iv. 19; xvi. 5;) and, while he abode at Ephesus, (ch. xvi. 8, 19. Ac. xviii. 18, 26.) Now, as St. Paul departed from Ephesus, where he had resided three years, in order to proceed to Corinth, about A. D. 57, (Ac. xx. 1,) it follows, that this Epistle was written about that time. The subscription to this Epistle, which states that it was written at Philippi, cannot be correct, as it is contradicted by the declaration of St. Paul himself. It appears that it was written by the Apostle in answer to certain inquiries of the Corinthians by letter, (ch. vii. 1; xvi. 12. 17;) and also to correct certain schisms and disorders which prevailed among them, and of which he had been informed by "them which were of the house of Chloe."]—Bagster.

After his salutation and thanksgiving, 10 he exhorteth them to unity, and 12 reproveth their dissensions. 18 God destroyeth the wisdom of the wise, 21 by the foolishness of preaching, and 26 calleth not the wise, mighty, and noble, but 27, 28 the foolish, weak, and men of no account.

7 So that ye come behind in no gift; waiting [k] for the [l] coming of our Lord Jesus Christ:

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—31. After his usual salutation, Paul thanks God on the behalf of the Corinthians, and exhorts them to the purity and simplicity of the Gospel.—On the first preaching of the gospel in this idolatrous and licentious city, and the planting of the first Christian church there, we have seen a concise account in the book of Acts, chap. xviii., by which it appears that Paul was the honoured instrument of its introduction, assisted by Aquila and Priscilla, and followed by the eloquent Apollos. But after Paul left the city, a Judaizing teacher, of the sect of the Sadducees, (for he denied the resurrection,) and, as it is thought, a person of some rank, endeavoured to degrade his character and depreciate his talents, denying his apostolical mission, and alleging that his bodily presence was weak, and his speech contemptible. The design of this Epistle was, therefore, to vindicate his character and mission, and repel the injurious insinuations that had been thrown out against him; and this will account for the strain of self-vindication that pervades it.

After asserting his apostolical character, he thanks God for the gifts and graces that had been conferred upon them, thereby delicately reminding them, that it was through his instrumentality that they had been conferred; and assures them, that God being faithful to his promises, would "not forsake the work of his own hands," but confirm and preserve them blameless to the coming of the Lord Jesus. In the mean time, he is grieved to hear that there are schisms or divisions among them, forming themselves into factions, as it were, under different leaders, in the manner of the heathen, who boasted themselves to be of popular sects, and the disciples of certain celebrated philosophers. On this subject he remonstrates with them with great energy. "What then?" as if he had said, "Is the mystical body of Christ divided? or, who am I, (Paul,) that you should make me the leader of a sect? Was I crucified for you? or were you baptized in my name?" The idea is reprobated with abhorrence, that either he or his brethren should form a schism in the church.

As to himself, so far from aspiring to be the leader of a sect, he was simply a preacher of the cross—of that doctrine which was "to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness;" but to all who cordially believed it, a demonstration of "the wisdom and the power of God." The apostle then proceeds to contrast his doctrine and conduct with that CHAP. I. Ver. 1. Sosthenes our brother.—This was a Corinthian teacher, who attended on Paul in his travels, and by many, thought to be the same mentioned in Acts xviii. 17, supposing him to have been afterwards converted; but of this we have no evidence.

Ver. 2. Call upon the name, &c.—Invoke the name, &c. See Acts ix. 14; Rom. x. 12—14. "Christians (says Mr. Stuart) were so habituated to address their supplications to Christ, that 'They who invoke Christ,' became, it would seem, a kind of proper name, by which they were in primitive times designated as Christians. Thus Paul (1 Co. i. 2.) addresses himself to all, who invoke the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, IN EVERY PLACE. That the verb epikaleo is an appropriate one to designate the act of prayer, will not be questioned. The literal translation of it is, to invoke. The simple meaning of the passage is, 'I address myself to all Christians.' But instead of using the name Christians directly, the apostle uses a periphrasis, and says, to all the invokers of Christ, i. e. to those who pray to him, meaning the same as agiois, kletois, &c. in the context. He has signified, too, that the practice of invoking Christ, was not confined to Corinth. He addressed 'those who pray to Christ, in every place.'"

Ver. 5. In all utterance.—Referring probably to the gift of tongues.

Ver. 6. Even as—(Macknight, "when")—the testimony of Christ—i. e. Paul's testimony concerning him—was confirmed, &c.

Ver. 10. No divisions.—Of the nature of these divisions see verse 12; also chap. xi. 18.

Ver. 11. By them .... of the house of Chloe.—Grottius supposes the three persons mentioned, chap. xvi. 7, to have been the sons of Chloe.

Ver. 12. I am of Paul, &c.—They were beginning to divide into factions, according as they adhered to their favourite preachers; like the disciples of Jewish leaders and Pagan philosophers.

Ver. 15. Lest any should say.—This seems to insinuate that some sectarian preachers had baptized in their own name.

Ver. 17. Christ sent me not to baptize—i. e. baptizing was generally performed by preachers of a rank inferior to apostles. See Macknight.

preach the gospel: not with wisdom [v] of [w] words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect.

18 For the preaching of the cross is to them [x] that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power [y] of God.

19 For it is written, [z] I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent.

20 Where [a] is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish [b] the wisdom of this world?

21 For [c] after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

22 For the Jews require a [d] sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom:

23 But we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a [e] stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness;

24 But unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the [f] power of God, and the wisdom of God.

25 Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men.

26 For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not [g] many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called:

27 But God [h] hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty;

28 And base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are:

30 But of him are ye in [j] Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us [k] wisdom, and [l] righteousness, and [m] sanctification, and [n] redemption:

CHAPTER II.

He declareth that his preaching, though not excellency of speech, or of human wisdom, yet consisted in the power of God: and so far exceedeth the wisdom of this world, and the human sense, as that the natural man cannot understand it.

AND I, brethren, when I came to you, came not [a] with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God.

2 For I determined not to know any thing among you, save [b] Jesus Christ, and him crucified.

3 And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling.

4 And my speech and my preaching was not with [c] enticing words of [d] man's wisdom, but in demonstration [e] of the Spirit and of power:

5 That your faith should not [f] stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God.

6 Howbeit we speak wisdom among them [g] that are perfect: yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to [h] nought:

of the proud Scribes, and disputers of the Jewish schools, and the idle wisdom of the philosophic Greeks; who, while they amused themselves, and teased each other, effected no change in the hearts and lives of their disciples. Their wisdom, however dazzling, was in vain; but the doctrine of the cross, however foolish it might be thought, stemmed the tide of the human passions, humbled the pride of man's heart, and brought him as a penitent to the foot of the cross, where only mercy was to be obtained.

Paul admits, indeed, that the doctrine which he preached was derided both by Jews and Greeks, for its simplicity, and the want of worldly wisdom; he confesses that neither the preachers nor the professors of it were distinguished either by rank, or by riches, or by science: but this he contends, however reprobated by men, was God's plan, who had determined, by that doctrine which they called "foolishness," to confound the wisdom of the worldly wise; and by those means, and those agents which they considered as weak and ignoble, to confound the great and mighty, that no flesh should glory in his presence; but that he who gloried under the gospel dispensation, should glory only in the Lord Jesus, as being "made unto us wisdom and righteousness, sanctification and redemption."

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—16. The preaching of the cross far preferable to human wisdom.—In this chapter we remark, and shall attempt to illustrate, three important positions.

1. The doctrine of "Christ crucified" is the sum and substance of the gospel. Christ himself is the source of wisdom and righteousness, of sanctification and redemption. Much has been said of preaching natural religion as preparatory to the gospel; and it is true, that Paul, at Athens, preached the God of Nature and of Providence; but it is also certain, that in the same discourse he preached to them Jesus and the resurrection, repentance and judgment to come; and wherever these truths are wanting, little is to be expected from natural religion and moral suasion. A remarkable incident, illustrative of this subject, occurs in the history of the Missions of the United (or Moravian) Brethren in Greenland. Long had they preached natural religion with little and with doubtful effect, until, one day, one of the brethren was reading part of a translation which he had made into their language, from one of the evangelists, relative to the sufferings of Jesus Christ; which, in the first instance, excited their curiosity, then their admiration, and, finally, ended in their unequivocal conversion. About the same time, others of the brethren visiting some heathen at a distance, and preaching to them "Christ, and him crucified," they were much affected, and said, "What things have come about now? Your present discourse makes quite another impression upon us, than when you always told us of God, and the two first parents. We continually said, we believed it all, but were tired with hearing of it, and thought, What signifies that to us? But now we find there is something interesting in it; we also see that our people have experienced something real in their hearts, because they can speak of it and pray, and we cannot."

"By the persevering zeal of the Brethren, (says Burder,) more than 20,000 of the most destitute of mankind, in different regions of the earth, are recovered from the power of Satan unto God, and now walk with him as dear children, adorning the doctrine of God our Saviour; and thousands more, who have departed in the faith of the gospel, have entered into the joy of their Lord."

2. This doctrine of "Christ crucified," owes none of its efficacy to the researches of scholastic learning, or the ornaments of human eloquence. It requires us not to ascend to heaven, in the study of astronomy, nor to cross the seas to explore the occult sciences of Egypt, or the recondite erudition of Greece, but only a simple credence of well-attested facts. (See Rom. x. 6—9.) It requires no choice selection of words, nor eloquent display of tropes and figures to embellish it. It is attended with the demonstration of the Spirit in prophecies and miracles, and with the power of divine grace to impress the heart.

Yet, 3. The gospel has in itself mysteries far more profound than those of Paganism, and heights far more sublime than Gentile science can reach; but they are of a nature perfectly distinct. They require a spiritual capacity, which none but God can give, and without which they will appear to carnal

Ver. 21. Wisdom of God.—[Dr. Lightfoot well observes, "that the wisdom of God, is not to be understood of that wisdom which had God for its author, but of that wisdom which had God for its object. There was, among the heathen, wisdom about natural things, that is, philosophy; and wisdom about God, that is, divinity. But the world, in its divinity, could not, by wisdom, know God." The wisest of the heathen had no just and correct views of the Divine nature; of which the works of Cicero and Lucretius are incontestible proofs.]—Baxter.—By the foolishness of preaching—i. e. by that preaching which men call foolishness.

Ver. 22. A sign—i. e. a miracle.—Wisdom—i. e. philosophy.

Ver. 26. Ye see your calling—i. e. those among you called by grace, and even those called to preach the gospel. Dr. Hammond prefers the former interpretation, and Dr. Whitby the latter.

Ver. 28. And base things.—Doddridge refers to the Moravian Mission to Malabar in illustration of this: their converts were from the lowest of the people, and even their preachers far more remarkable for piety, humility, and patience, than for learning or science. Other missions might be referred to with equal propriety; and it is thus the gospel triumphs.

Ver. 30. Who of God is made unto us, &c. See chap. vi. 11.

CHAP. II. 11 For what [n] man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even [o] so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God.

CHAPTER III.

2 Milk is fit for children. 3 Strife and division, arguments of a fleshly mind. 7 He that planteth, and he that watereth, is nothing. 9 The ministers are God's fellow workmen. 11 Christ the only foundation. 16 Men the temples of God, which 17 must be kept holy. 19 The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God.

AND I, brethren, could not speak unto you as [a] unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes [b] in Christ.

2 I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto [c] ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able.

3 For ye are yet carnal: for [d] whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and [e] divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk [f] as men.

4 For while one saith, I [g] am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal?

5 Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even [h] as the Lord gave to every man?

6 I have planted, Apollos watered; but God [i] gave the increase.

7 So then neither [j] is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase.

8 Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one: and every man [k] shall receive his own reward according to his own labour.

and sensual men but foolishness indeed. These are things which the natural eye and ear cannot perceive, nor can the carnal heart devise; but the Holy Spirit of God can alone communicate them to men.

On this subject we give the following quotation from the eloquent Robert Hall:—"The peculiar doctrines of Christianity are distinguished by a spirit irreconcilably at variance with that of the world. The deep repentance it enjoins, strikes at the pride and levity of the human heart. The mystery of an incarnate Saviour must necessarily confound the reason, and shock the prejudices of a mind, that will admit nothing that it cannot perfectly reduce to the principles of philosophy. The whole tenor of the life of Christ, the objects he pursued, and the profound humiliation he exhibited, must convict of madness and folly, the favourite pursuits of mankind. The virtues usually practised in society, and the models of excellence most admired there, are so remote from that holiness which is enjoined in the New Testament, that it is impossible for a taste which is formed on the one, to perceive the charms of the other. The happiness which it proposes in a union with God, and a participation of the image of Christ, is so far from being congenial with the inclinations of worldly men, that it can scarcely be mentioned without exciting their ridicule and scorn."

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—23. The Corinthians again reproved for their internal divisions and party spirit, and exhorted to Christian union.—Co-operation in the cause of Christ implies a maturity of strength and wisdom; and the want of it, weakness both in grace and knowledge. The apostle illustrates this by two distinct similes. In the first, the church is compared to a garden, or rather a vineyard, in which ministers of different rank and talents, are employed to plant and water the young vines: Paul had planted, and Apollos watered; but he is anxious to impress upon their minds, that God alone had given, or could give, the increase. So it is in nature: planting and watering are the work of man; but rain, and air, and sunshine, come alone from God. Nevertheless the labourer shall not go without his hire; for every man who works in God's vineyard shall be rewarded "according to his own labour," whatever that may be. God's rewards, however, are not of merit, but of grace; they shall be apportioned to our labours, but in no case can we have any claim, but from his gracious promises.

From this and similar passages, the late Mr. Fuller forcibly and ingeniously argues, a variety of rewards to God's faithful labourers, in proportion to their exertions. And this, indeed, is none other doctrine than what is advanced in the parables of our Lord himself. (See Mat. xlx. 28, 29. Luke xix. 16—19, 24, &c.; and Fuller's Essay on the Diversity of Future Rewards.)

In the other similitude, the Christian church is compared to a temple, of which Christ is the great foundation stone, or rock, on which believers are individually laid, as living stones, till the whole forms one living temple. Some of these stones were so highly embellished with Christian graces, that they might be compared to precious stones, or stones ornamented with the precious metals. Such were the materials which Paul and his coadjutors collected for this work; but others, in which he evidently alludes to the false teachers, his opponents, who, though they might adopt the same foundation, were far less choice in their materials, and collected "wood, hay, or stubble;" that is, materials of a far inferior kind. These represent professors of an unworthy character, who may be drawn into the church of Christ, by relaxing its discipline, or debasing its doctrines, so as to render them more palatable to corrupt nature: by these means a man's congregation may be enlarged, and he may flatter himself with great success, and a rich reward; but there is a fire which will try his works; and if the materials of which it is formed will not stand that fire, he may himself be saved by escaping (as it were) through the flames, but can expect no reward for collecting such unworthy materials to build up the church of God.

An important question here arises—What may be intended by this fire? The church of Rome explains it of the fire of purgatory, which they suppose to be kept burning from the time of the fall to the day of judgment; but of that fire we know nothing from the Scriptures; nor is it (according to their doctrine) to try our work, but our persons. Protestant commentators apply this generally to the day of judgment, and to the conflagration of the world: and that great day will certainly discover and destroy every species of hypocrisy, when many, it is to be feared, will escape with difficulty, as through the flames of a burning habitation. There is another fire, however, even that of persecution, which we think comports better with the context, and with the apostle's argument. Converts hastily collected, and without a proper discrimination of character, will seldom stand this "fiery trial," as St. Peter calls it, (1 Epis. iv. 12, 13,) but will be scattered by the tempest of persecution, like the leaves in autumn.

The apostle again reminds the Corinthian believers, that they were the temple of God, and consecrated to his service; if any man, therefore, should defile or destroy that temple, he must expect from the indwelling Deity a punishment answerable to his offence. The destruction here referred to its defilement, which makes it unfit for the residence of a holy God, and therefore destroys it as a temple. The destruction here threatened to such men, is the loss of their labour and reward; notwithstanding which, if they possess integrity of heart, they themselves may be saved, as St. Paul here states it, though with difficulty and loss.

From what here follows, it should seem that the false teachers, above referred to, affected an extraordinary degree of learning and science, Pagan or Rabbinical; either of which, when not according with the simplicity of the Scriptures the Roman governor. Some of the former seem to have acted from wilful malice, (Mat. xii. 24—32. John xv. 22—24;) but the greater part, probably, acted through ignorance. (Acts iii. 17; xiii. 27.)

Ver. 9. Eye hath not seen.—[This passage is not taken from the LXX. nor is an exact translation of the Hebrew; but it gives the general sense.]—B.

Ver. 14. The natural man.—Doddridge and Macknight, "The animal man:" but the same term is rendered sensual, James iii. 10. Jude ver. 19. The exact idea of the apostle appears to us to be, that of a man governed merely by animal passions and instincts.

Ver. 15 He that is spiritual judgeth.—The spiritual man understands the twofold state of human nature, before and after conversion; but the natural or carnal man can understand neither.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1. As unto carnal.—Not absolutely so, but in a great measure: weak in the faith, and "babes in Christ." See Rom. vii. 14.

Ver. 2. With milk—That is, with the simplest truths of Christianity, not its deeper mysteries.

Ver. 3. And divisions.—Doddridge, "factions." A different word from chap. i. 10.

Ver. 8. Are one—i. e. equal; of the same rank; or, as he explains it in the next verse, fellow-labourers.

9 For we are labourers together [l] with God: ye are God's [m] husbandry, ye are God's [n] building.

10 According [o] to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise master-builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon.

11 For other foundation can no man lay than that is [p] laid, which is Jesus Christ.

12 Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble;

13 Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it [q] shall be revealed by fire; and the [r] fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is.

14 If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward.

15 If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so [s] as by fire.

16 Know ye not that ye [t] are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?

17 If any man [u] defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.

18 Let no man deceive himself. [v] If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise.

19 For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is written, [w] He taketh the wise in their own craftiness.

20 And again, [x] The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain.

21 Therefore let [y] no man glory in men. For all things are yours;

22 Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours;

23 And ye [z] are Christ's; and Christ is God's.

CHAPTER IV.

1 In what account the ministers ought to be had. 7 We have nothing which we have not received. 9 The apostles spectacles to the world, angels, and men, 13 the filth and offscouring of the world: 15 yet our fathers in Christ, 16 whom we ought to follow.

LET a man so account of us, as of the ministers [a] of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God.

2 Moreover it is required in [b] stewards, that a man be found faithful.

3 But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's [c] judgment: yea, I judge not mine own self.

4 For I know nothing by myself; [d] yet am I not hereby justified: but he that judgeth me is the Lord.

5 Therefore judge [e] nothing before the time, until the Lord come, who [f] both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts: and then shall every man have praise of God.

6 And these things, brethren, I have in a figure transferred to myself and to Apollos for your sakes; that ye might learn in us not to think of men above that which is written, that no one of you be puffed up for one against another.

7 For who [g] maketh thee to differ from another? and what [h] hast thou that thou didst not receive? now if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it?

8 Now ye are full, now ye are [i] rich, ye have would have a tendency to corrupt the church of God: for as the wisdom of God was foolishness with man, so is "the wisdom of this world foolishness with God." Nor is there any occasion for Christians to contend relative to the talents or labours of their preachers, since by having an interest in Christ, they had an interest in the Divine Being himself, in all his servants, and in the whole creation. That is, as he had before expressed himself in his Epistle to the Romans, "All things work together for their good;" and nothing can ever separate them from his love. (Rom. viii. 38, 39.) "Always supposing (says Dr. Watts) that the Christian maintains his character, and acts in his station becoming the dignity of his holy and heavenly calling."

> "All things are ours"—the gift of God,
> And purchas'd with our Saviour's blood;
> While his good Spirit shows us how > To use, and to enjoy them too."—Watts.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—21. Ministers stewards of God's house, and accountable to him for the employment of their talents.—Paul having assured the Corinthians, that among the "all things" which were theirs, himself and brethren must be reckoned; here directs them in what light they were to be considered, namely, as "the servants of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God:" these they were to dispense, as they found them in the gospel, with the utmost fidelity and impartiality, seeing they must render an account to God, when they shall be called to appear before him. St. Paul then adds, that in naming his beloved brethren, Peter and Apollos only, instead of many others, that he wished his beloved Corinthians to compare their lives and labours with those of others, who had opposed him. They, indeed, had abounded in fair speeches, and boasted of their ministerial talents, not considering, whatever talents they possessed, they had nothing but what they had received; and studiously avoiding the pain and stigma of the cross, they lived in ease and affluence and honour, while he and his brethren were like those unhappy gladiators, who were brought into the theatre with no prospect short of certain death. To comprehend this allusion, we must understand that it refers to a custom among the Romans, "of bringing forth those persons into the theatre, on the after part of the day, either to fight with each other, or with wild beasts, who were appointed to certain death, and had not that poor chance of escaping, which those brought forth in the morning had. Such kind of spectacles were so common in all the provinces, that it is no wonder we should find such an allusion here." The terms "set forth," or exhibited, and "a spectacle," (Gr. theatron,) meaning a theatrical spectacle, have in this case a beautiful propriety; and men and angels are represented as the surrounding spectators. See Doddridge.

"We are fools," he adds, "for Christ's sake;" i. e. exhibited to the world as such: but "ye are wise in your Christian profession, and strong, and honourable;" that is, so esteemed by men. What is added; of hunger, thirst, and nakedness, was doubtless often literally true of the apostles, as well as of the ancient patriarchs. (Heb. xi. 37.) Very strong is the expression afterwards used, when Paul speaks of himself and brethren as esteemed the filth of the world, and the offscouring of all things"—alluding to those wretches who were offered by the heathen as expiatory sacrifices to their gods, on which every reproach was heaped, even as the sins of Israel were laid upon the head of their expiatory sacrifices.

In the close of this chapter, the apostle mentions his sending Timothy with this Epistle, and mentions his expectation of shortly coming himself, clothed with apostolic powers, that is, with the power of working miracles; and then would he call upon his boasting opponents to show the like authority; lest by persisting in their opposition, they should draw down upon themselves the like judgments that had befallen Ananias and Sapphira, Elymas the sorcerer, and others. (See Acts v. 5—10; xiii. 10, 11. 1 Tim. i. 20.) He wishes, however, to avoid this

Ver. 3. I judge not mine own self, &c.—This seems to oppose what the apostle says, ch. xi. 31, and therefore requires explanation. The term judge, in Scripture, has various acceptations; and so has the Greek particle (alla,) here rendered yea. After attentively examining Doddridge, Macknight, and others, the Editor begs leave to suggest the following, which differs little from our authorized version: "It is a small thing for me to be judged of you, or, &c. because, or since, (alla,) I judge not myself; i. e. I cannot convict myself of any fault."

Ver. 4. I know nothing by myself.—Parkhurst, (in Suneideo,) "I am not conscious to myself of any thing [evil,"] i. e. in his conduct towards them. The celebrated Mr. Shepherd, when on his death-bed, said to some young ministers who had come to see him, "Your work is great, and calls for great seriousness." With respect to himself, he told these three things: First, That the studying of his sermons very frequently cost him tears. Secondly, Before he preached any sermon to others, he got good by it himself. And, thirdly, That he always went to the pulpit, as if he were immediately after to render an account to his Master.

Ver. 5. Then shall every man—Doddridge, "every one"—have praise of God—i. e. every wise and faithful steward. Compare verse 2 with Mat. xxiv. 45, 46.

Ver. 6. These things .... I have in a figure transferred to myself, &c.—Locke and others "have inferred from hence, that not St. Paul and Apollos, but some other persons were set up among the Corinthians for heads of parties, for whose names the apostle substituted his own, and that of his most intimate friend; but the learned and judicious Witsius well observes, that it is probable their names were used among some others omitted; and the figure was only this, that the names of St. Paul and Apollos were used to signify themselves, and any others so extolled: and when the apostle would say how little ministers were in themselves, he chose, out of humility and pru-reigned as kings without us: and I would to God ye did reign, that we also might reign with you.

9 For I think that God hath set forth us [j] the apostles last, as it were appointed to death: for we [k] are made a [l] spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men.

10 We are fools for Christ's sake, but ye are wise in Christ; we are weak, but ye are strong; ye are honourable, but we are despised.

11 Even unto this present hour we both hunger, and thirst, and are [m] naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place;

12 And [n] labour, working with our own hands: being [o] reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it:

13 Being defamed, we entreat: we are made as the filth of the earth, and are the offscouring [p] of all things unto this day.

14 I write not these things to shame you, but as my beloved sons [q] I warn you.

15 For though ye have ten thousand instructers in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers: for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel.

16 Wherefore I beseech you, be ye followers of me.

17 For this cause have I sent unto you Timotheus, who is my beloved son, and faithful in the Lord, who shall bring you into remembrance of my ways which be in Christ, as I teach every where in every church.

18 Now some are puffed up, as though I would not come to you.

19 But I will come to you shortly, [r] if the Lord will, and will know, not the speech of them which are puffed up, but [s] the power.

20 For the kingdom [t] of God is not in word, but in power.

21 What will ye? shall [u] I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness?

3 For I verily, as absent [c] in body, but present in spirit, have [d] judged already, as though I were present, concerning him that hath so done this deed,

4 In the name [e] of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are gathered together, and my spirit, with the power [f] of our Lord Jesus Christ,

5 To deliver [g] such a one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that [h] the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

6 Your glorying [i] is not good. Know ye not that a little leaven [j] leaveneth the whole lump?

7 Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our [k] passover is [l] sacrificed for us:

8 Therefore let us keep [m] the [n] feast, not with old leaven, neither with the [o] leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.

9 I wrote unto you in an epistle [p] not to company with fornicators:

10 Yet not altogether with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters; for then must ye needs go out of the world.

11 But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if [q] any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such a one no not to eat.

12 For what have I to do to judge them also that are [r] without? do not ye judge them that are within?

13 But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away [s] from among yourselves that wicked person.

painful necessity, and to be received in the spirit of love and meekness.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—13. The necessity of excluding from the church incestuous persons, and all heinous offenders.—The term here used for fornication is of extensive import, and sometimes includes adultery, and every species of uncleanness; but this species of fornication was of a nature so aggravated, as not to be named, even among the heathen, but with reprobation. It is astonishing, therefore, that it should be tolerated for a moment in a Christian church. The apostle directs them how to proceed in order to exclude the offending member from their communion. This he calls delivering him over to Satan, who reigns as god of this world, and claims a dominion in the hearts of all those who apostatize from Christ. This is said to be "for the punishment of the flesh," probably by some severe illness; it being evident that the apostles, and Paul in particular, had such power, as in the case of Hymeneus and Alexander, (1 Tim. i. 20,) and gives us reason to hope that, after all, the party might be saved—"Yet so as by (or through) fire." See chap. iii. 15.

The apostle first writes to the Corinthians not to keep company with fornicators; yet, considering that this licentious city was full of such characters, he farther explains himself, as not meaning that they might not do business with them; he only cautions them, not to form intimacies with them; and this applies particularly to the case of Christian brethren, who had been guilty of such enormities, in whom the crime was far more aggravated: much less should they allow such to communicate with them in the Christian Passover, the Supper of our Lord. And we cannot help observing here, that covetous persons, and extortioners, and railers, are ranked in the same class with fornicators, idolaters, and drunkards! Alas, how would a rigid attention to this rule thin some of our popular congregations!

dence, rather to take such freedom with himself, and his most particular and intimate friend, than with others."—Doddridge.—Above that which is written.—Namely, as servants and stewards, ver. i. Compare chap. iii. 7.

Ver. 8. I would—Or "wish;" the word "God" is not in the Greek. Doddridge's paraphrase of this verse gives, we think, its true sense—"Ye are full; ye are rich;" you enjoy so great a degree of prosperity and plenty, that ye "have even reigned as kings without us:" so happy in a variety of secular enjoyments, that you have hardly missed my company. And, indeed, "I wish you did reign," in the truest and noblest sense, and were altogether as happy as you think yourselves. See Rev. i. 6.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1. Not so much as named among the Gentiles.—Cicero, indeed, calls it an incredible and unheard of wickedness.—Doddridge.—His father's wife—i. e. his step-mother, or mother-in-law, his father being living; otherwise she would have been his father's widow.

Ver. 3. Present in spirit.—Some suppose this to refer to the exercise of some miraculous power; but Dr. P. Smith says, "I perceive no evidence of any thing, more than that exercise of the imagination in cases strongly interesting to us; which is no uncommon form of speech in all languages, to denote an ideal presence." See Col. ii. 5.

Ver. 4. Power of our Lord—i. e. miraculous power.

Ver. 7. Purge out .... the old leaven—i. e. the leaven of hypocrisy. See Luke xii. 1.

Ver. 9. I wrote unto you in an epistle.—From this, some have inferred that St. Paul had written an Epistle to the Corinthians before this; and we are by no means sure that we have all the writings of the apostles, more than of the prophets. Others, however, so render this verse, and verse 11, as to apply them to the present letter. "I write (or have written) to you [in this epistle] not to [keep] company," &c. So Hammond, Whitby, Dr. Edwards, Claude, Lardner, Macknight, Boothroyd, &c.

Ver. 10. Not altogether—i. e. not in the civil concerns of life.

Ver. 12. For what have I to do to judge them also that are without?—That is, "I confine these remarks to those who are within the church, because I have no right to judge them that are without"—God judgeth them.—Do not ye judge? &c.—The connexion is here obscure, unless we allow ourselves to supply the adversative particle, but, before it, as thus: "I have no right to judge those that are without; but do not ye yourselves judge them that are within? If so, surely I (Paul) may."

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1. Dare any of you, &c.—"Josephus observes, that the Romans (who were now masters of Corinth) permitted the Jews who resided in foreign countries to decide private affairs, where nothing capital was in the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?

3 Know ye not that we shall judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life?

4 If then ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, set them to judge who are least esteemed in the church.

5 I speak to your shame. Is it so, that there is not a wise man among you? no, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren?

6 But brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbelievers.

7 Now therefore there is utterly a fault among you, because ye go to law one with another. Why do ye not rather [b] take wrong? why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be [c] defrauded?

8 Nay, ye do wrong, and defraud, and that your brethren.

9 Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither [d] fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind,

10 Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God.

11 And such [e] were some of you: but ye are [f] washed, but ye are [g] sanctified, but ye are [h] justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God.

12 All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any.

13 Meats [k] for the belly, and the belly for meats: but God shall destroy both it and them. Now the body is not [l] for fornication, but for the [m] Lord; and the Lord [n] for the body.

14 And [o] God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power.

15 Know ye not that your bodies are the members [p] of Christ? shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of a harlot? God forbid.

16 What? know ye not that he which is joined to a harlot is one body? for [q] two, saith he, shall be one flesh.

17 But he that is joined unto the Lord is one [r] spirit.

18 Flee [s] fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against his own body.

19 What? know ye not that your [t] body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not [u] your own?

20 For ye are bought [v] with a price: therefore glorify [w] God in your body, and in your spirit which are God's.

CHAPTER VII.

2 He treateth of marriage, showing it to be a remedy against fornication: 10 and that the bond thereof ought not lightly to be dissolved. 18, 20 Every man must be content with his vocation. 25 Virginity wherefore to be embraced. 35 And for what respects we may either marry, or abstain from marrying.

NOW concerning the things whereof ye wrote unto me: It is good for a man not to touch a woman.

tical body.—By the severe reproof with which this chapter commences, it should seem to have been a common practice with the Corinthian Christians to appeal to the Pagan tribunals, on matters of complaint against each other, on the pretence that themselves were not qualified to judge each other. But the apostle spurns at this, under the idea that they shall be honoured to judge angels, and consequently be qualified thereto. What is meant, however, by saints judging angels and the world, is a matter of much controversy, and we can form but very inadequate ideas of that august scene till we behold it. How far angels, perfect or fallen, may be made the subjects of a general judgment, is not for us to say; nor is it necessary for us to ascertain what part saints or apostles may sustain in this awful scene. It is enough for us to know that Christ will be the supreme Judge, and that the companions of his passion shall participate in all his glory.

The advice which follows, rather to suffer wrong, in many cases, than to go to law, is the same that our Lord gave to his disciples, in Matt. v. 39—42; and is, indeed, no less applicable to us in the present age, when immense sums are annually thrown away in unnecessary litigations, where the best that can be expected often is, that both parties will be losers; and when this happens, as it sometimes does, among professing Christians, it shows an equal deficiency of religion and of good sense: but it is to be feared that many now, as in St. Paul's time, go to law, not so much to procure justice for themselves, as to defraud their brethren: these, however, are classed by the apostle with the vilest of mankind. "Such (he adds) were some of you;" but he now hopes better things of them: "Ye are washed, ye are sanctified, ye are justified." These are the saints of which he speaks, (verse 2,) who shall judge the world, and even angels; and yet these are the men whom the world despise and ridicule: but, despised as they may be, the Lord Almighty says, they are "the excellent in whom all his delight is!" (Ps. xvi. 1.)

In verse 12, the apostle adverts to another subject, and one certainly of no small interest. "All things (says he) are lawful unto me;" that is, all things that are lawful to others are so to me; and he then instances, in two particulars: 1. In respect of meats—a variety and choice of food was as lawful to him as to others; and, 2. With respect to living with the other sex, as he says in chap. ix. 5, "Have we not power (or right) to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles?" Certainly he had; but he denied himself all the indulgences of the table and a married life, because they were inconsistent with that laborious course to which he had devoted himself, for the extensive propagation of the gospel. "All things," in both these respects, were as lawful to him as to others; but they were "not expedient;" i. e. they did not accord with his plans of devotedness to Christ, as an apostle. "Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats," says he; but these are all perishable things, and "God shall destroy both it and them" in the course of nature, though the body shall be raised again at the last day. But in the latter part of the verse he does not say, "The body is for fornication," &c. but, on the contrary, "The body is not for fornication, but for the Lord." Adverting, then, to the original law on which marriage is founded, (Gen. ii. 24,) he says, "Know ye not that your bodies are members of Christ? shall I then (adds he) take the members of Christ, and make the mthe members of a harlot? God forbid." This brings the subject home, then, to the case of the incestuous Corinthian, (see chap. v. 1,) who, supposing him to be what he professed to be, had, in his own person, united a member of Christ with an incestuous harlot. He then concludes this part of the subject with an important precept—"Flee fornication;" that is, not only avoid it, but flee from it, as from the face of a serpent, or the approach of an overwhelming deluge. As Solomon says, emphatically, of the "path of the wicked" generally—"Avoid it; pass not by it; turn from it, [Marg. keep aloof of it,] and pass away:" and this precept is enforced by two arguments: 1. Your bodies are the temples of the Holy Ghost, and to defile them with a harlot is sacrilege—than which no crime was held in greater abhorrence by the heathen. 2. "You are bought with a price;" namely, that of the precious blood of Christ; your body and spirit are therefore both God's, and ought to be consecrated to his service.

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—24. Of marriage as a remedy against fornication.—The mutual property which the husband and question, among themselves; and from hence Dr. Lardner argues the justice of this rebuke of St. Paul, as there is no doubt but the Christians might have had the same privilege, as they were looked upon as a Jewish sect. But, separate from that, they might certainly, by mutual compact, have chosen their brethren as referees" (by way of arbitration.)—Doddridge. It is observable, that the Greek church have such a dread of the Turkish magistracy, that they take the advice of St. Paul, and generally refer their disputes among themselves to the decision of their own prelates.—Hughes' Travels in Sicily.

Ver. 3. We shall judge angels—i. e. fallen angels, as the text is generally understood: but if it must be taken literally, the term judge must be used with great latitude, though not with greater, perhaps, than when applied to the judgment of mankind. It may refer only to the plaudit of the redeemed.

Ver. 4. If then ye have judgments.—Doddridge, "controversies"—matters which call for judgment.——Set them.—Doddridge, "Do ye set them?" Rather, perhaps, Why do ye set them? &c.——Who are least esteemed.—Doddridge, "of no esteem," or not esteemed; i. e. the heathen. The sense is, If you have disputes among yourselves concerning worldly matters, why do you refer them to the judgment of the heathen? [Or the apostle perhaps meant that the meanest persons in the church were competent to decide the causes which they brought before the heathen magistrates.]—Bagster.

Ver. 7. Why do ye not rather take—(Doddridge, "endure")—wrong?

Ver. 9. Nor adulterers.—If there are any persons in the community who are unfaithful in the conjugal relation, and who are accustomed to "drink stolen waters as sweeter than their own;" these are usually much pleased to hear that there is no hell, and that "adulterers" shall "inherit the kingdom of God."——Nor effeminate.—The original term is much stronger than the translation, and refers to certain men dressed in women's apparel, for the use of the next class, "abusers of themselves with mankind," both which were allowed in the heathen temples, and Corinth was so infamous for its voluptuousness that Ælian says, it was thereby totally ruined. Orient. Lit. No. 1473.

Ver. 11. Ye are sanctified.—[We have here an instance, as Dr. Whitby remarks, of the figure called hyperbaton, by which the words are transposed from their plain grammatical order; for we "are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus," and "sanctified by the Spirit of our God," as in Phil. 3.]—Bagster.

Ver. 18. Every sin.—Doddridge, "every [other] sin." All and every are often used for many and most. Xenophon represents Socrates as saying, that "intemperate men hurt themselves far more than others; whereas other sinners secure some profit to themselves, though they are injurious to others."

CHAP. VII. Ver. 1. Not to touch—Parkhurst, "To have nothing to do with"—a woman.

A. M. 4061. A. D. 57.

2 Nevertheless, to avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband.

3 Let the [a] husband render unto the wife due benevolence: and likewise also the wife unto the husband.

4 The wife hath not power of her own body, but the husband: and likewise also the husband hath not power of his own body, but the wife.

5 Defraud ye not one the other, except it be [b] with consent for a time, that ye may give yourselves to fasting and prayer; and come together again, that [c] Satan tempt you not for your incontinency.

6 But I speak this by permission, and not of commandment.

7 For I would that all men were even as I myself. But [d] every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that.

8 I say therefore to the unmarried and widows, It is good for them if they abide even as I.

9 But if they cannot contain, let [e] them marry: for it is better to marry than to burn.

10 And unto the married I command, yet not I, but the Lord, Let [f] not the wife depart from her husband:

11 But and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away his wife.

12 But to the rest speak I, not [g] the Lord: If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put her away.

13 And the woman which hath a husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him.

14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else were your children unclean; but [h] now are they holy.

15 But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases: but God hath called [i] us [j] to peace.

16 For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save [k] thy husband? or [l] how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?

17 But as God hath distributed to every man, as [m] the Lord hath called every one, so let him walk. And [n] so ordain I in all churches.

18 Is any man called being circumcised? let him not become uncircumcised. Is any called in uncircumcision? [o] let him not be circumcised.

19 Circumcision [p] is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but the keeping [q] of the commandments of God.

20 Let every man abide [r] in the same calling wherein he was called.

21 Art thou called being a servant? care [s] not for it: but if thou mayest be made free, use it rather.

22 For he that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is [t] the Lord's [u] freeman: likewise also he that is called, being free, is [v] Christ's servant.

23 Ye are bought [w] with a price; be not ye the servants of men.

24 Brethren, let [x] every man, wherein he is called, therein abide with God.

wife are allowed to have in each other's person exclusively, shows that, however polygamy might be tolerated under the Old Testament dispensation, it derives no sanction from the New. The doctrine here laid down is also in direct opposition to that of a community of wives, recommended by Plato and other philosophers and legislators of ancient Greece, who considered matrimony only in relation to the state, and children as the common property of the republic. Our apostle, on the contrary, considers it as a divine institution, though obligatory on those only who felt its expediency. Those, however, who entered into this state, were bound to confine themselves to the laws of its institution, according to which the parties were united to each other for life, except only in those cases in which divorces were permitted by the divine law.

This chapter, however, has a reference to certain questions, containing, as it should seem, cases of conscience, which the Corinthians had previously proposed to the apostle, and concerning which, as the letter is not preserved, we can only judge by his replies.

Besides the general question of the expediency of marriage, he notices the subordinate one relative to separations of the married pair; in answer to which, he allows of none, but by mutual consent—for a limited time—and for some important object, as for the purpose of prayer and fasting. But in case of a woman having already left her husband, he directs her not to think of marrying another, but to remain unmarried, (that is, single,) till she can be reconciled to her former husband.

But the most important question relates to the case of one party being converted to Christianity, and the other not, which the Christian believers probably considered as a sufficient ground for separation; but not so the apostle. Neither is allowed to put away the other: "The unbelieving husband is sanctified by the (believing) wife, and the unbelieving wife in like manner by the (believing) husband;" so that the connexion is perfectly lawful, and the children are legitimate; or, in a ceremonial sense, holy. But if the unbelieving husband or wife is determined voluntarily to leave the other, so be it; let them patiently submit. Christianity disturbs not any of the laws or institutions of civil life.

If any man, therefore, be called, being circumcised, let him not renounce his circumcision; or if he be called in uncircumcision, let him not be circumcised. Neither circumcision nor uncircumcision is a bar to God's favour. If one be called, being a servant or a slave, let him not be impatient for his liberty, nor, on the other hand, refuse the offer or opportunity of being free, since freedom is always preferable to servitude. Notwithstanding, however, a converted servant is the Lord's freeman; and a converted freeman the Lord's servant.

Ver. 2. Nevertheless, to avoid fornication.—Macknight, "whoredoms." The Greek is plural, including different species of uncleanness.——Her own husband.—[In strictness, as Campbell observes, I have no right to call that own, which I enjoy in common with others; and no woman can call any man "her own husband," whom she has in common with other women. In the New Testament we have always "her own husband," never "his own wife;" which is the more remarkable, as no such an expression occurs in the Septuagint. For, during that dispensation, things were on a different footing. The words rendered "his own wife," are, ten eautou gune, for there was not the same reason for the explicitly strong restriction, on that side, which is contained in the word idios. This is absolutely decisive against polygamy; and places the husband and the wife entirely on the same ground; and as much forbids him to take another woman, as it does her to cohabit with another man.]—B.

Ver. 5. Fasting and.—These words are omitted in many ancient copies, and by Griesbach; but the internal evidence seems in their favour.——Incontinency.—Want of ability to restrain the passions.

Ver. 6. By permission, &c.—i. e. by way of permission, and not of commandment.—Edwards, Hammond, and Macknight.

Ver. 7. For I would, &c.—(St. Paul evidently gave this advice in reference to the necessities of the church, or what he calls, (ver. 26,) the present distress; for it would be perfectly absurd to imagine, that an inspired apostle would, in the general, discountenance marriage, since it was of the greatest importance to the existence and happiness of future generations, and expressly agreeable to a divine institution.)—Bagster.

Ver. 10. Not I, but the Lord—i. e. the Lord Jesus in the days of his flesh, Mat. v. 32; xix. 9.

Ver. 12. To the rest speak I, not the Lord—i. e. the Lord Jesus, as in verse 10

Ver. 14. The unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife—That is, the believing wife: and so likewise in the next clause. Many instances have certainly occurred, in which the conversion of one party has been the means of converting the other also; and where this has not absolutely been the case, yet, in many other cases, the converted party has had a powerful effect in restraining the other from vices, and especially in procuring the religious education of the children. Thus far the husband has "sanctified" the wife, and the wife the husband; and the children, though born perhaps in heathenism, have been brought up under Christian instruction, and introduced to the privileges of the Christian church, accounted holy, and, in many instances, by divine grace made truly so. Compare the note following.

Ver. 16. For what knowest thou, O wife, &c.—This passage may be understood two ways, as connected with the context; either as a reason why the deserted party should not be too anxious for the return of his or her heathen partner; "for what," or "how knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband?" And if not, the union of a Christian and a Pagan promises but little comfort. So Macknight. Or, if we read with Doddridge, "How knowest thou, O wife, but thou mayest save thy husband?" then it may operate as an argument to induce her to abide with the husband in case of his return; so on the other hand with the husband.

Ver. 17. As God hath distributed to every man—Namely, his proper lot; or allotted to each his proper talent and situation to improve it—so let him walk, whether he be single or married, circumcised or uncircumcised, &c.——So ordain I—i. e. by my apostolical authority.

Ver. 18. Become uncircumcised.—(Let him not endeavour to appear uncircumcised; which was sometimes affected, as appears from Celsus.)—B.

Ver. 21. Servant.—(Rather, a slave, the property of another, and bought with his money. In these verses, the Apostle shows, that Christianity makes no change in our civil connexions.)—Bagster.

Ver. 23. Be not ye the servants of men—That is, if you can avoid it, as in the verse preceding.

Ver. 25. Now concerning virgins—The original term applies to both sexes:

ment, as one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord to be [z] faithful.

26 I suppose therefore that this is good for the present [a] distress, I say, that [b] it is good for a man so to be.

27 Art thou bound unto a wife? seek not to be loosed. Art thou loosed from a wife? seek not a wife.

28 But and if thou marry, thou [c] hast not sinned; and if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned. Nevertheless such shall have trouble in the flesh: but I spare you.

29 But this I say, brethren, the time [d] is short: it remaineth, that both they that have wives be as though they had none;

30 And they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy, as though they possessed not;

31 And they that use this world, as not abusing it: for the fashion [e] of this world passeth away.

32 But I would have you without carefulness. He that is unmarried [f] careth for the things [g] that belong to the Lord, how he may please the Lord:

33 But he that is married careth for the things that are of the world, how he may please his wife.

34 There is difference also between a wife and a virgin. The unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord, that she may be holy both in body and in spirit: but she that is married [h] careth for the things of the world, how she may please her husband.

35 And this I speak for your own profit; not that I may cast a snare upon you, but for that which is comely, and that ye may attend upon the Lord without distraction.

36 But if any man think that he behaveth himself uncomely toward his virgin, if she pass the flower of her age, and need so require, let him do what he will, he sinneth not: let them marry.

37 Nevertheless, he that standeth steadfast in his heart, having no necessity, but hath power over his own will, and hath so decreed in his heart that he will keep his virgin, doeth well.

38 So [i] then he that giveth her in marriage doeth well; but he that giveth her not in marriage doeth better.

39 The wife [j] is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth; but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will; only [k] in the Lord.

40 But she is happier if she so abide, after [l] my judgment: and I think [m] also that I have the Spirit of God.

portant distinction arises, to which it seems necessary for us now to attend, as it regards the preceding as well as following verses of the chapter, which have been often quoted to prove the apostle wrote not by inspiration. We consider particular exceptions, however, as establishing a general conclusion; that is, when the apostle, whom we consider as speaking in his writings generally by inspiration, names some particular instances in which he does not pretend so to write, this establishes the general point of his inspiration. Many able commentators think, however, that St. Paul, by the phrases in question, (such as, "I speak by permission, and not of commandment;" "To the rest speak I, not the Lord," &c.,) does not mean to distinguish between what he spoke by inspiration as an apostle, and what he spoke as a private individual; but to distinguish his own determinations as an apostle, and those of his Lord and Master, when on earth; which latter he must have derived either from immediate revelation, (Gal. ii. 12. Ephes. iii. 3,) or from a Hebrew copy of St. Matthew's Gospel, the only one (if any) then extant. The reasons on which this latter opinion rests, will be found in our notes to this chapter. (See also Prebend. Townsend's New Test. Arranged.) As it does not become us to be dogmatical, we shall leave our readers to form their own judgment. But that even apostles were not always under the influence of inspiration, is clear from the circumstance of Peter and Paul, in one instance, withstanding each other to the face. (Gal. ii. 11—14.)

But to advert to the latter part of the chapter now before us, what the apostle says dissuasive of marriage, ought not, we conceive, to be construed in opposition to the institution itself, which is unquestionably of divine origin, but merely in reference to the then "present distress," (ver. 26,) through persecution, and the predicted destruction of Jerusalem, which, indeed, occurred within about a dozen years after Paul's writing this Epistle. (See Matt. xxiv. 19, 20.)

If, as we conceive, these verses be addressed to parents or guardians, the advice here given will be to this effect—that, in present circumstances of existing and expected distress, St. Paul thought it advisable for parents to withhold their children, and especially their daughters, from marriage, the father's consent being always necessary to its being legal: but, adds he, "If a parent thinks that thereby he should wrong his daughter, or unreasonably thwart her wishes, or violate any honourable engagement, let him do as he thinks right." "He that giveth her in marriage doeth well; but he that giveth her not in marriage [in the present necessity] doeth better."

But if we refer the case (as some do) to the young persons themselves, he says, "Art thou bound to a wife? seek not to be loosed. Art thou loosed [or at liberty] from a wife? seek not a wife." That is, those already married should endeavour to fulfil the duties of their station; but those not enthralled in such engagement, would do well to pause for the present. Clouds of darkness and distress are gathering round the political horizon, storms of persecution are rising on every side, and it becomes us to be as detached as possible from the encumbrances of the present life; to "use the world," so far as to fulfil our duties in the various situations in which we may be placed, "without abusing it," by making it our rest, our home.

In giving the preference to a single life, the apostle considers the advantages which it possessed for personal devotion, and active service in the cause of Christ; and also the trials it avoided, when Christians were exposed to persecution. In these happy days of peace and liberty it is, indeed, difficult to form an adequate idea of their distress, who, encumbered by wives and children, had to fly from place to place, to avoid their persecutors; and who, indeed, suffered many deaths, in the tortures inflicted on those so closely connected with them in matrimonial or parental ties.

It is a gross abuse, however, of the apostle's design, to argue hence the advantages of monastic institutions, whereby, indeed, many avoid domestic trials, but plunge themselves into temptations to vice, that far more than overbalance all those trials, and so disgrace the cause which they pretend to serve. Let those who have the gift of continence, and no taste for domestic society, enjoy the ease and felicity of a single life, but let them not condemn their brethren.

In the close of this chapter, we have a word respecting second marriages, which the apostle clearly legalizes—"She is at liberty to be married" again, "only in the Lord:" at the same time, as in the case of virgins, he gives his opinion, that, in present circumstances, it was happier for her to remain single.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—13. On eating meat offered to idols,

(see Rev. xiv. 4;) and is by Boothroyd rendered "single persons"—I have no commandment of the Lord—i. e. of the Lord Jesus, as in the case above stated, ver. 10.—Yet I give my judgment—To give judgment is a judicial phrase.—As one that hath obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful—i. e. faithful to my conscience, and to my duty as an apostle.

Ver. 26. I suppose.—Doddridge, "I apprehend." Macknight, "I declare." The original term (nomizo) implies a legal opinion.—For the present distress.—Doddridge, "exigency."—So to be—i. e. to be a virgin; namely, single or unmarried.

Ver. 28. Trouble in the flesh—i. e. domestic affliction, and persecution. Compare verse 26.

Ver. 29. As though they had none—That is, this is not a time for the enjoyment of carnal pleasures, or to seek after worldly gain. Our joys and sorrows should both be moderated.

Ver. 31. The fashion.—(Greek, Schema.) "The form," pageantry, &c.—[Grotius remarks, that the Apostle's expression is borrowed from the theatre; where the phrase means that the scene changes, and presents an appearance entirely new.]—Baxster.

Ver. 32. Without carefulness.—Doddridge, "without anxious care."

Ver. 35. Not that I may cast a snare upon you.—The Greek word (brochon) signifies a cord, which the hunters used to cast over wild cattle, to ensnare them—a thing practised to this day in South America.—Which is comely—i. e. becoming, consistent. Paul did not wish to fetter the minds of the Corinthians, but only to lead them to act consistently with their profession.

Ver. 36. Toward his virgin, if she pass the flower (i. e. the prime) of her age.—[Some interpret this of a man's continuing in a state of celibacy; but such a construction of the original appears without example. It appears most obvious to explain it of a parent, or guardian, who had the charge of a virgin. Ten parthenon autou, in Greek, signifies his virgin daughter.]—Baxster. A single life was a reproach among the Jews after the age of twenty: if, therefore, his daughter approach that age, and is impatient of reproach, &c.

Ver. 37. Having no necessity—i. e. either from her importunity, or from his own circumstances—as for instance, his inability to maintain her.

Ver. 40. I think.—Doddridge, "I appear to have the Spirit," &c. Macknight, "I am certain that I have." Dr. M. is confident that the Greek (doko) does not imply doubt, and refers for proof to chap. iv. 9; viii. 2; xi. 16 1 xiv. 32, &c. See also chap. x. 12.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1. We know, &c.—It is generally understood, that great

2 And [e] if any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know.

3 But if any man love God, the same is known [f] of him.

4 As concerning therefore the eating of those things that are offered in sacrifice unto idols, we know that an idol [g] is nothing in the world, and that there is none other [h] God but one.

5 For though there be that are [i] called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many, and lords many,)

6 But to us [j] there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we [k] in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom [l] are all things, and we by him.

7 Howbeit there is not in every man that knowledge: for some with conscience of the idol unto this hour eat it as a thing offered unto an idol; and their conscience being weak is defiled.

8 But meat [m] commendeth us not to God: for neither, if we eat, [n] are we the better; neither, if we eat not, [o] are we the worse.

9 But take heed lest by any means this [p] liberty [q] of yours become a stumbling-block to them that are weak.

10 For if any man see thee which hast knowledge sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be [r] emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols;

11 And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died?

12 But [s] when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ.

13 Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest [t] I make my brother to offend.

CHAPTER IX.

1 He showeth his liberty, 7 and that the minister ought to live by the gospel: 15 yet that himself hath of his own accord abstained, 18 to be either chargeable unto them 22 or offensive unto any, in matters indifferent. 24 Our life is like unto a race.

AM I not an apostle? am I not free? have I not seen [a] Jesus Christ our Lord? are not ye my work [b] in the Lord?

2 If I be not an apostle unto others, yet doubtless I am to you: for the seal of mine apostleship are ye in the Lord.

3 Mine answer to them that do examine me is this,

4 Have we not power to eat and to drink?

5 Have we not power to lead about a sister, a [c] wife, as well as other apostles, and as the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas?

6 Or I only and Barnabas, have not we [d] power to forbear working?

7 Who goeth a warfare [e] any time at his own

—"When the heathens (says Dr. Macknight) offered sacrifices of such animals as were fit for food, a part of the carcass was burnt on the altar, a part was given to the priest, and on the remainder the offerers feasted with their friends, either in the idol's temple or at home. Sometimes, also, a part was sent as a present to such as they wished to oblige; and, if the sacrifice was large, a part of it was sold in the public market. To their idolatrous feasts the heathens often invited the Christians of their acquaintance in Corinth; and some of the brethren there, desirous of preserving the friendship of their neighbours, accepted these invitations, perhaps at the persuasion of the false teachers, who called it an innocent method of avoiding persecution. They knew [that] an idol was nothing in the world, and therefore the partaking of the sacrifice, even in the idol's temple, could not [they supposed] be reckoned a worshipping of the idol. Besides, such a feast was considered [by them] as a common meal, which, under the gospel, they were at liberty to eat. .... These arguments, it is true, are not explicitly stated by the apostle: but the things he hath written in this [chap.] and in chap. x. being direct confutations of them, we may believe they were mentioned by the Corinthian brethren in their letter referred to in chap. vii. 1.

"Agreeably to this supposition, the apostle begins his discourse concerning the eating of things sacrificed to idols, with acknowledging that the generality of Christians had much more knowledge than the heathens. But at the same time he told them, that knowledge often puffeth up individuals with pride, and maketh them neglect the good of their neighbours, whereas love leadeth one to edify his neighbour, (verse 1.) Next he declares, that whoever is vain of his knowledge, and maketh an uncharitable use of it, knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know; because true knowledge always maketh a man humble and charitable, (verse 3.) ..... Having laid down these principles, the apostle, in answer to the first argument, whereby the partaking [of idol sacrifices] was pretended to be justified, acknowledged that most Christians know [that] an idol is 'nothing in the world,' and that there is no other God but one, and no other Lord but Jesus, (ver. 4—6.) But at the same time he [tells] them there were some weak brethren, who had not that knowledge. .... In them, therefore, the eating of such sacrifices was certainly an act of idolatry, whereby their conscience was defiled, (ver. 7.) Next, to the argument that the things sacrificed [were] meats, the eating of which was lawful under the gospel .... the apostle replied, that in the use of their Christian liberty of eating all kinds of meats without distinction, they were bound to take care not to lead the weak into sin by their example, (ver. 9.) This he calls sinning against the brethren, and against Christ, (ver. 12.) Then, in a high strain of Christian benevolence, he declared, that if his eating any kind of flesh occasioned his brother to sin, he would abstain from it all his life, (ver. 13.) By saying this, the apostle insinuated to the faction, that, whatever they might pretend, their real motives for joining in [these] idolatrous feasts were of a sensual kind. They loved good cheer and merriment: but [out of regard to] their brethren, it was their duty willingly to have denied themselves all such gratifications," even supposing them to be lawful; since by this conduct they might offend weak brethren, whose consciences were less enlightened.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1—27. Paul claims the rights of a Christian minister and an apostle.—The questions proposed in the opening of this chapter clearly show on what grounds St. Paul rested his claim to be an apostle, and more especially to the Corinthians, who had been chiefly called by his ministry, and collected into a Christian church. At the same time he states the privileges to which, as a minister and an apostle, he was particularly entitled:—1. His right, as a preacher of the gospel, to live on the gospel which he preached: this, however, he waved, and chose rather to work with his own hands at tent-making, than to be an expense to his converts or a burden to the church. (See 2 Thess. iii. 8, 9.) 2. His right to marry; for so we understand his "leading about a sister, a wife," like Peter, who, on all hands, is allowed to have been a married man. (See Matt. viii. 14.)

The same principle which led St. Paul to sacrifice his privileges and personal comforts to the great cause of the Saviour, led him also, in other cases, to accommodate himself to the prejudices of both Jews and Gentiles, so far as he conscienpart of the first paragraph in this chapter should be included in a parenthesis, but critics are divided where to place the marks; most place them in the middle of the first and fourth verses. If we might be permitted, however, to offer a suggestion, we should confine the parenthesis to the first verse, thus:—We know (for [οτι] we all have [this] knowledge;) namely, that the heathen gods are no gods at all: yet let us not be vain of our knowledge, for knowledge puffeth up, &c. Such we suppose to be the sense of this intricate and involved passage.——Charity edifieth—i. e. buildeth up—as a family is built up by love. See Ps. xxviii. 5. Prov. xiv. 1.

Ver. 2. If any man think.—Macknight, "is confident." See note on chap. vii. 40.

Ver. 4. An idol is nothing.—The Hebrews gave them a name that implied this, which is thought to be here alluded to; and Whitby shows, that the position here asserted was a common aphorism among the Jewish doctors.

Ver. 6. In him—Margin, "for him;" i. e. for his glory.

Ver. 7. Not in every man.—Doddridge, "Not in all men"—even not in some professing Christians.——For some, with conscience of the idol, &c.—i. e. supposing that, though the idol itself may be an insensible statue, it may be inhabited by some immortal demon; and, thus supposing, they become guilty of idolatry.

Ver. 8. Meat commendeth us not—i. e. the eating or refraining from any particular kind of food, in itself considered.

Ver. 9. This liberty.—Macknight, "right." So they claimed it; but the apostle does not concede it. See chap. x. 19—23.

Compare note chap. viii. 1.

Ver. 11. Shall the weak brother perish?—See note on Rom. xiv. 15.

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1. Am I not free?—Meaning, that his time and talents were at his own disposal. He was not in bondage to any man—a circumstance necessary to capacitate him for his itinerant labours.——Have I not seen Jesus Christ?—This was necessary, in order to his being a competent witness of Christ's resurrection.

Ver. 4. Power to eat and to drink?—[Rather, authority or right. Power is only the ability to do a thing; whereas the apostle means a right to do what he is speaking of.]—Bagster. That is, labouring for the public good, have we not a right to live at the public charge?

Ver. 5. To lead about a sister, a wife?—i. e. a Christian wife, or a wife who was a sister in Christ.—Macknight. Roman Catholics render it, "a sister, a woman:" but Doddridge remarks, "the word (gunaika) has no force at all here, if it be rendered a woman, since a sister must needs be such; and it is very unlikely that an apostle should carry about with him a woman to whom he was not married: yet this is what they pretend of Cephas, (or Peter,) and of our Lord's brothers.

Ver. 7. Who goeth a warfare, &c.—i. e. who labours without expecting to reap some of the fruits of his labour?

charges? who planteth [f] a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth [g] a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock?

8 Say I these things as a man? or saith not the law the same also?

9 For it is written [h] in the law of Moses, Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen?

10 Or saith he it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes, no doubt, this is written: that he [i] that plougheth should plough in hope; and that he that thresheth in hope should be partaker of his hope.

11 If [j] we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?

12 If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather? Nevertheless [k] we have not used this power; but suffer all things, lest we should hinder the gospel of Christ.

13 Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things [l] live of the things of the temple? and they [m] which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar?

14 Even so hath the Lord [n] ordained that they [o] which preach the gospel should live of the gospel.

15 But I [p] have used none of these things: neither have I written these things, that it should be so done unto me: for [q] it were better for me to die, than that any man should make my glorying void.

16 For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for [r] necessity is laid upon me; yea, wo is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!

17 For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward: but if against my will, a dispensation [s] of the gospel is committed unto me.

18 What is my reward then? Verily that, when I preach the gospel, I may make the gospel of Christ without charge, that I abuse not my power in the gospel.

19 For though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant [t] unto all, that I might gain the more.

20 And unto the Jews I [u] became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law;

21 To them that are without law, as without law, (being not [v] without law to God, but under the law to Christ,) that I might gain them that are without law.

22 To the weak [w] became I as weak, that I might gain the weak: I [x] am made all things to all men, that [y] I might by all means save some.

23 And this I do for the gospel's sake, that I might be partaker thereof with you.

24 Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So [z] run, that ye may obtain.

25 And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an [a] incorruptible.

26 I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air:

27 But [b] I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway.

CHAPTER X.

1 The sacraments of the Jews 6 are types of ours, 7 and their punishments, 11 ex- amples for us. 14 We must flee from idolatry. 21 We must not make the Lord's table the table of devils: 24 and in things indifferent we must have regard of our brethren.

MOREOVER, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under [a] the cloud, and [b] all passed through the sea;

2 And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea;

3 And did all eat the same spiritual [c] meat;

tiously could, in order to gain them to the gospel; as he says in ver. 22, "I am made all things to all men, that, by all means, I might win some."

"He was aware, (says Mr. Robert Hall,) that contentions about practices and opinions, comparatively insignificant, were generally the most vehemently and uncharitably carried on by men who are the most cold and indifferent in the defence of truths of the most awful moment. Inflexible in himself in every thing which was of vital importance, yet accommodating in trivial matters, about which men of narrow views pertinaciously contend, he shaped the course of his usefulness to the winding current of life, and to the flexure of circumstances; and was ever on the watch to see how, by giving way in things indifferent, he might gain men to the great cause which he lived only to promote."

In the latter part of this chapter, St. Paul explains the grounds and motives of his conduct in some beautiful allusions to the gymnastic exercises of the Greeks and the Olympic games. First, in reference to the stadium, or foot-race, in which, though many ran, one only, namely, the foremost of them, was crowned. So he ran—and exhorts the Corinthians also to run, that they might gain the prize. He then observes, that to all who contended in these games, whether in running or combating, it was absolutely necessary that they should practice temperance; and this he recommends as equally necessary in order to run the Christian course, or fight the good fight of faith; in both which we contend, not for a fading and corruptible garland, but for a crown of immortal glory. In this contest the apostle farther remarks, that he ran "not unobserved by the judge" who is to award the prize; and he fought not as one that beats the air, merely vapouring without an antagonist; but he boxed, (alluding to the same games,) "bruised, and mortified his flesh," in order to keep his body in subjection to the interests of his soul—"Lest having, as a herald, (says he,) proclaimed the gospel to others, I should myself be disapproved, and rejected by that Judge who alone distributes the rewards of immortality."

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—33. The Jewish institutions being types of ours, the punishments inflicted on their abuse should operate as warnings to us Christians.—In the first place, their passing through the Red Sea initiated them into the religion of Moses in a manner similar to that in which Christians are

Ver. 13. Do ye not know? &c.—This was true, both with respect to the Jews and the heathen.

Ver. 20. Became as a Jew.—See Acts xvi. 3; xxi. 26.

Ver. 21. To them that are without law—i. e. the Mosaic law; namely, the Gentiles.

Ver. 23. That I might be partaker.—Namely, of the blessings of the gospel; but Pearce renders it, "a joint communicator," which is the sense given by Doddridge.

So in good truth would I, for it is a glorious thing; but pray consider what must go before and what may follow, and so proceed to the attempt. You must then live by rule; you must oblige yourself to constant exercise, at the appointed hour, in heat and cold; you must abstain from wine and cold liquors; in a word, you must be as submissive to all the directions of your master as to those of a physician."—Enchir. chap. 86.——A corruptible crown.—It is well known that the crown in the Olympic games, sacred to Jupiter, was of wildolive; in the Pythian, sacred to Apollo, of laurel; in the Isthmian or Corinthian, of the pine, &c. Most of these were evergreens, but they would soon grow dry, and break to pieces.

Ver. 26. Not as uncertainly.—"Not as unnoticed," namely, by the judge; or, "not as neglecting the boundary marks of the course." See Doddridge.——So fight I.—Macknight, "So I box."

Ver. 27. I keep under my body.—Doddridge, "I mortify my body." The original term properly signifies to strike on the face, as boxers did.—Doddridge.——Bring it into subjection.—"I drag off as a slave," as the victors did their conquered antagonists.——Lest when I have preached—Doddridge, "Served as a herald;" Macknight, "proclaimed" to others—I myself should be a cast-away.—Doddridge, "I myself should be disapproved," namely, by the judge. Macknight, "Lest I myself should be not approved." [One disapproved by the judge of the games, as not having fairly deserved the prize.]—Bagster.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1. All our fathers, &c.—Paul speaks of himself and Jewish brethren.——Under the cloud, &c.—If water baptism is here alluded to, as many think, it does not seem to imply immersion, for it was the Egyptian army that was immersed; but it is not unlikely, that in the cloud passing over them to guard their rear, (which it did effectually, by involving their enemies in rain and darkness,) it might distil upon the Israelites a mist, or gentle rain, while at the same time their garments were sprinkled with the ocean's spray.

Ver. 2. Baptized unto Moses, &c.—By means of the cloud and the passage of the Red sea, an obligation similar to that arising from baptism was imposed on them to obey Moses; i. e. all those who passed with Moses through the Red sea, and followed with him the cloud which preceded their march, bound themselves by this act to honour, obey and follow him.—Rob. Wahl.

A. M. 4061. A. D. 57.

4 And did all drink the same spiritual [d] drink: for they drank of that spiritual Rock that [e] followed them: and that Rock was Christ.

5 But with many of them God was not well pleased: for they were overthrown [f] in the wilderness.

6 Now these things were [g] our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they [h] also lusted.

7 Neither be ye idolaters, as were some of them; as it is [i] written, The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play.

8 Neither let us commit fornication, as some [j] of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand.

9 Neither let us tempt [k] Christ, as some of them also tempted, and were destroyed of [l] serpents.

10 Neither murmur ye, as some of them also [m] murmured, and were destroyed of the [n] destroyer.

11 Now all these things happened unto them for [o] ensamples: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come.

12 Wherefore [p] let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.

13 There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who [r] will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; [s] but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it.

14 Wherefore, my dearly beloved, [t] flee from idolatry.

15 I speak as to wise men; judge ye what I say.

16 The cup of blessing, which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?

17 For we being many are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread.

18 Behold Israel after [u] the flesh: [v] are not they which eat of the sacrifices partakers of the altar?

19 What say I then? that the idol [w] is any thing, or that which is offered in sacrifice to idols is any thing?

20 But I say, that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to [x] devils, and not to God: and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils.

21 Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup [y] of devils: ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils.

22 Do we [z] provoke the Lord to jealousy? are we stronger than he?

23 All [a] things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not.

introduced into the church by baptism. Thus the feeding of Israel, by manna from heaven, our Lord himself represents as figurative of his doctrine and precepts, (John vi. 51, &c.;) while the water from the rock, which followed them to a considerable distance through the wilderness, typified also the grace which flows from Christ, who is the rock of our salvation. (John iv. 10, &c.)

As these merciful supplies of temporal food represented the blessings of the new dispensation, so the impious and ungrateful behaviour of Israel but too justly represented the improper and unbelieving conduct of many nominal Christians and hypocritical professors. The history of Israel is, therefore, but too justly figurative or typical of the New Testament church, which consists not of true Israelites only, but also of many who have nothing but the name, and who, therefore, when tribulation or persecution ariseth, because of the word, are offended and apostatize, even because, as our Lord tells us, they have no root (of piety) in themselves, (Matt. xiii. 20.) "Wherefore, (saith Paul,) let him that thinketh," and is confident "that he standeth" firm, "take heed lest he fall." The Scriptures, while they encourage believers with promises of persevering grace, no less earnestly caution us against presumption and neglect. The whole work of God is carried on by means of his own appointment.

St. Paul now returns to the subject of idolatry, and cautions his beloved Corinthians against being drawn into it, as was Israel in the instances he had recited; and we are much inclined to believe that the great temptation which drew Israel into idolatry was the same with which the people of Corinth were now tempted, viz. luxury and conviviality; they were invited to feast in the idol temples, the natural consequence of which would be uniting in the music and dancing which followed, and these would as naturally lead to that licentiousness, for which these heathen temples were so much frequented.

The apostle now adverts to the solemnities of the Lord's Supper, as a farther guard to them against partaking of the idol-feasts. This was indeed the common temptation of the heathen world; but there was an easy and an obvious way of escape, in keeping aloof from the heathen temples; and here is a strong argument to induce them so to do. In the Christian sacrament they held communion with the Saviour; they spiritually ate his flesh and drank his blood. But "what communion hath Christ with Belial?" or with any of the idols of the heathen world? It is true, indeed, Christians consider their lifeless images as mere masses of wood or stone; but since the heathen themselves supposed them to be inhabited by demons or devils, (as our translators call them,) and therefore worshipped them, to unite with them in any part of their devotions was to hold communion with them and with their gods; but, says he, "I would not that ye should have fellowship with demons." That would be to provoke the Almighty to jealousy, as the idolatrous Jews did; and they might expect the like awful consequences as befell them. To attempt this would be to "provoke the Lord to jealousy," as they did, which would be as imprudent as it was criminal; for who can contend with him?

Dr. Macknight here remarks—"With respect to the questions whether the meats sacrificed to idols, which were offered in the markets, might be eaten by Christians, and whether they might eat of those meats in the houses of the heathens, when set before them as a common, and not as a religious meal, the apostle observed, first, that although, under the gospel, all meats were lawful, all meats were not expedient for every person; and even where they are expedient, the eating of them may not extend to the edification of others, (ver. 23.) Secondly, that in the use of meats, one ought to study not his own advantage only, but the advantage of his neighbour also, (ver. 24.) And having laid down these principles, he desired the Corinthians to eat whatever was sold in the shambles, without inquiring whether it had been sacrificed to idols or not; because they knew that idols have no dominion over the world, but that 'the earth is the Lord's,' and all that it contains, (ver. 25, 26.) And if a heathen invited them to his house, and they inclined to go, they were to eat whatever was set before them, asking no questions for con-

Ver. 4. That followed them.—Dr. Wall calculated that this water, which was a stream, or river, from the rock of Horeb, running in a descent, might attend upon Israel in their peregrinations for 37 years, till they came to Ezion Gaber, a sea-port, where it might run into the ocean. See Num. xxxiii. 36.

Ver. 5. God was not well pleased—Because they murmured and repined through unbelief. Compare Heb. iii. 16, 17.

Ver. 6. Our examples.—Margin and Doddridge, "figures;" or, more literally, "types."

Ver. 9. Neither let us tempt Christ.—This is said on the conviction that the Lord, who inhabited the Shechinah, or cloud of glory, was none other than the Messiah, John i. 14.—Destroyed of (or by) serpents.

Ver 10. Destroyed of the destroyer—i. e. death.

Ver 11. Ensamples.—Old English for "examples." Margin and Doddridge, "figures," or more literally, types.—Ends of the world.—Gr. "of the ages;" elsewhere called the last times, the last days, &c. See Heb. i. 2.

Ver. 12. Him that thinketh—or is confident—he standeth—"Firmly fixed in the divine favour," says Macknight. See note on chap. vii. 40.

Ver. 13. Such as is common to man.—According to Doddridge, such as is proportionable to human strength.

Ver. 15. What I say—i. e. What I am about to say, as in next verse.

Ver. 16. The bread—Macknight, "The loaf"—which we break.—So it (artos) is rendered, Mat. xvi. 9.

Ver. 17. For we, &c.—[Or, "Because there is one bread, (or loaf,) we, who are many, are one body." By this sacrament, and the faith professed in it, and the grace implied, Christians were united as the members in the human body; seeing they were one with Christ, and had fellowship with him, and one another, by partaking of the same bread, as a token of their feeding by faith on the same spiritual nourishment for their souls.]—Bagster.—One body—i. e. mystically.

Ver. 18. Behold.—Doddridge, "Consider," &c.—Partakers of the altar—i. e. participators in the atonement, and in the worship. So by eating of these idolatrous sacrifices you participate in the idolatry.

Ver. 20. Sacrifice to devils—Gr. "to demons." Elsner has "proved at large," says Doddridge, "from incontestable authorities, that the demons were considered as present at these sacrifices, and as taking part with the worshippers in the common feast; by which (as Maimonides expresses it) friendship, brotherhood, and familiarity, were contracted between them, because all ate at one table, and sat at one board."

Ver. 21. The cup—the table of devils—Gr. "demons," throughout this and the verse preceding. Our opinion of the existence of demons, or evil spirits, and their power over mankind, has been already given in various parts of the Gospels, and their connexion with the interests of idolatry will hardly be disputed.

Ver. 23. All things are lawful.—See chap. vi. 12.

24 Let [b] no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth.

25 Whatsoever [c] is sold in the shambles, that eat, asking no question for conscience' sake:

26 For [d] the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof.

27 If any of them that believe not bid you to a feast, and ye be disposed to go; whatsoever [e] is set before you, eat, asking no question for conscience' sake.

28 But if any man say unto you, This is offered in sacrifice unto idols, eat [f] not for his sake that showed it, and for conscience' sake: for [g] the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof:

29 Conscience, I say, not thine own, but of the other: for why is my liberty judged of another man's conscience?

30 For if I by [h] grace be a partaker, why am I evil spoken of for that for which I give [i] thanks?

31 Whether [j] therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.

32 Give [k] none offence, neither to the Jews, nor to the [l] Gentiles, nor to the church of God:

33 Even as I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved.

CHAPTER XI.

1 He reproveth them, because in holy assemblies 4 their men prayed with their heads covered, and 6 women with their heads uncovered, 17 and because generally their meetings were not for the better, but for the worse, as, 21 namely, in profaning with their own feasts the Lord's supper. 23 Lastly, he calleth them to the first institution thereof.

BE ye followers [a] of me, even as I also am of Christ.

2 Now I praise you, brethren, that [b] ye remember me in all things, and keep [c] the [d] ordinances, as I delivered them to you.

3 But I would have you know, that the head [m] of every man is Christ; [f] and the head of the woman is the man; [g] and the head of Christ is God.

4 Every man praying or prophesying, having his head covered, dishonoureth his head.

5 But every woman [h] that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoureth her head: for that is even all one as if she were shaven.

6 For if the woman be not covered, let her also be [i] shorn: but if it be a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered.

7 For a man indeed ought not to cover his head, forasmuch as he is the [j] image and glory of God: but the woman is the glory of the man.

8 For [k] the man is not of the woman: but the woman of the man.

9 Neither was the man created for the woman; but the woman for the man.

10 For this cause ought the woman to have [l] power on her head because of the angels.

11 Nevertheless neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord.

12 For as the woman is of the man, even so is the man also by the woman; but all [m] things of God.

13 Judge in yourselves: is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered?

14 Doth not even nature itself teach you, that, if a man have long hair, it is a shame unto him?

15 But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her: for her hair is given her for a [n] covering.

16 But [o] if any man seem to be contentious, science' sake; because, by no reasonable construction could that action be considered as a worshipping of idols, even though the meat they were going to eat had been sacrificed to an idol, (ver. 27.) But if, on such an occasion, either a Heathen, or a Jew, or a weak Christian, should say to them, this is meat sacrificed to an idol, they were to abstain from it on account of the weak conscience of him who showed it; because, by showing it, he declared that he considered the eating of that meat as a partaking in the worship of the idol to whom it had been offered, (ver. 28.) If thou reply, 'Seeing God has allowed me to eat all kinds of meat, why should I be blamed for eating any particular meat, for which I give God thanks?' (ver. 29, 30,) my answer is, for the very reason that, by the free gift of God, all his good creatures are bestowed on thee, thou art bound in eating and drinking, as in all thy actions, to consult the glory of God, who has commanded thee, even in indifferent actions, to consult what may be good for the edification of others, (ver. 31.)"

Upon these grounds St. Paul exhorts the Corinthians not so to use their Christian liberty as to give occasion of stumbling to either Jews or Greeks. This was the apostle's own method; and, in the first verse of the following chapter, he exhorts them in this instance to follow him, even as he had followed his divine Master.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1—34. St. Paul corrects sundry irregularities and indecencies, into which he hears that the Corinthians had fallen.—The first relates to the manner in which the different sexes had exercised their prophetic gifts, for it is most certain that the extraordinary gifts bestowed on the day of Pentecost were not confined to the male sex, for we read of prophetesses as well as prophets, (Acts ii. 17, 18; xxi. 9, &c.,) and the apostle does not censure the exercise of these gifts, but only some indecorous circumstances in the dress and manner of the prophetesses. To understand St. Paul's reproofs, it is necessary to recur to the use of veils both among the Jews and Greeks. These were evidently worn by the women as a token of modesty and subjection, and to show that they were under the power of their husbands. On the other hand, men, for the contrary reason, prayed, preached, or prophesied, with their heads uncovered, to show that they were under no such subjection; and the ground of this distinction is founded in nature and in general custom: for a woman veiled was under coverture, that is, under the protection of her husband, or (if single) of her father. But this practice in men was effeminate, and at the same time dishonoured God, whom they represented; while the women, by an opposite conduct, dishonoured the men. These improper customs, it should seem, had been introduced by some of the false teachers who had opposed Paul, and had endeavoured probably to bring into contempt the regulations he had estab-

Ver. 24. Another's wealth.—Doddridge, "Welfare;" the old English term "weal" seems more exact and appropriate in this place.

Ver. 25. In the shambles.—Doddridge remarks, that the Grecian priests having often more animal sacrifices than could be eaten, took this method to dispose of the surplus.

Ver. 31. Whether therefore, &c.—[The apostle concludes the subject by giving them a general rule, sufficient to regulate every man's conscience and practice,—that whether they eat or drink, or whatsoever they do, to do it all with an habitual aim to the glory of God; by considering his precepts, and the propriety, expediency, appearance, and tendency of their actions.]—Bagster.

Ver. 33. As I please all men.—See chap. ix. 19—22.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1. Be ye followers of me.—[This verse should not have been separated from the preceding chapter, with which it is intimately connected, and to which it forms an appropriate conclusion.]—Bagster. So Doddridge, Macknight, Boothroyd, and Townsend.

Ver. 2. Keep the ordinances.—Doddridge, "charges;" which word here means the doctrines of Christ and his apostles, whether delivered by preaching, or in writing; but doctrines or precepts delivered from hand to hand, for a succession of ages, before they were committed to writing, as were those of the Pharisees and the Papists, can command neither obedience nor respect.

Ver. 4. Every man . . having his head covered.—Macknight, "Having a veil upon his head." This seems to be the sense of the passage, though not literally so expressed. It is probable that the Pharisees had introduced the custom of men's wearing veils, in imitation of the heathen; it had a tendency, however, to confound the distinct character of the sexes, and is therefore here reprobated.

Ver. 5. Woman with head uncovered.—[In the East, if a woman appear in public unveiled, she is immediately supposed to be deficient in modesty; and consequently she would dishonour her head, her husband, not only by apparently throwing off the sign of her subjection, but by appearing like those women who had their hair shorn off, or shaven, as the punishment of adultery; a custom which Tacitus informs us prevailed among the Germans.]—Bagster.

Ver. 6. Shorn or shaven.—The first word, as distinguished from the second, means to have the hair cut close, or cropped. Macknight says, the Jews and ancient Germans used to punish adulteresses by shaving their heads.

Ver. 10. Power on her head—Meaning a veil, as intimating her being under coverture, or subject to the power of her husband.—Because of the angels.—This is very perplexing. 1. Some say, human angels; i. e. the angels of the churches, (Rev. i. 20.) But if the thing were itself indecent, it must surely be as indecorous before laymen as before the clergy. 2. Others say, evil angels, demons, who are no doubt often present in our churches; but there seems no reverence due to them, nor reason in the precept so understood. 3. Hammond, Doddridge, &c. interpret it of holy angels, who certainly attend our assemblies, and demand respect. See Heb. i. 14. 1 Peter i. 12.

Ver. 14. If a man have long hair.—In the East, the men wear their hair very short, and the women very long. Long hair in the men is a mark of effeminacy.—It is a shame.—[Because a proof of effeminacy and folly; and because it was considered as a mark of inferiority. It may also be remarked, that there were a set of wretched despicable beings, both at Rome and Corinth, called Pathics, who are said to have imitated the dress and manners of women.]—Bagster.

Ver. 15. A glory—[Or, an honour or credit to her; as indicating that she had done nothing to deprive her of it; and also showing that she did not object to wear it as a natural veil, and as an emblem of subjection.]—Bagster.

Ver. 16. But if, &c.—[But if any person puts himself forward as a defender of these points, let him know that we have no such custom either among the Jews or the churches of Christ.]—Bagster we have no such custom, neither the churches of God.

17 Now in this that I declare unto you I praise you not, that ye come together not for the better, but for the worse.

18 For first of all, when ye come together in the church, I hear [p] that there be [q] divisions among you; and I partly believe it.

19 For there must [r] be also [s] heresies among you, that [t] they which are approved may be made manifest among you.

20 When ye come together therefore into one place, [u] this is not to eat the Lord's supper.

21 For in eating every one taketh before other his own supper: and one is hungry, and [v] another is drunken.

22 What? have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? or despise ye the church of God, and shame them that [w] have not? What shall I say to you? shall I praise you in this? I praise you not.

23 For [x] I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, That the Lord Jesus [y] the same night in which he was betrayed took bread:

24 And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat: this is my body, which is broken for you: this do [z] in remembrance of me.

25 After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me.

26 For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, [a] ye do show the Lord's death till he [b] come.

27 Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, [c] unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord.

28 But let a man examine [d] himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup.

29 For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh [e] damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body.

30 For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep.

31 For if [f] we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged.

32 But when we are judged, we [g] are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world.

33 Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another.

34 And if any man hunger, let him eat at home; that ye come not together unto [h] condemnation. And the rest will I set in order when I come.

CHAPTER XII.

1 Spiritual gifts 4 are divers, 7 yet all to profit withal. 8 And to that end are diversely bestowed: 12 that by the like proportion, as the members of a natural body tend all to the 16 mutual decency, 22 service, and 26 succour of the same body: 27 so we should do one for another, to make up the mystical body of Christ.

NOW concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant.

2 Ye know that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these dumb [a] idols, even as ye were led.

3 Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man [b] speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus [c] accursed: and [d] that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.

4 Now there are diversities [e] of gifts, but the same Spirit.

5 And there are differences of [f] administrations, but the same Lord.

6 And there are diversities [g] of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all.

lished when present with them; but he appeals to their reason against the indecorous character of their innovations, and their inconsistency with the practice of all the Christian churches.

What the apostle says of divisions (or schisms) among them is repetition, (see chap. i. 10, &c.:) and into the nature of heresies we shall have a farther occasion to inquire. See Gal. v. 20.

A more serious abuse than any of the preceding, appears to have taken place relative to the Lord's Supper, which they seem, in some degree, to have assimilated to the feasts in the idol-temples, mingling with the sacred elements the provisions for their own suppers, forming convivial parties in the church; and while the poor were unprovided for, the rich indulged themselves to great excess.

Shocked at the idea, the apostle expresses himself with more than his usual severity. "What! (says he) have ye not houses to eat and drink in," that ye come to the Lord's table to take your meals; and instead of being united as the disciples of Christ should be, ye fall into little parties with your favourite leaders, and such of you as have provisions eat and drink even to excess; while the poor, who are guests equally welcome at the Lord's table with the rich, are neglected and despised. "This is not [the way] to eat the Lord's Supper:" and then he proceeds to repeat what he had before delivered to them; namely, "That the Lord Jesus, the same night in which he was betrayed, took bread"—that is, took one of the unleavened cakes that had been provided for the Passover, and brake and distributed it to his disciples, as we find related by the Evangelists. (Matt. xxvi. 26—28. Luke xxii. 19, 20.) Now in this way of celebrating the Lord's Supper, believers show (or exhibit) the emblems of his sufferings and death in a most striking manner, as thus represented by an eminent divine of the present day:—

"In eating of this bread, and drinking of this cup, (says Dr. Belfrage,) we show the manner of our Lord's death. The breaking of the bread represents the sufferings of his body; the pouring out of the wine, the shedding of his blood. And while we contemplate these, shall not penitential sorrow rend our hearts? Shall not we pour out our hearts before him, in the language of devotional feeling?.... In eating of this bread, and drinking of this cup, we profess our interest in the blessings of Christ's death,"—show our affectionate remembrance of his love and kindness, and our inviolable attachment to the doctrine of the cross.

But this is not a feast to be partaken of with levity or indifference: "Let a man examine himself" with what temper and disposition he is prepared to receive it, and if he discerns therein the emblems of our Lord's death, and feels a proper sense of his obligations to his love—"So let him eat." But "he that eateth and drinketh unworthily," that is, as Dr Doddridge explains it, "in an irreverent, profane, and unworthy manner," is guilty of [profaning] the body and blood of Christ, and thereby eateth and drinketh judgment unto himself. For this cause many are weak and sickly, and many sleep in religious indifference, if not in death.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1—31. The variety of spiritual gifts, and their design.—One great cause of the dissensions and divisions in the church of Corinth, certainly was the improper display of spiritual gifts among its members, and their undue attachment to the most showy and popular talents, instead of those which were the most useful to the church. It appears, also, that there were false pretensions to these gifts in some instances, which fact induces the apostle to insert a caveat against their being misled by ambitious and vain-glorious men. 1. They might be certain that no man, though he were a Hebrew of the Hebrews, or even the high priest himself,

Ver. 20. This is not to eat, &c.—Margin, "Ye cannot eat" the Lord's Supper—i. e. not in this way. Macknight, "Your coming together into one place is not," &c.; i. e. it is not merely meeting at the same place, unless you are united in the same devotional views.

Ver. 21. Is drunken.—Doddridge, "Drinks to excess."

Ver. 22. And shame them that have not—That is, says Doddridge, "that have not provisions and accommodations of their own;"—i. e. the poor.

Ver. 26. Eat this bread—Anti-papistical writers here observe, that this element bears the name of bread after consecration; consequently was not transubstantiated.

Ver. 27. Shall be guilty—[That is, "Shall be guilty with respect to the body and blood of Christ," in not making any distinction between the bread and wine which represent them, and that used on ordinary occasions.]—Bagster.

Ver. 29. Damnation.—Macknight, "punishment;" but all commentators agree in reprobating what the former calls "an unhappy mistake" in our version. See our note on Rom. xiv. 23.

Ver. 30 Many sleep.—Commentators generally apply this to the sleep of death; and it is true, that the death of believers is called a sleep, (ch. xv. 21;) but this is called a chastening of the Lord, that such might not be condemned, (verse 32,) which implies a recovery from their sleep. We therefore incline to understand the phrase as implying a religious torpor. See Mat. xxv. 5. Ephes. v. 14.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 2. These dumb idols.—The images with which, in that idolatrous city, they were every where surrounded.—Even as ye were led—By the popular superstition, and by the artifices of their priests.

Ver. 3. Accursed.—Gr Anathema. Moses says, "He that is hanged, is accursed of God," (Deut. xxi. 23,) which applies equally to those that were crucified, so that "The hanged Christ" is applied to our Lord Jesus Christ by the infidel Jews, as a title of reproach, to the present day.

Ver. 4. Gifts.—[Gracious endowments by the extraordinary influence of the Holy Spirit.]—Bagster.

Ver. 6. The same God.—Comparing this verse with the two preceding, we have an argument for the proper divinity of the Holy Spirit here called both God and Lord

7 But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit [h] withal.

8 For to one is given by the [i] Spirit the word of [j] wisdom; to another the word of [k] knowledge by the same Spirit;

9 To another faith [l] by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of [m] healing by the same Spirit;

10 To another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of [n] spirits; to another divers kinds of [o] tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues:

11 But all these worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing [p] to every man severally as he will.

12 For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so [q] also is Christ.

13 For by one Spirit are we all [r] baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or [s] Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to [t] drink into one Spirit.

14 For the body is not one member, but many.

15 If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

16 And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

17 If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling?

18 But now hath God set [u] the members every one of them in the body, as [v] it hath pleased him.

19 And if they were all one member, where were the body?

20 But now are they many members, yet but one body.

21 And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you.

22 Nay, much more those [w] members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary:

23 And those members of the body, which we think to be less honourable, upon these we [x] bestow more abundant honour; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness.

24 For our comely parts have no need: but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honour to that part which lacked:

25 That there should be no [y] schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another.

26 And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it.

27 Now ye are the body of Christ, and members [z] in particular.

28 And God hath set some in the church, first [a] apostles, secondarily [b] prophets, thirdly teachers, after that [c] miracles, then gifts of [d] healings, [e] helps, [f] governments, [g] diversities of [h] tongues.

29 Are all apostles? are all prophets? are all teachers? are all [i] workers of miracles?

30 Have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret?

31 But covet [j] earnestly the best [k] gifts: and yet show I unto you a more excellent way.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 All gifts, 2, 3 how excellent soever, are nothing worth without charity. 4 The praises thereof, and 13 prelation before hope and faith.

THOUGH I speak with the tongues of men and of [a] angels, and have not [b] charity, I could speak by the Spirit of God, who reviled our Saviour for his crucifixion, as it is well known the unbelieving Jews did. If even they should work miracles and cast out devils, they could no more act under the influence of God's Spirit, than could the prophets of idolatry spoken of by Moses. (Deut. xiii. 1—5.) On the other hand, he that should call Jesus LORD, and should seek to promote his honour and service, might fairly be considered as speaking under the influences of the Holy Spirit.

We are aware that learned and good men have attempted to distinguish and explain the various operations of the Divine Spirit, and to appropriate them to the different classes of Christian ministers; but however ingenious may be the conjecture, (see note on ver. 28,) we doubt if it can be depended on: for various gifts, we apprehend, were conferred on the same persons, and perhaps all of them on the apostles.

The apostle Paul then illustrates the use of these various gifts to the body of Christ mystical, or the Christian church, the members of which he compares to the different members of the human body, all of which contribute, by their different functions, to the service and perfection of the whole; so that no Christian ought to be despised for the meanness, nor idolized for the splendour, of his gifts. All the officers of the church, and all its members, are useful and honourable in their respective places. The Corinthians, however, encouraged an ambition for the best or most splendid gifts; but the apostle holds out to them a far better way in true Christian charity, or in love to God and man.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—13. The pre-eminence of Christian love to all other gifts.—Drs. Doddridge, Macknight, and other eminent commentators, begin this chapter with the last verse of the preceding; and if, with our translators, we understand

Ver. 8. To one is given . . . . the word of wisdom . . . . the word of knowledge.—Preb. Townsend has given in his Arranged New Testament a copious abstract of the very learned discussions of the first Lord Barrington, (the friend of Watts and Doddridge,) to which we shall make some references, without pledging ourselves to adopt his explications, though nearly followed, not only by Mr. T., but also by Bishop Horsley and Dr. Hales. By "the word of wisdom," he understands that knowledge peculiar to an apostle: and by "the word of knowledge," the like attainment of the prophets. But with all due submission to these great names, we consider wisdom as an immediate endowment from heaven; knowledge, as an acquired talent, no less the gift of God, though the result of experience and of study. Paul eminently possessed both.

Ver. 9. To another faith.—According to Locke, a full persuasion of the truth of the gospel.

Ver. 10. The working of miracles.—This, as distinguished from the gift of healing, may intend the power of inflicting disease and death, as in the case of Ananias and Sapphira, &c.——Discerning of spirits—i. e. of detecting hypocrisy, or imposition, as in the case just referred to.——Divers kinds of tongues . . . . the interpretation of tongues.—From this distinction of talent, it is evident that some possessed the talent of interpreting tongues who had not the power of speaking them.

Ver. 11. Severally as he will.—Doddridge, "As he thinketh fit;" Macknight, "As he pleaseth." From this expression has been forcibly argued the distinct personality of the Holy Spirit.

Ver. 12. For as the body is one.—The apostle here illustrates the wisdom and goodness of the Holy Spirit, in his distribution of spiritual gifts, by the similitude of the human body; which, though formed of many members, constitutes one harmonious system, every member having its proper use and capacity for the common benefit.]—Bagster.——So also is Christ—i. e. Christ mystical, or his true church.

Ver. 13. Drink into one Spirit.—Namely, the Spirit of Christ, which also animates his church.

Ver. 15. If the foot shall say.—This beautiful apologue reminds us of the political apologue of Menenius Agrippa. At a time when the lower orders of the Roman people were rising in insurrection against the nobles, this celebrated orator and general addressed to them this fable:—That once upon a time, when the different members of the human body were not in that state of unity in which they now are, they became discontented, because all the fruits of their labour were bestowed upon the belly, which did nothing but lie at ease and enjoy them. The hands therefore refused to convey food to the mouth, the mouth to receive it, and the teeth to chew it. Acting on this principle, they reduced the corpulency of the belly: but, at the same time, the whole body, with all its members, became enfeebled, and were reduced to the last stage of a decline. It was then found that the idle belly (as they called it) contributed no less to the nourishment of the whole body than the other members did to the support of the belly.—This ingenious fable convinced the people that the senators were as necessary to the body politic as were themselves.—Livy, Bk. ii. chap. 32.

Ver. 23. Our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness—i. e. by means of ornamental dress. So in the mystical body of Christ, those members of least apparent consequence, and personal comeliness, are often endowed with talents of the first order—they "have more abundant comeliness."

Ver. 25. That there should be no schism.—The same word is used chap. i. 10; xi. 18; and it appears from the context in the former place, that the Corinthians split themselves into little parties under the name, though without the sanction of their favourite preachers; so far, at least, as respects Paul, Apollos, and Cephas. These parties, though they met in one house, probably met in separate rooms, and held little or no communion with each other. See chap. xi. 20—22.

Ver. 26. Whether one member suffer, &c.—This is the doctrine of sympathy, arising literally from the nervous system, by which the head and the heart participate in the sufferings of the hand or foot, &c. So in a Christian church, the heads of it should sympathize in the sufferings of the humblest members.

Ver. 28. First apostles, &c.—Mr. Townsend has given a table, comparing this and the two following verses with verses 8 to 10, and assigning to each order of ministers his peculiar talent, as to apostles wisdom, to prophets knowledge, &c. according to the system of Lord Barrington, Bp. Horsley, &c.: but we confess that this system appears to us more ingenious than satisfactory. ——After that miracles, then gifts, &c.—i. e. those who had the power of working miracles, and healing diseases.——Helps, governments—May refer, as we conceive, to those who assisted or superintended schools, or other charities for the poor.

Ver. 31. But covet earnestly—Macknight, "Ye earnestly desire the best gifts; but I show you," &c. So Doddridge in effect.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1. And have not charity.—The original word, (agape,) though sometimes rendered charity, is more frequently and accurately ren-am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.

2 And though I have the gift of [e] prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove [d] mountains, and have not charity, I am [e] nothing.

3 And though [f] I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though [g] I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.

4 Charity suffereth [h] long, and is kind; charity [i] envieth not; charity [j] vaunteth not itself, is not puffed [k] up,

5 Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not [l] her own, is not [m] easily provoked, thinketh no evil;

6 Rejoiceth [n] not in iniquity, but rejoiceth [o] in the truth;

7 Beareth [p] all things, believeth [q] all things, hopeth [r] all things, endureth [s] all things.

8 Charity never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away.

dered love, and no doubt our translators here so meant it; and so it is used in the writings of Milton, Dryden, Hooker, and Atterbury, as may be seen in Dr. Johnson. There is no doubt, however, but that our translators derived the word immediately from the Vulgate, caritas; but its insertion here has unhappily led many persons to conclude that alms-giving, or practical benevolence, is the only thing intended; though that is exactly contrary to verse 3. ——As sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.—This probably refers to the different kinds of cymbal used by the ancients, the large and small; the former very sonorous, the latter more like bells. See Ps. cl. 5.

Ver. 2. And have not charity.—This word should have been rendered love, throughout the chapter.

Ver. 7. Beareth—Doddridge, "covereth"—all things.—More ready to conceal a fault than to expose it.

that as an exhortation to seek, by prayer to God, the best miraculous gifts, we may fairly infer that St. Paul intended, by that term, those gifts which were best adapted for the edification of the church, (see chap. xiv. 1:) "Yet (says he) I show you a more excellent way," and then proceeds, in the chapter before us, to show them that way as consisting in LOVE to God, and to each other. So Doddridge remarks, the word "must be here taken in the noblest sense, for such a love to the whole church, and the whole world, as arises from principles of true piety, and ultimately centres in God."

This love is commended, 1. For its indispensable necessity; without it all other things are nothing. The eloquence of an angel would be as unmeaning as the clanging cymbal. The highest miraculous gifts are of no avail; and even the most liberal charities, or the most ardent zeal of martyrdom, are alike unacceptable to God, unless they spring from love to him. 2. Love is commended for its many amiable qualities. It is intimately connected with all the Christian graces: patience, kindness, meekness; whatever is virtuous, and whatever is of good report. Lastly, Love is praised for its durability—when all other gifts, and even graces, fail, this shall be eternal.

What is said of the failure of the extraordinary gifts here mentioned, is, by Bp. Warburton, applied to their withdrawment from the Christian church, when it became established in the world; and thus, indeed, the fact was: but the whole tide of commentators is against him; and the latter verses seem to have an evident reference to a future state. The passage is, therefore, generally understood to refer to the cessation, not only of the extraordinary powers given for the first propagation of the gospel; but also of all the knowledge and wisdom in the world, which we have reason to believe will be but as nothing compared with that of heaven.

This the apostle illustrates by two comparisons. All the knowledge and wisdom attainable in this world is but like the education of a child at school, previous to his application to the higher pursuits of science, literature, or public life; nor does the accomplished scholar look back with greater contempt on his first juvenile studies, than we, in a future state, shall look back on all our present attainments. Nor is this at all incredible: all Europe was struck with admiration at the scientific discoveries of Sir Isaac Newton; yet in what light did he consider them in the decline of life? "I seem (said he) like a boy who has been playing on the seashore, and amusing himself with picking up curious shells and pebbles." But with how much more contempt must such a man look down on these things, when he had launched into the ocean of eternity.

Secondly, St. Paul compares all the discoveries of the present state to looking through a medium imperfectly transparent, which gives but a very obscure view of the objects; or, rather, to viewing them in a brazen mirror, (for such were the mirrors of the ancients, Exod. xxxviii. 8,) by which they were imperfectly reflected. These are, indeed, the only ways in which we can now view divine truths: we see them either directly, and then obscurely, through a dense medium, as viewing the orb of day through a fog: or we see them, as it were, by reflection, in enigmas. This may be somewhat elucidated by a reference to Num. xii. 8, in which the God of Israel challenges Aaron and Miriam, "If there be a prophet among you, (that is, if either of you be endowed with prophetic powers,) I, the Lord, will make myself known to him in a vision, and will speak unto him in a dream." But, as to Moses, it is added, "With him I will speak mouth to mouth, even apparently, (or by open vision,) and not in dark speeches," or enigmas, which is the word here used.

The knowledge of a future state will differ from our present knowledge in two respects:—1. It will be clear, and not obscured by the medium through which it is conveyed; it will not be enigmatical. 2. It will be complete, full, and not partial: "Then (says Paul) I shall know even as I am known," i. e. by the higher orders of being with which I shall be associated.

It is added—"Now abideth faith, hope, charity, (or rather love,) the three chief graces of Christianity, but the greatest of these is love"—and that in the various respects above mentioned—its necessity, its excellency, and its perpetuity. The clause "now abideth faith," &c., (says Dr. Macknight,) implies that the graces spoken of are not always to abide: for, seeing "faith is the persuasion of things hoped for," (Heb. xi. 1,) and "hope that is seen is not hope," (Rom. viii. 24:) in heaven, where all the objects of faith and hope are put in our possession, there can be no place for either. It is quite otherwise with love—love will burn with a delightful warmth and brightness to all eternity.

> "This is the grace that reigns on high.
> And brightly shall for ever burn;
> When Hope shall in enjoyment die,
> And Faith to intuition turn."—Simon Browne.

CHAP. XIV. Ver. 1—20. St. Paul farther cautions the Corinthians against a vain display of their extraordinary gifts—"From the things written in this chapter, (says Dr. Macknight,) it appears that the brethren at Corinth had erred in their opinion of the comparative excellence of spiritual gifts, and had been guilty of great irregularities in the exercise of these gifts. In particular, they preferred the gift of speaking foreign languages to all the rest, because [probably] it made them appear respectable in the eyes of the unbelieving Greeks." But by their speaking long and often, to display a talent of which they were evidently vain, they excluded other brethren from speaking, whose exercises were far better adapted to instruct the church, as they were devoted chiefly to the exposition of the Old Testament Scriptures, on which their faith was primarily founded. This exposition of the prophets, and of the rather that ye prophesied: for greater is he that prophesieth than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church may receive [e] edifying.

6 Now, brethren, if I come unto you speaking with tongues, what shall I profit you, except I shall speak to you either by [f] revelation, or by knowledge, or by prophesying, or by doctrine?

7 And even things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the [g] sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped?

8 For if the trumpet [h] give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?

9 So likewise ye, except ye utter by the tongue words [i] easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? for ye shall speak into the air.

10 There are, it may be, so many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification.

11 Therefore if I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a [l] barbarian, and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me.

12 Even so ye, forasmuch as ye are zealous of [k] spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church.

13 Wherefore let him that speaketh in an unknown tongue pray that he may interpret.

14 For if I pray in an unknown tongue, my spirit prayeth, but my understanding is unfruitful.

15 What is it then? I will pray with the [l] spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also: I will sing [m] with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding [n] also.

16 Else when thou shalt bless with the spirit, how shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned say Amen at thy giving of [o] thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest?

17 For thou verily givest thanks well, but the other is not edified.

18 I thank my God, I speak with tongues more than ye all:

19 Yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, that by my voice I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue.

20 Brethren, be not [p] children in understanding: howbeit in malice be [q] ye children, but in understanding be [r] men.

21 In the law [s] it is written, [u] With men of other tongues and other lips will I speak unto this people; and yet for all that will they not hear me, saith the Lord.

22 Wherefore tongues are for a [v] sign, not to them [w] that believe, but to them that believe not: but prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe.

23 If therefore the whole church be come together into one place, and all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not say that ye are [x] mad?

24 But if all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all:

25 And thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; and so falling down on his face he will worship God, and report that God is [y] in you of a truth.

26 How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a [z] doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let [a] all things be done unto edifying.

27 If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret.

28 But if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; and let him speak to himself, and to God.

prophecies concerning Christ, was called prophesying, and is held in the highest honour by our apostle, and pronounced superior to the other; from which we may learn to value spiritual gifts, not according to their splendour, but their utility. The gift of tongues was evidently designed for the conversion of the heathen, and was therefore abused when addressed to persons who could not understand them; and the reproof given to the Corinthians on this point may be well applied to preachers, who, by their learned and eloquent discourses, shoot over the heads of their hearers—as it has sometimes been expressed.

We have seen how earnestly St. Paul renounced the words of human wisdom in the second chapter of this Epistle; and here, so far from glorying in the display of the extraordinary endowments, as to the knowledge of foreign languages, he solemnly declares that he had rather speak "five words" or sentences, so as to be generally understood, than "ten thousand" to excite wonder and admiration.

Against this abuse the apostle urges several considerations, as, first, he that spoke in an unknown language spake to God only, and conveyed no instruction to his brethren; nor could they, when he engaged in public prayer, know when to introduce an audible Amen, as (says Macknight) was the custom from the beginning in the Christian church, in imitation of the ancient Jewish worship. (See Deut. xxvii. 15. Neh. viii. 6.) This affords so powerful an argument against the use of prayers in an unknown tongue, as practised in the church of Rome, that it seems wonderful such a custom should ever have been adopted by any who acknowledged the inspiration of St. Paul.

Ver. 21—40. On the exercise of miraculous gifts, continued.—After some farther remarks and directions as to the conduct of their devotional meetings, the apostle enters a caveat against females speaking in the church, which it has been found difficult to reconcile with the directions which he gives in chap. xi. 5, &c., as to women's prophesying. On this subject we venture to remark, 1. That when God bestows any extraordinary gifts on females, there is no human power which has a right to forbid their exercise, and certainly no apostle would. Even Anna was allowed to prophesy in the temple as well as Simeon; Philip, the deacon, had two daughters which did prophesy; and the Spirit, on the day of Pentecost, was doubt-

So also, if the trumpet should be blown at random, without any distinction between that sound which calls the combatants to the field, and that which sounds a retreat, and other sounds of different meanings, what soldier could understand when to "prepare himself to battle?" If, then, an intelligible distinction of sounds be necessary in the concerns of life, how much more must they be so in those of religion?]—Bagster.——A distinction in the sounds.—Macknight, "notes." [The passage quoted is taken from the prophet Isaiah; but the term torah, (law,) was used by the Jews to express the whole Scriptures, law, prophets, and hagiographia; and they used it to distinguish these Sacred Writings from the words of the Scribes. It is not taken from the LXX. from which it varies as much as any words can differ from others where the general meaning is similar. It accords much more with the Hebrew: and may be considered as a translation from it; only what is said of God in the third person, in the Hebrew, is here expressed in the first person, with the addition of saith the Lord.—Randolph.

Ver. 26. Every one (Macknight, "each") of you hath, &c.—This, according to Mr. Harmer, is to be understood of extemporary (rather inspired) devotional songs; such we read of repeatedly in the Old Testament, as in the times of Moses and David.

Ver. 27. Let it be by two, &c.—i. e. according to Doddridge, "two or three" speakers, and one interpreter; but Macknight renders it, "Let it be two or at most three (sentences,) and separately; and let one interpret."—[Let not more than two, or at most three, be so engaged at one time of assembling; and let this be done by course, one after another.]—Bagster.

29 Let [b] the prophets speak two or three, and let the other judge.

30 If any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the [c] first hold his peace.

31 For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted.

32 And the spirits [d] of the prophets are subject to the prophets.

33 For God is not the author of [e] confusion, but of peace, as [f] in all churches of the saints.

34 Let [g] your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak: but they are commanded to be [h] under obedience, as also saith [i] the law.

35 And if they will learn any thing, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is a shame for women to speak in the church.

36 What? came the word of God out from you? or [j] came it unto you only?

37 If [k] any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord.

38 But if any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant.

39 Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues.

40 Let [l] all things be done decently and in order.

CHAPTER XV

[b] By Christ's resurrection, 12 he proveth the necessity of our resurrection, against all such as deny the resurrection of the body. 21 The fruit, 35 and manner thereof, 51 and of the changing of them that shall be found alive at the last day.

MOREOVER, brethren, I [a] declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which [b] also ye have received, and wherein [c] ye stand;

2 By which also ye are saved, if [d] ye [e] keep in memory [f] what I preached unto you, unless [g] ye have believed in vain.

3 For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according [h] to the scriptures;

4 And that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according [i] to the scriptures:

5 And that he was seen of [j] Cephas, then of the twelve:

6 After that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep.

7 After that, he was seen of James, then of all the apostles.

8 And last [k] of all he was seen of me also, as of [l] one born out of due time.

9 For I am the least [m] of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God.

10 But by the grace of God I am what I am: and his grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain; but I laboured more abundantly than they all: yet not [n] I, but the grace of God which was with me.

11 Therefore whether it were I or they, so we preach, and so ye believed.

12 Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how [o] say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?

13 But if [p] there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen:

14 And if [q] Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain.

15 Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ: whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not.

16 For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised.

17 And if Christ be not raised, your faith [r] is vain; ye are yet in your sins.

less poured upon both sexes, as had been predicted. (Acts ii. 17, 18.) And Paul's prohibition of a woman's praying or prophesying unveiled, was certainly an acknowledgment of their right under such regulation.—2. In the present chapter nothing is said of women as to prophesying or praying; but only against their speaking or talking in the churches, which we humbly conceive regards rather their interference in church government, which was unbecoming their subjection to the other sex. Neither were they allowed to ask questions, which might interrupt the course of their meetings, either for business or devotion. "Let them ask their husbands at home," (ver. 35,) but, in public, "Let things be done decently, and in order," (ver. 40,) that is, according to Doddridge, "Let all [your meetings] be conducted in a regular manner, to prevent such disturbances, disputes, and scandals, for the future, as have already arisen in your society, and will proceed to greater evils, if you do not immediately set upon reforming them." If women were allowed to prophesy or preach in the public congregation, we conceive it was only on particular occasions, and under special divine influence.

CHAP. XV. Ver. 1—19. Christ's resurrection, the ground and pledge of ours.—The resurrection of the body, however ridiculed by ancient or modern philosophers, is a fundamental truth of Christianity, constantly insisted upon in the public preaching of the apostles, (as we find in the Book of Acts,) as well as in the apostolical epistles. But as the general resurrection arises out of Christ's resurrection, it was necessary, therefore, to establish that fact, as the foundation of this doctrine. Now, as a fact can only be established by testimony, St. Paul here refers to the various witnesses by whose testimony it may be established. After his resurrection, our Lord was "seen of Cephas, (or Peter,) of the twelve," or body of the apostles, and afterwards of "five hundred brethren at once," of whom, says the apostle, "the greater part remain (alive) unto this present, (time.") The other appearances are mentioned by the Evangelists; but this is not, though it is thought to be referred to in Mat. xxviii. 10.

The modest manner in which St. Paul speaks of himself, as one of these witnesses, is very remarkable. He calls himself an abortive—"one born out of due time," and too insignificant to deserve notice: because, though an apostle, and especially so to the Corinthians, (chap. ix. 2,) he had been a persecutor of the church of God; yet since he had been born again, and become a child of God, and a servant of Christ, he had been indefatigable in serving the great cause in which he was now engaged. This he mentions, however, not to praise himself, but to honour his divine Master. "It was not I, (says he,) but the grace of God which was with me;" and to that grace he gives all the glory.

After this exordium, he adverts to the subject already named, and which was now evidently in full view of his mind—the general resurrection, as arising out of the fact of Christ's resurrection. To this fact he, as an apostle, and as one who had himself seen Christ after his resurrection, bore unequivocal evidence: and upon it founding the resurrection of all believers, he thus reasons—"If there be no resurrection, then Christ is not risen; then is our preaching vain, and your faith also is vain. We are found false witnesses concerning God, in saying that he raised his Son, Jesus, from the dead," (Acts ii. 24, &c.,) and you also are left to perish "in your sins;" the atonement of Christ being of no avail if it be not accepted of God, and the evidence of acceptance resting on his resurrec-

Ver. 36. What? came the word, &c.—Doddridge says, the Scotticism, "Whether did the word of God come forth from you alone?" would be the exactest version. 18 Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.

19 If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we [s] are of all men most miserable.

20 But now is [t] Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits [u] of them that slept.

21 For [v] since by man came death, [w] by man came also the resurrection of the dead.

22 For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

23 But [x] every man in his own order: Christ the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming.

24 Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom [y] to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and all authority and power.

25 For [z] he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet.

26 The last enemy that shall be destroyed [a] is death.

27 For he [b] hath put all things under his feet. But when he saith, all things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted, which did put all things under him.

28 And when all things shall be subdued [c] unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him [d] that put all things under him, that God may be all in all.

29 Else what shall they do which [e] are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? why are they then baptized for the dead?

30 And why stand we in [f] jeopardy every hour?

31 I protest by [g] your rejoicing [h] which I have in Christ Jesus our Lord, I [i] die daily.

32 If [j] after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? let us [k] eat and drink; for to-morrow we die.

33 Be not deceived: evil [l] communications corrupt good manners.

34 Awake [m] to righteousness, and sin not; for some have not the knowledge of God: I [n] speak this to your shame.

tion. (Acts v. 31; xiii. 30. Rom. iv. 25.) So important is this doctrine, that on it depends our hopes of another life, and "if in this life only we have hope," that is, if our hope extends not beyond the grave, "then are we of all men most miserable," and to be pitied. As if he had said, our Christian profession exposes us to all the miseries of the present life, and even death itself; where, then, can we look for consolation or reward, but to "another and a better world?"

It may be said, this might be sought for in the intermediate state, and this state we do not deny; but it must necessarily be both temporary and imperfect, since it extends only to the mind, and will terminate with the day of judgment. Indeed, this state, though repeatedly referred to in the New Testament as a state of rest, and peace, and happiness, is never mentioned as the final hope and reward of Christians, which is always placed beyond the day of judgment, as in Matt. xxv. 34. "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom," &c.

Ver. 20—34. The doctrine of the resurrection farther considered, in relation to Christ's mediatorial character and kingdom.—The conclusion from the preceding reasoning is, not only that Christ is risen, but also that he is risen as a public character—risen as an earnest and security to his people, that they also shall be raised—he is the first-fruits of the great harvest of the general resurrection of the just: for it is to them, and to them only, we think, with Doddridge, Paul refers throughout this chapter. It may be well here to turn back to the Epistle to the Romans, chap. v., in which we have seen Adam and Christ described as respectively the representatives of those connected with them: Adam as the head of all mankind, proceeding from him by ordinary generation; and Christ as the head of all his chosen and regenerated people. As in virtue of the former relation all mankind were involved in sin and death through the first Adam, so, through their relation to the second Adam, (Christ,) all believers become entitled to the high privilege of a resurrection to eternal life.

We now come to contemplate the mediatorial kingdom of the Lord Jesus, its completion, and the surrender here spoken of: "Then cometh the end," &c.—"The end of which Paul speaks (says Mr. And. Fuller) does not mean the end of Christ's kingdom, but of the world, and the things thereof. The delivering up the kingdom to the Father will not put an end to it, but eternally establish it in a new and more glorious form. Christ shall not cease to reign, though the mode of his administration be different. As a divine person, he will always be one with the Father; and though his mediatorial kingdom shall cease, yet the effects of it will remain for ever. There will never be a period in duration in which the Redeemer of sinners will be thrown into the shade, or become of less account than he now is; or in which 'honour, and glory, and blessing,' will cease to be ascribed to him by the whole creation." Rev. v. 12—14.

Upon the same passage the learned Bp. Pearson remarks—"When all the enemies of Christ shall be subdued, when all the chosen of God shall be actually brought into his kingdom, when those which refused him to reign over them shall be slain; that is, when the whole office of the mediator shall be completed and fulfilled, then every branch of the execution shall cease. As, therefore, there shall no longer continue any act of the prophetical part to instruct us, nor any act of the priestly part to intercede for us, so there shall be no farther act of this regal power of the mediator necessary, to defend and preserve us. The beatifical vision shall succeed our information and instruction, a present fruition will prevent oblation and intercession, and perfect security will need no actual defence and protection. As, therefore, the general notion of a mediator ceaseth when all are made one, because 'a mediator is not a mediator of one,' (Gal. iii. 20;) so every part or branch of that mediatorship, as such, must also cease, because that unity is in all parts complete, 'Then cometh the end,' &c.

"Now, though the mediatorship of Christ be then resigned, because the end thereof will then be performed; though the regal office, as part of that mediatorship, be also resigned with the whole; yet we must not think that Christ shall cease to be a king, or lose any of the power and honour which before he had. The dominion which he hath [as mediator] was given him as a reward for what he suffered: and certainly the reward shall not cease when the work is done. He hath promised to make us kings and priests, which however we expect in heaven, believing we shall reign with him for ever, and therefore for ever must believe him king."

By the resignation of the kingdom to the Father, we do not understand the giving up rank, authority, or power; but rather a submitting of all his mediatorial government to the Father's public approbation, and presenting the subjects of his kingdom before the throne. So Paul (Heb. ii. 13) represents Messiah as saying, "Behold I, and the children which God hath given me;" as if he had said, "Here am I, and these are the children thou didst give me to redeem and save." "Thine they were, and thou gavest them to me, and none is lost save the son of perdition, that the Scripture might be fulfilled." Thus said the Saviour when he had finished his work on earth. (See John xvii. throughout.) And something like this may be his language when all his mediatorial office is fulfilled in heaven. Then "God shall be all in all:"—that is, the universe shall be governed as before the mediatorial system was introduced. No more sacrifice for sin being needed, no more intercession for sinners will then be offered, nor will there remain any enemies to be subdued. Peace and harmony will be restored to our creation, and God alone will reign (as Macknight renders it) "over all things, in all places" of his dominion. We are not to suppose, however, that their obligation to the Saviour will ever be obliterated from the hearts of the redeemed, or that he will ever forget or neglect the purchase of his blood.

If this were not the case, says the apostle, "What shall they do who are baptized for [in hope of] the resurrection of the dead? and to fill up the ranks in the Christian army which

Ver. 18. Are perished.—This verse implies, that all who had been saved, were saved through Christ's death and resurrection.

Ver. 19. Most miserable.—Doddridge, "Pitiable."

Ver. 20. Become the first-fruits.—This is said in allusion to the law, Levit. xxiii. 10, 11. [The resurrection of Christ has been demonstrated, and our resurrection necessarily follows: as sure as the first-fruits are the proof that there is a harvest, so surely the resurrection of Christ is a proof of ours.]—Bagster.

Ver. 22 For as in Adam, &c.—The whole context shows, that the Apostle in this passage is speaking of the resurrection of the body, and has no reference to the future condition either of the righteous or the wicked. His meaning is, that, as the first Adam was the cause of natural death, so Christ, the second Adam, is the author of the resurrection.

Ver. 23. Afterward they that are Christ's.—This plainly shows that the resurrection of believers will be distinct, and precede that of the wicked.—At his coming—i. e. at his second coming to raise the dead, and judge the world.

Ver. 24. Then cometh the end.—[The mediatorial kingdom; an allusion to the case of Roman viceroys, or governors of provinces; who, when their administration was ended, delivered up their government into the hands of the emperor.]—Bagster.

Ver. 27. He is excepted—i. e. God the Father.

Ver. 29. Baptized for the dead.—[That is, probably, as Ellis and Doddridge interpret, "who are baptized in the room of the dead;" referring to the case of those who presented themselves for baptism immediately after the martyrdom of their brethren or friends; as if fresh soldiers should enlist and press forward to the assault, to supply the places of those who had fallen.]—Bagster. Macknight considers the passage as elliptical, and reads it, "Baptized for [the resurrection of] the dead." In Rob. Wahl the passage is thus paraphrased—If the dead do not rise, of what avail is it to expose ourselves to so many dangers in the hope of a future reward?

Ver. 31. I protest by your rejoicing.—Macknight, "By the boasting (which I have) on account of Christ Jesus." &c.

Ver. 32. If . . . I have fought, &c.—Lardner understands this hypothetically—"If I had"—and not that he literally did so 35 But some man will say, How [o] are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?

36 Thou fool, that [p] which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die:

41 There is one glory of the [s] sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory.

42 So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption:

are broken by death and martyrdom?" Or why do we stand continually exposed to the same dangers?—in jeopardy every hour, and daily living in the expectation of being called to die? If, speaking after the manner of men, I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, "when I was assaulted by the savage fury of Demetrius and his mob," (Acts xix. 24)—or if I even had encountered wild beasts in the theatre—whether I had escaped, or been destroyed, what reward would there remain for me, if the dead rise not?

In concluding this part of his subject, the apostle seems to intimate that the Corinthians had suffered, both in principle and practice, from their connexion with Epicurean philosophers and their disciples; this he insinuates in quoting a saying from a Greek poet, which had probably become a proverbial saying with them, as the translation has long been with us—"Evil communications corrupt good manners:" by which he evidently means, that associating with persons of infidel principles and corrupt morals, has a great tendency to corrupt the mind and manners. The apostle, therefore, attempts to rouse them from their delusion—that is, such of them as had been drawn into such connexions: "Awake to righteousness, and sin not!"

"O God! awake our souls to righteousness,
And on our hearts eternal things impress!"

Ver. 35—50. The resurrection of the dead.—The apostle now comes to explain, so far as the mysterious subject can be rendered intelligible to our present faculties, the nature of this resurrection; and this he does by analogy, comparing the death and resurrection of our bodies to the process of vegetation in the production of corn. It is true the subject might have been illustrated from other analogies, particularly from the natural history of insects; and the changes which human nature undergoes might have been well illustrated from the changes which pass on certain insects, from the caterpillar to the chrysalis, and from the chrysalis to the fly; whereby the creature which before crawled upon the earth, by means of passing through a state of insensibility, becomes the inhabitant of another region, and flies in the midst of heaven. So man goes to sleep a worm, and wakes an angel.

The analogy here used, seems to have been borrowed from a suggestion of our Lord himself, (John xii. 24,) that "except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die," it cannot bring forth fruit. There is one grand distinction, however, between the two cases: the grain of corn that vegetates brings forth many, even "thirty, sixty, or a hundred fold;" but in man, the individual which dies is alone restored to life. We do not think it necessary, or even appropriate, to enter into any philosophical inquiries, in this place, as to the nature of that death to which every grain of corn is subject in the earth. Whether it be absolute, or apparent only, like the chrysalis of the caterpillar, it is sufficient to illustrate the subject. The change of state in man, from death to immortal life, can hardly be more wonderful than that of the worm to the butterfly, or than that of an inert single grain of wheat to the wavy stalk and the golden ear. "But God giveth .... to every seed his, own body."

The identity of every body, and particularly of the human body, is a subject of great and insuperable difficulty with us. It is supposed to reside in some secret germ, known to the Creator. In the living body, indeed, we find no difficulty in proving its identity; but it is chiefly from its connexion with the same mind that we ascertain the fact. For if we consider the changes which a human body undergoes during the course of three or four score years, in size and in form, through the progress of age, the operations of nature, and the accidents of disease, it would seem in many cases impossible to identify the body, but from the residence of the same intellect, and the consciousness of the individual world. But as God, in the propagation of his creatures, gives to every kind its proper flesh, (whether beast, or bird, or fish,) and to every vegetable its proper form, &c., so will he associate to every human mind its proper body, though, whether composed of any or how many of the same particles, it may not be possible for us to ascertain.

"The single grain of wheat which is sown, (says Mr. Fuller,) does not reproduce itself, but produces another like itself: for to every seed is given its own body: that is, a body of its own nature or kind. So also is the resurrection of the dead. If the body do not retain the sameness of identity, it will produce the sameness of nature or kind. God giveth it a body as it pleaseth him, and to every seed its own body."

But the introduction of celestial bodies in this place—sun, moon, and stars, with birds, beasts, and fishes, seems to us mysterious and perplexing; unless, indeed, it be designed to intimate that the glorified bodies of the redeemed, at the resurrection, will as much exceed their present forms as the celestial orbs exceed those terrestrial bodies. So the prophet Daniel tells us, (ch. xii. 3,) that "then the wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever."

In this life, indeed, we all bear the image of the first Adam, "of the earth, earthy;" and at death this is sown a "natural body:" but in the last day it shall be raised a spiritual body, like that of "the second Adam, the Lord from heaven." The former was made "a living soul;" the latter Adam is "a quickening (a life-giving) spirit." And as we have borne the image of the earthy, so must we "bear the image of the heavenly;" or, as the same apostle elsewhere expresses it—"The Lord Jesus shall change our vile bodies, to be transformed like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself." (Phil. iii. 21.)

Could we accurately ascertain the nature of Christ's present

Ver. 36. Thou fool.—Doddridge, "Thoughtless creature."——Except it die.—Macknight, "rot." Doddridge, ("appear to) die." [That is, the germ, or principle of vegetable life, does not spring up in the form of a plant, till the external body, consisting of the lobes or farinaceous part of the seed, dies, and is decomposed; and thus, forming a fine earth, becomes the appropriate nourishment of the young plant that is springing into life, till it thus becomes capable of deriving nutriment and support from the grosser particles of earth in which it was deposited.]—Bagster.

Ver. 38. His own body.—Macknight, "its proper body." (Greek idion) i. e. "the body proper to its own kind." So Doddridge. Not the body which it had before: so this will not prove the identity of the resurrection body; but only, as Macknight expresses it, "The raised body of the saints will resemble their body which was laid in the grave, so far as their new state will admit." In one respect we know that they will materially differ. See Luke xx. 35. It is the general opinion, however, and is largely argued by Mr. Drew, in his ingenious Essay "On the Resurrection of the Body," chap. vi., that there is a principle of identity (some germ or stamen) which will be preserved till the resurrection; though what this is, it seems utterly in vain to conjecture.

Ver. 41. One star differeth from another star in glory.—This, it is probable, is literally true: we know of no two bodies in nature perfectly alike, nor any two bodies which have uniformly the same motion. This applies particularly to the heavenly bodies; and if we are to consider this (as many do) as referring metaphorically to the saints, it may be equally true that spiritual bodies have the same diversity, though all glorious. Though the earth is now supposed to have 800 millions of inhabitants, or more, it is probable that "the human face divine," in every instance, varies in some of its features.

Ver. 44. A spiritual body—Is a body refined from all the corruption and defilement attached to matter in the present state

Ver. 47. The Lord from heaven.—The word Lord is wanting in some ancient MSS., and Tertullian says, was inserted by Marcion; yet both Doddridge and Macknight retain it. The Vulgate reads, "The second man from heaven is heavenly." Dr. Pye Smith remarks, that in the ancient book Zohar, Messiah is called "The Adam on high;" and so distinguished from the first man, who is called the "Adam below."

Ver. 50 Flesh and blood—i. e. in its present corrupt state; or, as in the next membe, of the sentence, corruption. "Our bodies, after they are raised from the dead, (says Mr. Fuller,) may be flesh and blood, and yet not what they now are"

51 Behold, I show you a mystery; We [a] shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, 52 In a [b] moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the [c] trumpet shall sound, and the dead [d] shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.

53 For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal [e] must put on immortality.

54 So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death [f] is swallowed up in victory.

55 O [g] death, where is thy sting? O [h] grave, where is thy victory?

56 The [i] sting of death is sin; and [j] the strength of sin is the law.

57 But thanks [k] be to God, which giveth us the victory [l] through our Lord Jesus Christ.

58 Therefore, my beloved brethren, [m] be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord.

CHAPTER XVI.

1 He exhorteth them to relieve the want of the brethren at Jerusalem: 10 commendeth Timothy: 13 and after friendly admonitions, 16 shutteth up his epistle with divers salutations.

NOW concerning the collection for the saints, as [a] I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye.

2 Upon the first [b] day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come.

3 And when I come, whomsoever [c] ye shall approve by your letters, them will I send to bring your [d] liberality unto Jerusalem.

4 And if it be meet that I go also, they shall go with me.

5 Now I will come unto you, [e] when I shall pass through Macedonia: for I do pass through Macedonia.

6 And it may be that I will abide, yea, and winter with you, that ye may bring me on my journey whithersoever I go.

7 For I will not see you now by the way; but I trust to tarry a while with you, if the Lord permit.

8 But I will tarry at Ephesus until Pentecost.

9 For a great [f] door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many [g] adversaries.

10 Now if Timotheus [h] come, see that he may be with you without fear: for he worketh [i] the work of the Lord, as I also do.

11 Let no man therefore despise [j] him: but conduct [k] him forth in peace, that he may come unto me: for I look for him with the brethren.

12 As touching our brother [l] Apollos, I greatly desired him to come unto you with the brethren: but his will was not at all to come at this time; but he will come when he shall have convenient time.

13 Watch [m] ye, stand [n] fast in the faith, quit you like [o] men, be [p] strong.

body, we might also easily ascertain what ours will be. The apostle indeed says, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven,"—yet our Lord himself speaks of his raised body as composed of "flesh and bones," and as bearing the marks of his crucifixion. (Luke xxiv. 39—43.) In the same passage we find, also, that Jesus did EAT with them, even animal food, namely, a piece of "a broiled fish and of a honey-comb;" which seems clearly to imply that his resurrection body contained all the organs necessary to receiving food. We stop here, however, being desirous not to push our inquiries beyond the letter of the text, on subjects wherein we are so liable to err. When the glorious events here predicted shall be accomplished, we shall, doubtless, find reason to exclaim, with the queen of Sheba, that the half had not been told us.

Ver. 51—58. The effect of the last trumpet, and the Christian's final triumph!—"Behold! I show you a mystery," says the apostle. A mystery is a secret—but that secret may be, at least partially, revealed; and here a scene opens to us, full of "terrible majesty." The "trumpet of the archangel" shakes both earth and heaven, and the voice of God awakens the dead—that is, the dead saints, for they alone are referred to in this first resurrection. Poets and painters have amused themselves in sketching this awful scene, and have represented the awaking dead as crawling from beneath their tombs: but the event defies every attempt of human imagination—in a moment—in the twinkling of an eye—the dead saints are raised, and the living changed. It can be compared only to that Almighty fiat, "Let light be, and light was." (Gen. i. 3.)

And with what ease is all this effected, as relates to the happy subjects of this change—it is only a change of dress! The old garment of mortality and corruption shall be thrown off, and immortality put on: and then is fulfilled the saying of Isaiah, (ch. xxv. 8,) "Death is swallowed up in victory;" that is, not only conquered, but destroyed. And then the sacred writer borrows from another prophet (Hosea xiii. 14) this triumphant song, "O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?" Death is thus described by Milton as a hideous, shapeless monster,

> ——"Black as night,
> Fierce as ten furies, terrible as hell,
> He shook a dreadful dart; what seem'd his head,
> The likeness of a kingly crown had on."

But the sacred writers compare the monster to a dragon, whose sting is sin, and its wound always fatal; but, through the death of our Lord Jesus, that sting is drawn, and the poison is extracted.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1—24. Divers admonitions and salutations to the church at Corinth.—We humbly conceive, that the last verse of the preceding chapter connects more properly with the present. From the consideration of the resurrection, and judgment to come, the apostle earnestly exhorts the Corinthians to steadfastness and diligence in the work of the Lord, and especially in the duty of Christian benevolence, under the consideration that their labour "was not in vain," for great would be their reward in heaven. He then proceeds to urge upon them a provision for the poor saints; and particularly, as that was now the usual day of meeting for devotion, that on the first day of the week, each one should deposit something in the treasury of the church, as God had prospered him, for their poor brethren at Jerusalem, who were doubtless much harassed by their infidel countrymen in that city.

"The churches of Galatia and Phrygia (says Dr. Paley)

Ver. 51. We shall all be changed—i. e. We believers. Macknight. Nothing like this is said of the wicked. Compare Phil. iii. 21.

Ver. 52. The trumpet shall sound.—The awful sound of this trumpet is generally illustrated by a reference to the thunders of Sinai, which seem to have been attended with volcanic phenomena. See Heb. xii. 19. Bishop Berkeley, who heard an eruption of Vesuvius at twelve miles' distance, compares it to the raging together of a tempest and a troubled sea, mixed with the roaring of thunder and of artillery: and some of the volcanic eruptions of South America are said to have been heard from 150 to 600 miles. See Dick's Christ. Philos.

Ver. 54. Death is swallowed up in victory—Or, "for ever." Whitby and Macknight. Compare verse 26. But the same word is rendered victory in ver. 55 and 57.

Ver. 55. O grave.—Greek, Hades, or the invisible world. The Jews speak of the angel of death as having the keys of Hades; and St. Paul describes Satan under a similar character—"Him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil." Heb. ii. 14.

Ver. 56. The sting of death is sin.—For it is sin that arms death with all its terrors.—And the strength of sin is the law.—Because it is by the law that we have the knowledge, and feel the consequences of sin.

CHAP. XVI. Ver. 1. Concerning the collection.—"It is evident, that the Corinthians had been previously made acquainted with the apostle's intention, of raising a contribution from the Gentile churches for the poor Christians in Judea: and, as they were more wealthy than most of their brethren, he did not intimate even a doubt of their liberality in that good work. But he judged it proper to point out to them the method, about which he had given orders in the churches of Galatia, whence he had lately come."—Scott.

Ver. 2. First day of the week.—"The argument from this passage for the observance of the first day of the week, as 'the Lord's day,' the Christian sbbath, is very conclusive: for, unless that were the custom in apostolical churches, why should 'the first day of the week' be mentioned in this connexion? 'On Sunday,' says Justin Martyr, 'all Christians, in the city or country, meet together, because that is the day of our Lord's resurrection: and then we read the writings of the prophets and apostles. This being done, the president makes an oration to the assembly, exhorting them to imitate and do the things which they have heard; then we all join in prayer, and after that we celebrate the sacrament.'"—Scott.—Lay by him in store.—Doddridge, "Lay something by, treasuring it up;" namely, in the common stock. —Instead of in store, Macknight reads, "in the treasury;" i. e. the public stock of the church. This plan of setting apart, to benevolent uses, a portion of the gains of each week is admirably adapted to promote the spirit of liberality. The sums being comparatively small, avarice is not excited. But when the portion of a year's profits is looked at, it is so large that avarice fastens her talons upon it, and nothing short of the grace of God can unfasten her grasp.

Ver. 3. Your liberality.—Greek, "gift;" or, "grace."

Ver. 5. When I pass through Macedonia.—By chap. ii. it appears that Paul had been at Corinth, and by this verse, that he was about to visit it a second time. But instead of sailing directly from Ephesus to Corinth, as he had formerly purposed, he intended to go round through Macedonia; and that he did so, appears from Acts xx. 1, 2.

Ver. 8. I will tarry at Ephesus until Pentecost.—This, compared with verse 6—"And it may be, that I will winter with you," fixes the time of writing this Epistle—after winter, but before Pentecost: which includes the time of the Passover, about which time Benson, from chap. v. 7, 8, supposes it to have been written.

Ver. 9. For a great door and effectual.—See 2 Co. ii. 12. Col. iv. 3. Rev. iii. 8.

Ver. 10. If Timotheus come.—Timothy had been sent before the apostle into Macedonia, with directions to visit Corinth.

Ver. 12. Our brother Apollos.—It seems, that a party at Corinth professed 14 Let [q] all your things be done with charity.

15 I beseech you, brethren, (ye know the house of Stephanas, that it is [r] the first-fruits of Achaia, and that they have addicted themselves to the ministry of the saints,)
16 That ye submit [s] yourselves unto such, and to every one that helpeth with us, and laboureth.
17 I am glad of the coming of Stephanas and Fortunatus and Achaicus: for that which was lacking [t] on your part they have supplied.
18 For they have refreshed my spirit and yours: therefore acknowledge [u] ye them that are such.
19 The churches of Asia salute you. [v] Aquila and Priscilla salute you much in the Lord, with the [w] church that is in their house.
20 All the brethren greet you. Greet ye one another with a holy kiss.

were the last churches which Paul had visited before writing this Epistle. He was now at Ephesus, and he came thither immediately from visiting those churches, Acts xviii. 23; xix. 1." And when there, it is very evident that the same subject was strongly impressed on his mind; for speaking of the other apostles, Paul says, "They would that we should remember the poor; the same which I also was forward to do." This is one of many incidents remarked by this ingenious writer, to show the harmony between the book of Acts and the Apostolical Epistles, and which clearly prove their authenticity, as the circumstances are too minute and incidental to have occurred to any one who had attempted forgery. (See Horæ Paul. chap. iii. No. 10.) Another circumstance of a like nature is found in verse 11 of this chapter, where, speaking of Timothy to the Corinthians, Paul says, "Let no man despise him;" a charge given concerning no other of Paul's messengers; and what danger was there of his being despised more than others?—"Turn to 1 Tim. iv. 12, (says Paley,) and you will find that Timothy was a young man, younger probably than those who were usually employed in the Christian ministry; and that Paul, apprehending lest he should on that account be exposed to contempt, urges upon him the caution there inserted, Let no man despise thy youth.

After a friendly assurance of his kind wishes and intentions toward the Corinthians, and a friendly apology on behalf of Apollos, the apostle gives them this animating exhortation—"Watch ye, stand fast in the Lord, quit yourselves like men"—all which, as military terms, are highly appropriate to the Christian soldier, who has to watch, as well as fight with principalities and powers—with "the world, the flesh, and the devil." At the same time, while his utmost energies are to be thus exerted, the kindest affections are to be exemplified toward his brethren—"Let all things be done with charity," or Christian love. He particularly recommends to their attention "the house of Stephanas," who had "addicted themselves to the ministry (or service) of the saints." Then, after certain salutations, he thus solemnly concludes:—"If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be"—he shall be—"Anathema Maran-atha"—"accursed when the Lord shall come." "To conclude all, (says Dr. Doddridge,) let us lay up in our memory, and often review this awful sentence, this Anathema Maran-atha; which, to give it the greater weight, the apostle records with his own hand. Let it ever be remembered that professing Christians, who do not sincerely love their Master, lie under the heaviest curse which an apostle can pronounce, or God inflict."

themselves attached to Apollos, in order to cover their opposition to the apostle: yet St. Paul greatly desired and exhorted that eminent minister to go among them, with Timothy and Erastus, or with Stephanas and his friends, when they returned to Corinth.

Ver. 22. Anathema Maran-atha.—"When the Jews lost the power of life and death, they used, nevertheless, to pronounce an Anathema on persons who, according to the Mosaic law, should have been executed, and such a person became an Anathema, (Heb. Cherem,) or accursed. . . . . Now, to express their faith that God would, one way or another . . . . interpose, to add that efficacy to his own sentence which they could not give it, it is very probable they might use the words Maran-atha; that is, in Syriac, the Lord cometh, or he will surely and quickly come to put this sentence in execution. . . . In beautiful allusion to this, when the apostle was speaking of a secret alienation from Christ, maintained under the forms of Christianity, (which might perhaps be the case among many of the Corinthians,) as this was not a crime capable of being convicted and censured in the Christian church, he reminds them that the Lord Jesus Christ will come himself and punish it."—Bishop Patrick in Doddridge. This is the passage supposed to be referred to in the preceding verse, as written with his own hand. Flavel, on one occasion, preached from the above passage. At the conclusion of the service, when Flavel arose to pronounce the benediction, he paused, and said, "How shall I bless this whole assembly, when every person in it, who loveth not the Lord Jesus Christ, is Anathema Maran-atha?" The solemnity of this address affected the audience; and one gentleman, a person of rank, was so overcome by his feelings, that he fell senseless to the floor.

P. S. The superscription to this Epistle, which states it to have been written from Philippi, is so plainly opposed to verse 8, in this chapter, and to other parts of this Epistle, that it is almost universally rejected as spurious and unauthentic; particularly by Doddridge, Macknight, and Paley. The former says, "I hope it will be remembered, that no credit is to be given to any of these additions, which have been very presumptuously made, and, I think, very imprudently retained."

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE FIRST EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

[CORINTH, favoured by its situation between two seas, rose to the summit of dignity and splendour. From its extensive commerce, it abounded with riches, and was furnished with all the accommodations, elegances, and superfluities of life; and far exceeded all the cities in the world in the magnificence of its public buildings, such as temples, palaces, theatres, porticoes, cenotaphs, baths, and other edifices. But wealth produced luxury, and luxury a total corruption of manners; so that the inhabitants became infamous to a proverb, lasciviousness in particular being not only tolerated, but forming a considerable portion of their religion. Notwithstanding this, the arts, sciences, and literature, still continued to flourish, every part of the Grecian learning being highly cultivated; so that before its destruction by the Romans, Cicero (pro lege Manl. c. 5.) scrupled not to call it, "The light of all Greece." It possessed numerous schools, in which philosophy and rhetoric were taught by able masters; and strangers resorted thither from all quarters to be instructed in the sciences. Attention to these circumstances will account for several things mentioned by the Apostle in his letters to this city; which things, without this knowledge of their previous Gentile state and customs, we could not comprehend. It is indubitably certain, as the Apostle states, that they carried these things to an extent that was never practised in any other Gentile country; and yet, even in Corinth, the Gospel of Jesus Christ, effecting what learning and philosophy were utterly unable to accomplish, prevailed over universal corruption and depravity, so much so that it became the seat of a flourishing Christian church! We have already seen, that the peace of this church had been disturbed by false teachers, who made great pretensions to wisdom, eloquence, and knowledge of the Christian liberty; and that it was to compose these differences, to correct certain abuses, and to answer various questions relative to which they had written to the Apostle, that he composed this Epistle to the Church of Corinth. With what consummate skill and soundness of argument he establishes doctrines, meets objections, and refutes erroneous opinions, the attentive reader need not be informed; while his candour, love, faithfulness, and holy zeal, are apparent in every page. The Corinthians abounded in knowledge, science, eloquence, and various extraordinary gifts and endowments, and for these the Apostle gives them full credit; but, in many cases, distinctly enough marked in this Epistle, they were grossly ignorant of the genius and design of the gospel. Many, since their time, have put words and observances in place of the weightier matters of the law, and the spirit of the gospel. The Apostle has taken great pains to correct these abuses among the Corinthians; and to insist on that great unchangeable and eternal truth, that love to God and man, filling the heart, hallowing the passions, regulating the affections, and producing universal benevolence and beneficence, is the fulfilling of the whole law; and that all professions, knowledge, and gifts, without this, are absolutely useless. Did this Epistle contain no more than what is found in the thirteenth chapter, it would be an unparalleled monument of the Apostle's deep acquaintance with God; and an invaluable record of the sum and substance of the gospel, left by God's mercy to the church, as a touchstone for the trial of creeds, confessions of faith, and ritual observances, to the end of time. Though this Epistle contains more local matter, and more matter of private application, than any other in the New Testament; and though, perhaps, it may possess less matter for general use than other parts of the Sacred Writings, yet it is both highly interesting and useful: gives an insight into several customs, and not a few forms of speech, and circumstances relative to the discipline of the primitive church, which we can find no where else; shows us how many improper things may, in a state of ignorance, or Christian infancy, be consistent with a sincere belief of the gospel, and a warm and zealous attachment to it; reads a very awful lesson to those who disturb the peace of society, and make schisms in the church of Christ, and confirms, illustrates, and defends, many of the most important parts of Christian doctrine and practice.]—Bagster.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

[THAT St. Paul was the author of this Epistle has never been doubted, and is amply confirmed by internal evidence; from which it appears, that it was written by the Apostle in Macedonia, and probably at Philippi, as the subscription affirms, after the uproar at Ephesus, about a year after the preceding, and in consequence of the accounts which he had received of the favourable reception of the first; and afterwards sent to the Corinthians by Titus and his associates. Accordingly the Apostle justifies himself from the charge of levity, or worldly policy, in delaying his journey to Corinth, assigning those reasons for this part of his conduct which could not have been disclosed with propriety till the effect of his former epistle had appeared: declares the justice of his sentence against the incestuous person, and gives suitable directions respecting his restoration; expatiates on his own conduct in the Christian ministry, intermixing many exhortations with the avowal of his motives and fervent affections in the sacred work; excites them, with great address and earnestness, to complete their contributions for their poor brethren in Judea, showing the manifold advantages of such services; contrasts more directly, yet evidently with great reluctance, his own gifts, labours, sufferings, and conduct, with the pretences of their false teachers, showing himself to be "not a whit" inferior to any of the apostles; and concludes with various admonitions and affectionate good wishes and prayers.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER I.

The apostle encourageth them against troubles, by the comforts and deliverances which they had given unto him: 12 and by the uprightness of his ministry in his abode at Ephesus, and journey in Asia. 12 And calling both his own conscience and them to witness of his sincere manner of preaching the immutable truth of the gospel, 15 he excuseth his not coming to them, as proceeding not of lightness, but of his lenity towards them.

PAUL, an apostle [a] of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, unto the church of God which is at Corinth, with all the saints [b] which are in all Achaia:

2 Grace [c] be to you and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 Blessed [d] be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort;

4 Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble by the comfort, wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God.

5 For as the sufferings [e] of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ.

6 And whether we be afflicted, it is for [f] your consolation and salvation, which is [g] effectual in the enduring of the same sufferings which we also suffer: or whether we be comforted, it is for your consolation and salvation.

7 And our hope of you is steadfast, knowing, that as [h] ye are partakers of the sufferings, so shall ye be also of the consolation.

8 For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble [i] which came to us in Asia, that we were pressed out of measure, above strength, insomuch that we despaired even of life:

9 But we had the [j] sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust [k] in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead:

10 Who [l] delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver: in whom we trust that he will yet deliver us;

11 Ye also helping [m] together by prayer for us, that for the gift bestowed upon us by the means of many persons thanks may be given by many on our behalf.

12 For our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not [n] with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of [o] God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you ward.

13 For we write none other things unto you, than what ye read or acknowledge; and I trust ye shall acknowledge even to the end;

14 As also ye have acknowledged us in part, that [p] we are your rejoicing, even as ye also are ours in the day of the Lord Jesus.

15 And in this confidence I was minded to come unto you before, that ye might have a second [q] benefit;

16 And to pass by you into Macedonia, and to come again out of Macedonia unto you, and of you to be brought on my [r] way toward Judea.

17 When I therefore was thus minded, did I use lightness? or the things that I purpose, do I purpose according [s] to the flesh, that with me there should be yea yea, and nay nay?

18 But as God is true, our [t] word toward you was not [u] yea and nay.

19 For the [v] Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me and Silvanus and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, but in him was yea.

20 For all the promises of God [w] in him are yea, and in him Amen, unto the glory of God by us.

21 Now he which establisheth [x] us with you in Christ, and hath anointed [y] us, is God;

22 Who hath also sealed [z] us, and given the earnest of the Spirit [a] in our hearts.

23 Moreover I call God for a record upon

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—24. Paul, after his usual apostolical benediction, thanks God on behalf of the Corinthian church, and encourages them under their trials.—This Epistle, as stated in our Table of Apostolical Epistles, appears to have been written within a year after the preceding; and probably, as mentioned at the end of it, from Philippi in Macedonia. To understand this Epistle rightly, the reader must be informed, that Titus, who seems to have been the bearer of the first Epistle, as well as of this, (chap. viii. 17, 18,) spent some time in Corinth, in order to obtain a correct knowledge of the state and circumstances of that church, and of their feelings towards the apostle, which he communicated to him, when they met in Macedonia; and it is evident that upon his information, are founded both the commendations and reproofs in this epistle. But these are not all to be considered as addressed to the same individuals; for it is clear that this church was composed of very heterogeneous materials—Jews and Gentiles, saints and hypocrites; and while some were entitled to Paul's warmest commendations, others merited his severest censures.

Dr. Doddridge remarks, that out of St. Paul's thirteen Epistles, "eleven of them begin with exclamations of joy, praise, and thanksgiving," which fact sufficiently shows his amiable disposition, and the deep interest which the apostle felt in the prosperity and happiness of the churches. The doctrine here insinuated is also highly interesting and important, namely, that ministers, and even apostles, enjoy and endure, not only the common lot of joy and suffering in their own persons, but, being public characters, both the afflictions which they endure, and the consolations which they enjoy, are all intended for the instruction and consolation of the church of Christ; that they (ministers) may be "able to comfort those who are in any trouble." And the advantage is reciprocal: ministers partake (ver. 11) in the prayers and sympathies of their people.

As an instance of this, St. Paul appears to advert to the opposition he had met with in Ephesus, when he was in danger of being torn to pieces by the mob that Demetrius had raised, (Acts xix. 30, 31;) when his friends, as he acknowledges, interested themselves for him in prayer to God, as well as by their personal exertions on his behalf.

"The consolation of which the apostle speaks" so strongly in this chapter, says Dr. Macknight very justly, "was derived from the presence of Christ with him in his affliction; from a sense of the love of Christ shed abroad in his heart; from the joy which the success of the gospel gave him; from the assured hope of the reward which was prepared for him; from his knowledge of the influence of his sufferings to encourage others; and from the enlarged views which he had of the government of God, whereby all things are made to work together for good to them who love him."

But the concluding verses of this chapter are of peculiar interest and importance, and must not be passed without a remark or two.—5. We note the stability of the gospel: all the promises of God are in him, [Christ,] yea, i. e. plainly asserted; and in him, amen, or faithfully accomplished, "to the glory of God."—2. By "the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts," we understand those divine influences which our Lord promised to all believers, to guide them into truth and righteousness; and which may properly be considered as an "earnest" of those higher influences which shall finally prepare them for heaven and glory. "As we are born again by the Spirit, (says Bishop Pearson,) and receive from him our regeneration, so we are assured by the same Spirit of our adoption; and because, being 'sons,' we are also 'heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ,' by the same Spirit we have the pledge, or rather 'the earnest of our inheritance.' For 'He which establisheth us in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God, who hath also sealed us, and hath given the earnest of his Spirit

CHAP. I. Ver. 1. And Timothy.—By this it appears that Timothy had returned to Paul, in Macedonia, and was now with him.

Ver. 5. The sufferings of Christ.—Macknight, "for Christ." Doddridge explains it; "sufferings in the cause of Christ."

Ver. 9. The sentence of death.—Meaning that death was fully expected by them.

Ver. 10. So great.—Macknight, "So terrible,"—a death.

Ver. 11. Ye also helping together by prayer.—Doddridge, "Working together in prayer."——That for the gift bestowed upon us.—Doddridge, "That so the favour [obtained] for us by [the importunate] prayers of many."

Ver. 12. In simplicity and godly sincerity.—Gr. "In the simplicity and sincerity of God;" i. e. in the sight of God. On the latter word Leigh says, "A fine word: it is a metaphor, either from such things as are tried by being held up against the beams of the sun, to see what faults are in them; or else from such things as are purged and clarified by the heat of the sun from the gross matter that is in them. Mel sincerus, is honey sine cera, or without wax."——Conversation—[That is, "we have conducted ourselves:" for anastrepho in Greek and conversatio in Latin are used to denote the whole of a man's conduct, the tenor and practice of his life.]—Bagster.

Ver. 13. Than what ye read—i. e. in the Scriptures; but as the word is ambiguous, Doddridge renders it, "Than what you know."

Ver. 15. A second benefit.—Gr. "grace," or gift; meaning the advantage of Paul's personal ministry a second time.

Ver. 17. Yea yea, &c.—That is, honest and plain dealing.

Ver. 18. Our word.—Meaning the word preached.——Not yea and nay.—Not wavering, uncertain, or contradictory. So Doddridge my soul, that to spare you I came not as yet unto Corinth.

24 Not for that we have [b] dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy: for by [c] faith ye stand.

CHAPTER II.

Having showed the reason why he came not to them, 6 he requireth them to forgive and to comfort that excommunicated person, 10 even as himself also upon his true repentance had forgiven him: 12 declaring withal why he departed from Troas to Macedonia, 14 and the happy success which God gave to his preaching in all places.

BUT I determined this with myself, that I would not come again to you in [a] heaviness.

2 For if I make you sorry, who is he then that maketh me glad, but the same which is made sorry by me?

3 And I wrote this same unto you, lest, when I came, I should have sorrow from them of whom I ought to rejoice; having confidence in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all.

4 For out of much affliction and anguish of heart I wrote unto you with many tears; not that ye should be grieved, but that ye might know the love [b] which I have more abundantly unto you.

5 But if [c] any have caused grief, he hath not grieved [d] me, but in part: that I may not overcharge you all.

6 Sufficient to such a man is this [e] punishment, which was inflicted [f] of many.

7 So [g] that contrariwise ye ought rather to forgive him, and comfort him, lest perhaps such a one should be swallowed up with overmuch sorrow.

8 Wherefore I beseech you that ye would confirm your love toward him.

9 For to this end also did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient [h] in all things.

10 To whom ye forgive any thing, I forgive also: for if I forgave any thing, to whom I forgave it, for your sakes forgave I it in the [i] person of Christ;

11 Lest Satan should get an advantage of us: for we are not ignorant of his devices.

12 Furthermore, when I came to Troas to preach Christ's gospel, and a [k] door was opened unto me of the Lord, 13 I had no rest [l] in my spirit, because I found not Titus my brother: but taking my leave of them, I went from thence into Macedonia.

14 Now thanks be unto God, [m] which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the savour [n] of his knowledge by us in every place.

15 For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them [o] that are saved, and in them that perish:

16 To [p] the one we are the savour of death unto death; and to the other the savour of life unto life. And who [q] is sufficient for these things?

17 For we are not as many, which [r] corrupt the word of God: but as of sincerity, but as [s] of God, in the sight of God speak we [t] in Christ.

CHAPTER III.

1 Lest their false teachers should charge him with vain glory, he showeth the faith and graces of the Corinthians to be a sufficient commendation of his ministry. 6 Whereupon entering a comparison between the ministers of the law and of the gospel, 12 he proveth that his ministry is so far the more excellent, as the gospel of Life and Liberty is more glorious than the law of condemnation.

DO we begin again to commend [a] ourselves? or need we, as some others, epistles [b] of in our hearts..... The Spirit of God, as given unto us in this life, (continues that excellent prelate,) though it have not the proper nature of a pledge, as in the gifts received here being no way equivalent to the promised reward, nor given in the stead of any thing already due; yet it is to be looked upon as an earnest, being part of that reward which is promised."

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—17. The reasons that Paul had not come to Corinth—the case of the person excommunicated—the triumph of Paul's ministry.—If we understand the opening of this chapter, it is to this effect: That he delayed coming to the Corinthians, lest, from what he had heard of them, he should be compelled to treat them with severity, and thereby grieve them; at the same time nothing would give him more joy than to see the penitence of the offenders; and he had no doubt but the whole church would rejoice with him. He then adverts to the case of the person whom, according to his direction in the first Epistle, (chap. v.,) they had excommunicated from the church for the complicated crimes of incest and adultery; but who now seemed so deeply to have bewailed his situation, that the same apostle, who before urged his exclusion from the church, now exhorts them to forgive and comfort him, lest Satan should gain advantage over them, by driving him to despair; and, at the same time, lest the false teachers should also take advantage, by representing (as many have since done) the doctrines of St. Paul as having that fatal tendency.

The chapter closes with a hymn of thanksgiving, and an allusion to a Roman triumph. According to Macknight, the apostle represents Christ as a victorious general, riding in a triumphal procession through the world, attended by his apostles, prophets, evangelists, and other ministers of the gospel, and followed by all the idolatrous nations as his captives. (Compare Rev. vi. 2; xix. 11, &c.) Among these the preachers of the gospel diffused the smell [savour] of the knowledge of Christ, [in a manner as fragrant flowers and perfumes were liberally scattered in a Roman triumph.] This knowledge, to those who believed, was ["a savour of life," or] a vivifying smell, [or savour,] ending in life to them; but to unbelievers, it was as little fragrant or grateful as the odours of the procession to those condemned to die (as were many of the captives, in the close of the procession: it was a smell [or savour] of death, [to unbelievers,] ending in death, if they continued in unbelief." Thus, in the success of the gospel, we have triumphs of grace in those who are thereby converted; and triumphs of justice, in those who obstinately reject it, to their own condemnation and ruin. In both cases, however, the faithful servants of Christ are accepted and approved; because their labours, however weak without divine support, are sincere and upright, as in the sight of God.

Ministers, it has been justly remarked, should diffuse the savour of Christ in their example and their conversation, as well as in their public ministry.

> "When one that holds communion with the skies,
> Has fill'd his urn where these pure waters rise,
> And once more mingles with us meaner things,
> 'Tis e'en as if an angel shook his wings;
> Immortal fragrance fills the circuit wide,
> That tells us whence his treasures are supplied."—Cowper.

But to God himself faithful ministers "are a sweet savour of Christ [both] in them that are saved, and in them that perish."—"We serve a good Master, (says an eloquent and able preacher.) Duty only is ours; and even with regard to this, he allows us to depend upon him for ability to discharge it; and in estimating our services, he admits into the account, not only all that we do, but all that we intend and wish to do, but in which we are hindered; and says, 'It is well that it was in thine heart.'"

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—18. The ministry of the gospel commended in preference to the law.—The false teachers and sectarian leaders had probably introduced themselves at Corinth by letters of recommendation, artfully obtained from some of the churches in Judea; but Paul had better credentials. He

Ver. 23. To spare you, I came not as yet unto Corinth—i. e. as Doddridge explains it, it was from tenderness towards the Corinthians. So Macknight, "To avoid punishing you, I have not as yet come to Corinth,"—wishing to give you time to repent.

Ver. 24. Not that we have dominion over your faith.—The apostles were only servants of Christ, and had no authority but what they derived from him, and from the teachings of the Holy Spirit. See Mat. xx. 25.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. In heaviness.—Doddridge, "in grief."

Ver. 2. Who.... but the same that is made sorry by me?—Doddridge, grieved by me."

Ver. 3. The joy of you all—i. e. you all rejoice with me.

Ver. 5. Not grieved me, but in part—i. e. "not grieved me (only) but in part," or in a degree, all of you.

Ver. 6. This punishment.—Doddridge, "rebuke."——Inflicted of many—Namely, according to Doddridge, "by the whole church."

Ver. 10. For your sakes—i. e. to restore peace and union to your body.——Of Christ—i. e. as clothed with his authority.

Ver. 11. Lest Satan should get an advantage of us.—Macknight, "That we may not be over reached by Satan."

Ver. 13. I had no rest.... because I found not Titus—Whom he had sent to Corinth to make inquiries, and who had not returned.

Ver. 14. Causeth us to triumph.—["Who carrieth us along in triumph;" an allusion to the custom of victorious generals, who, in their triumphal processions, carried some of their relatives with them in their chariot.——The savour of his knowledge.—In triumphs, the streets through which the victor passed, were strewed with flowers; the temples were opened, and every altar smoked with offerings and incense, so that the whole city was filled with the perfume. Behind the triumphal car followed the kings, princes, and other captives of note, loaded with chains; some of whom were put to death at the close of the procession, and others had their lives granted them. To the former the smell of the flowers and incense would be "a savour of death unto death," and to the latter, "a savour of life unto life."]—Bagster

Ver. 17. Which corrupt.—Doddridge, "adulterate." He thinks it refers to those who deal in wines and other liquors, and often lower them with water. See Isa. i. 22.

commendation to you, or letters of commendation from you?

2 Ye [c] are our epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men:

3 Forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of [d] stone, but [e] in fleshy tables of the heart.

4 And such trust have we through Christ to God-ward:

5 Not that we are sufficient of [f] ourselves to think any thing as of ourselves; but [g] our sufficiency is of God;

6 Who also hath made us able [h] ministers of the [i] new testament; not of the [j] letter, but of the spirit: for the [k] letter killeth, but [l] the spirit [m] giveth life.

7 But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses [n] for the glory of his countenance; which glory was to be done away:

8 How shall not the ministration of the spirit be rather glorious?

9 For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory.

10 For even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth.

11 For [o] if that which was done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious.

12 Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great [p] plainness of speech:

13 And not as Moses, which put a veil over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end [q] of that which is abolished:

14 But their minds were [r] blinded: for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the old testament; which veil is done away in Christ.

15 But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart.

16 Nevertheless when it shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken [s] away.

17 Now the Lord [t] is that Spirit: and where the [u] Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.

CHAPTER IV.

1 He declareth how he hath used all sincerity and faithful diligence in preaching the gospel, 7 and how the troubles and persecutions which he daily endured for the same redound to the praise of God's power, 12 to the benefit of the church, 16 and to the apostle's own eternal glory.

THEREFORE seeing we have this ministry, as we have received [a] mercy, we faint not;

2 But have renounced the hidden things of [b] dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God [c] deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God.

3 But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them [d] that are lost:

4 In whom the god [e] of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image [f] of God, should shine unto them.

appeals to their own hearts, in many of which he well knew his name was deeply inscribed: they had each an interest in the affections of the other. He appeals also to their experience: whatever evidence they possessed of their own conversion and sanctification, was to them a most forcible argument in his favour, since he had been the honoured instrument of their conversion. They were "the epistle of Christ," and "written by the Spirit of God," to whom he gives all the glory. On this passage, Dr. Watts beautifully remarks, that every true believer has in himself such a witness to the truth of the Christian religion, as does not depend on "the exact truth of letters and syllables, nor on the critical knowledge of the copies of the Bible, nor on this old manuscript, or the other new translation. . . . . The substance of Christianity is so scattered through all the New Testament, that every manuscript and every translation has enough of the gospel to save souls by it, and make a man a Christian. I think this point of great importance in our age, which has taken so many steps to heathenism and infidelity; for this argument or evidence will defend a Christian in the profession of the true religion, though he may not have skill enough to defend his Bible. . . . . Why do you believe in Jesus? [asks the unbeliever.] If you have this answer ready at hand, I have found the efficacy and power of the gospel in my heart, this will be sufficient to answer every cavil." (Watts' Sermons.)

This work of grace in the hearts of the Corinthians, the apostle considers as a letter of recommendation to them, far preferable to any epistle written with ink or engraved on stone. He is careful, however, that nothing should be attributed to himself, but that all his success should be referred to God, by whose grace alone both himself and his colleagues had been made able and efficient ministers of the New Testament, (or covenant,) not of the Old, the letters of which were cut in tables of stone, but of the Spirit; that is, the spiritual dispensation of the gospel, the truths of which are written upon the hearts of all true Christians. The letter of the divine law could, indeed, only give the knowledge of sin and its penalty —death; but the latter was, on the contrary, adapted to communicate life and spirit—It is "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus." (Rom. viii. 2.)

That ministration was, indeed, attended with some glory, a glory with which the countenance of the legislator (Moses) was emblematically surrounded; still, however, it was the ministration of death, for it could not give life; but, notwithstanding that dispensation was not without glory, how much more glorious must that be which communicates eternal life! Moses found it necessary to wear a veil, and to this day his law is veiled by the unbelief of his nation; nor shall that veil be taken from their hearts till they shall turn to the Lord Jesus as the true Messiah, who is himself the soul and spirit of the new dispensation; by whom we are liberated from the bondage of the law and the obscurity of the types. Indeed, as Moses, by looking to the glory of the Shechinah, was himself clothed with glory, so we, beholding in the gospel, as in a resplendent mirror, the glory of the Lord Jesus, are changed into the same image, from one degree of grace and glory to another, till, by his spirit, we are completely transformed into our Redeemer's glorious image.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—18. The sincerity, trials, and triumphs of Paul and his brethren.—Having, in the preceding chapter, stated the superior excellence of the gospel above the law, St. Paul here states the encouragement which he and his brethren derived therefrom in its promulgation. Having thereby obtained mercy themselves, they were anxious, at all risks, to preach it for the salvation of others, and determined to do it with the greatest simplicity and integrity. If, indeed, their gospel was hidden beneath a veil, it should not be by any artifice of theirs. They would not leave it concealed under the veil of Mosaic types and ceremonies, to which the Judaizing teachers were prone to return, nor would they veil it with the false philosophy of the Greeks or Asiatics; neither would they adulterate or debase it by any dishonest arts, such as vintners

5 For we preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake.

6 For God, who commanded [g] the light to shine out of darkness, [h] hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

7 But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency [i] of the power may be of God, and not of us.

9 Persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed;

11 For we which live are [n] alway delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh.

12 So then [o] death worketh in us, but life in you.

13 We having the same [p] spirit of faith, according as it is written, [q] I believed, and therefore have I spoken; we also believe, and therefore speak;

14 Knowing [r] that he which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by Jesus, and shall present us with you.

15 For [s] all things are for your sakes, that the abundant grace [t] might through the thanksgiving of many redound to the glory of God.

16 For which cause [u] we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward [v] man is renewed day by day.

17 For [w] our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory;

18 While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not [x] seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal.

CHAPTER V.

1 That in his assured hope of immortal glory, 9 and in expectance of it, and of the general judgment, he laboureth to keep a good conscience. 12 not that he may herein boast of himself, 14 but as one that, having received life from Christ, endeavoureth to live to a new end more to Christ only. 18 and by his ministry of reconciliation to reconcile others also in Christ to God.

FOR we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle [a] were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house [b] not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

2 For in this we [c] groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven:

3 If so be that being clothed we shall not be found [d] naked.

4 For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality [e] might be swallowed up of life.

of those times (as well as of our own) were known to practise. If the gospel they preached was veiled, it was veiled only to those who were perishing through their own obstinacy and unbelief: whose minds Satan, "the god of this world," hath blinded, "lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ should shine upon them."

Here observe—"1. That God and Satan are placed in contrast: the latter darkens the understanding by his influences, whence the Jews call him Samael, the god who blinds; but the true God, on the contrary, illuminates the understandings of men by the grace of his Holy Spirit. [He is light, and in him is no darkness.] 2. That this work of illumination in the mind is compared to the first creation of 'light out of darkness,' as being wrought in the same sovereign, efficacious, and instantaneous manner."—(Hist. Def.)

When Satan, is, however, called the "god of this world," we must not understand it as conferring upon him any title of honour, any more than our Lord's calling him "the prince of this world," (John xii. 31,) conferred on him a rightful dominion. As a prince he is a usurper, and as a deity an idol: he is a prince without right, and a god without divinity.

When the apostle says, "We preach not ourselves," the declaration may be fairly understood to imply that they sought neither to gratify their vanity, nor promote their secular interest, nor to raise a religious party; by all which motives, it is to be feared, the Judaizing teachers who opposed him were more or less influenced. The apostles preached not to advance their fame, their interest, or their authority; but as the faithful servants of Christ, solely to promote the glory of their Master and the salvation of mankind. "For our parts, (as if he had said,) we are but frail and earthen vessels, of little value and of less strength; yet, worthless as we are, to us is committed the invaluable treasure of the gospel; and we, therefore, in the midst (though continually exposed to death) of dangers and of enemies, are preserved that we may be to you the means and instruments of eternal life and salvation."

The apostle then states what it was that supported him and his colleagues under all their trials—it was looking from things temporal to things eternal; and weighing against their present momentary afflictions, a vast, accumulating, and eternal weight of glory.

"From dreams on earth we move,
And wake through death to endless life above."—Parnell

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—10. The desire of immortality, the expectation of a future judgment, and the practical influence of these doctrines.—In the opening of this chapter the apostle draws a beautiful comparison between the feeble body which we here inhabit, and which he compares to a tent—which is a temporary erection easily removed; and the permanent habitation—the everlasting mansions which our Saviour is gone to prepare for all his people. This tent of human flesh is far from weather-proof; it is liable to cracks, and rents, or (to drop the metaphor) it is exposed to a variety of mortal ills, as well as to the attacks of cruel enemies. We, therefore, "groan, being burthened," not merely from a desire to rid ourselves of "this mortal coil," but from a desire to enter into that immortal residence which is provided for us in another world—whereinto Christ, our fore-runner, is for us entered.

We here pause a few moments to remark upon the evidence which this chapter affords of an intermediate state between death and judgment. Dr. Sam. Clarke, in a judicious discourse from this text, remarks—"1. That we must all shortly be absent or separate from the body. 2. That this state is not a state of absolute insensibility; but, 3. to good men, a state of great happiness, a being present with the Lord. 4. The consideration of this intermediate happiness is a great comfort and support against the fear of death; we are confident, and willing rather to be absent from the body, &c. 5. This intermediate state, though a state of happiness, is by no means equal to that happiness which good men shall be possessed of after the resurrection." (See Robinson's Claude.)

Of these propositions we shall here offer some confirmatory

Ver. 7. In earthen vessels.—In us frail creatures, continually exposed to be crushed and broken. The original (ostrakinois) seems by its derivation to refer to the shells of fishes, some of which, while they are extremely frail, inclose treasures of great value; as the shell of the porphyry, from which fish was extracted the famous Tyrian dye.—May be of God.—Doddridge, "appear to be of God."

Ver. 8. Troubled on every side, yet not distressed.—We conceive, "Pressed on every side, but not crushed," would be more literal and expressive. Hammond and Macknight think it refers to the wrestlers in the public games, who sometimes so griped their adversaries, as to deprive them of the power of resistance.

Ver. 9. Cast down, but not destroyed.—Another allusion, perhaps, to wrestlers, who might be "thrown down, when not killed," nor "disabled."

Ver. 10. The dying—That is, marks of sufferings analogous to his. See chap. i. 5, 6; and compare these verses with 1 Epis. chap. iv. 11—13.

Ver. 12. Death worketh in us, &c.—i. e. "we are dying daily that you may live."

Ver. 14. Knowing that, &c.—That is, we regard not the sufferings of our bodies, however fatal, since we know that, if killed, our bodies shall be raised again at the last day. See 1 Epist. xv. 19, &c.

Ver. 17. Light affliction.—Mat. xi. 30, the same epithet, "light," is applied by our Lord to the yoke and burden which he lays on us. It may be labour—it may be suffering—but both are light, extremely so, compared with the reward.—A far more, &c.—Upon this passage the eloquent Chrysostom remarks, that the apostle here "opposes things present to things future, a moment to eternity, lightness to weight, affliction to glory: nor is he satisfied with this, but he adds another word, and doubles it, saying, hyperbole upon hyperbole, (so the Greek,) that is, 'a greatness excessively exceeding.'"—Weight of glory.—This is a Hebrew idiom: the same word which in that language signifies weight, signifies also glory.

Ver. 18. While we look.—"The word, skopein, (says Macknight,) properly signifies to look at a mark which we intend to hit"—to aim—so Doddridge.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1. If our earthly house of this tabernacle.—The Hebrew term for "house" (Beth) is of very extensive use. It seems used for a tent, Gen. xxvii. 15; compare Heb. xi 9. Mr. Harmer says, "The Persians call a richly ornamented tent a house of gold." Macknight renders this verse, "When our house which is a tent, is destroyed." So the Greek participle (cata) is used for when, John xii. 32; 1 John iii. 2. We also refer "destroyed" to "dissolved," because the word strictly means to take or throw down, or pull to pieces, which is peculiarly applicable to a "tent." (So Hippocrates, "the soul having left the tabernacle of the body." The contrast here between a tabernacle or tent erected for a shelter for a time, and a house, or permanent abode, is very striking.—Bengel.

Ver. 2. For in this [tabernacle or tent] we groan earnestly; desiring to be clothed.—To be "clothed with a house," seems a harsh figure to us, but is quite in the Jewish taste; the Book Zohar, on Exod. xxiv. 18, says, Moses was "clothed with the cloud;" so we read in the book of Revelations, of an angel "clothed with a cloud," and of a woman "clothed with the sun." (Rev. x. 1; xii. 1.) The word "house," is also used for any part of dress: a veil is the "house of the face;" a glove, the "house of the fingers." The sacred writers also apply the term clothed, as we do habit; so they speak of being clothed with humility, or with shame, (1 Pet. v. 5; Ps. xxxv. 26,) much as we talk of a habit of virtue and of vice; and not only so, but they speak of being "clothed with righteousness," or "with trembling," (Job xxix. 14. Ezek. xxvi. 16;) and (perhaps the boldest metaphor of all) the neck of the war-horse is described as being "clothed with thunder." (Job xxxix. 19.)

5 Now he that hath wrought [f] us for the self-same thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest [g] of the Spirit.

6 Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord:

7 (For [h] we walk by faith, not by sight:)

8 We are confident, I say, and [i] willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord.

9 Wherefore we [j] labour, that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him.

10 For [k] we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ; that every one may receive [l] the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.

11 Knowing therefore the terror [m] of the Lord, we persuade men; but [n] we are made manifest unto God; and I trust also are made manifest in your consciences.

12 For [o] we commend not ourselves again unto you, but give you occasion to glory on our behalf, that ye may have somewhat to answer them which glory in [p] appearance, and not in heart.

13 For whether we be beside [q] ourselves, it is to God: or whether we be sober, it is for your cause.

14 For the love of Christ [r] constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then [s] were all dead:

15 And that he died for all, that [t] they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves but unto him which died for them, and rose again.

16 Wherefore henceforth know we no man after the flesh: yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more.

17 Therefore if any man be in Christ, [u] he is a new [v] creature: old things are passed away, [w] behold, all things are become new proofs. 1. That there is an intermediate state is clear; for, when we are "absent from the body," we are "present with the Lord;" and, 2. that it is not a state of mere insensibility is most evident, from the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, on which see our expos. of Luke xvi. 19—31. 3. That it is a state of happiness to good men may be safely inferred from our Lord's promise to the penitent thief, when on the cross; on which turn also to our expos. of Luke xxiii. 39—43; as also from the dying words of Stephen, Acts vii. 29. 4. That the consideration of this intermediate state was a great support to Paul himself, is abundantly evident from his desiring to "depart and be with Christ," which would be very unaccountable if he did not hope to meet with him till the resurrection, which it is evident from his own writings he did not expect for many years, if not many centuries, to come. See 2 Thess. ii. 1—12. This doctrine receives farther confirmation from chap. xii. 1—4. Phil. i. 20—23. 1 Peter i. 8, 9. Rev. ii. 7; vi. 9. And there are many passages in the devotional parts of the Old Testament, already noticed, which plainly indicate a like desire to be "absent from the body and present with the Lord," as Psalm lxxxiv. 11, &c.

The practical influence of this doctrine, in exciting to diligence and activity, is a strong presumption of its truth, which may be farther strengthened by considering the benumbing consequences of the contrary hypothesis. Try the effect of telling a wicked man that he shall be punished at the end of a thousand years or more, and will it not harden him in sin? This is not the way in which the apostles preached the "terror of the Lord," in order to persuade men to repentance, (ver. 11.)

To that end the apostles urged the most important doctrine of a future judgment; and, instead of placing at a great and uncertain distance that awful period, bring it near: "The day of the Lord is at hand"—"The Judge standeth before the door." (Rom. xiii. 3. James v. 9. Heb. ix. 27.) And this they might do with the greatest propriety, since the day of death is thus near, which we have reason to believe fixes the happiness or misery of every individual of mankind, by a scrutiny equally decisive, though not equally public, with the last judgment. Whether the passage now before us, (ver. 10,) refers to the former or latter event, we presume not to decide. The one will fix the other: for the decisions of the Supreme Judge admit neither of revision nor appeal.

Ver. 11—21. The constraining power of the love of Christ, and the doctrine of reconciliation.—St. Paul again assures the Corinthians of his affection towards them, notwithstanding all the insinuations of his enemies. What those insinuations were we can only gather from his replies: we may fairly infer, however, from ver. 13, that they brought against him a charge similar to that of Festus that he was mad, though indeed they were not so polite as the governor, who attributed his derangement to excessive study, (Acts xxvi. 24.) He tells them, whether he and his coadjutors were beside (or carried beyond) themselves, it was to God, that is, in the promotion of his glory; and if they were sober and in good earnest, it was for their sakes: "For (saith he) the love of Christ constraineth us."—"Whether," says M Superville, (a Lutheran divine,) "we here understand the love of Christ towards us, or our love towards him, it is of little importance: we may join both together, for it is certain, that his love and ours must meet before our hearts are entirely captivated by him. It is his love that gives birth to a mutual affection in us: it is his fire that enkindles ours."—But the Corinthians might object, Why this zeal in your ministry? It arises from the conclusion, that "if one died for all, then were all dead." As our object is not theological controversy, we shall not think it necessary to enter into the question how far this term all here extends. Thus far is certain, that Christ died for both Jews and Gentiles—for men of all nations, of all characters, and all professions; and if he died for all these, then, certainly, they all were dead; and, if he died for them, it was that they should live to him: it is, therefore, that faithful ministers are so earnest for their conversion. Every thing in Christianity has a practical bearing, and the truth and importance of every doctrine may be fairly estimated by its tendency to promote the salvation of mankind.

St. Paul, therefore, laying aside all partialities, national, of sectarian, aims alone at the great object of personal conversion, which he presses upon all men as the main object of his apostolical commission—"Be ye reconciled to God."

It is worthy of observation, that the apostle here says nothing of reconciling God to man—that is not the work of men or angels. The God whom we offended reconciles us to himself through the Son of his love, and by means of his own appointment. "He hath made him to be for us a sin-offering, who himself knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him;" or, in plain terms, that we might be accepted as righteous before God, for his sake.

When it is said, that "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself," we interpret St. Paul by his divine Master, who teaches us, that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John iii. 16.) So we understand St. Paul, that "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself"—not that all the world should absolutely be saved, but those only who believe on him: for "he that believeth not is condemned already." (John iii. 18.)

The apostle next opens his official character: "God hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation."—Now, then, we are ambassadors for Christ; as though God did beseech (you) by us, we pray you, in Christ's stead, "Be ye reconciled to God." (Comp. Rom. v. 9—11.)

The great duty of ambassadors in foreign courts, is to preserve or restore peace; to remove obstacles, and prevent misunderstandings. God himself having restored peace by an act of grace to sinners, entreats them, by his apostles and ministers in all succeeding ages, not to oppose nor to neglect this act of mercy; but since God is reconciled to man by the obedience and death of his Son, to receive and adore the offered mercy, and become cordially reconciled, not only to his gospel but to his law, to his providential government and to all his will: for if any man be reconciled to God through Christ, and become a real, and not a nominal Christian only, he is from henceforward a new creature, endowed with new sentiments, new tempers, and new feelings. The love of Christ purifies and elevates his affections, gives a new direction to 19 To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses [y] unto them; and hath [z] committed unto us the word of reconciliation.

20 Now then we are [a] ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.

21 For [b] he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made [c] the righteousness of God in him.

CHAPTER VI.

1 That he hath approved himself a faithful minister of Christ, both by his exhortations, 3 and by integrity of life, 4 and by patient enduring all kinds of affliction and disgraces for the gospel. 10 Of which he speaketh the more boldly amongst them, because his heart is open to them; 13 and he expecteth the like affection from them again: 14 exhorting to flee the society and pollution of idolaters, as being themselves temples of the living God.

WE then, as workers [a] together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in [b] vain.

2 (For he saith, [c] I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succoured thee: behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.)

3 Giving no [d] offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed:

4 But in all things [e] approving ourselves as the ministers [f] of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses,

5 In [g] stripes, in imprisonments, [h] in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in fastings;

6 By pureness, by knowledge, by long-suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned,

7 By the word [i] of truth, by the [j] power of God, by the armour [k] of righteousness on the right hand and on the left,

8 By honour and dishonour, by evil report and good report: as [l] deceivers, and yet true;

9 As [m] unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and, behold, we live; [n] as chastened, and not killed;

10 As sorrowful, yet alway rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all [o] things.

11 O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, [p] our heart is enlarged.

12 Ye are not straitened in us, but ye are straitened in your own bowels.

13 Now for a recompense in the same, (I speak as unto my children,) be ye also enlarged.

14 Be [q] ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?

15 And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?

16 And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye [r] are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I [s] will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

17 Wherefore [t] come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you.

18 And [u] will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—18. Paul's affection to the Corinthians, and his earnest exhortation to them to avoid idolaters.—The apostle here beseeches his brethren, as fellow-labourers, not to neglect the special privileges bestowed on them, as ambassadors of Christ; and entreats all whom he addresses, not to neglect the golden opportunity afforded them by the gospel of the grace of God, of seeking that salvation so long predicted, and so expensively accomplished in the sufferings and death of Christ. Here was a remedy of sovereign efficacy provided; and aggravated would be their guilt, who neglected and despised it; or if they delayed its application to their own case, when to-morrow, perhaps, it might be too late for ever. (See Heb. ii. 3.)

He then reminds his brethren in the ministry of the labours and sufferings they were called to endure, of the holy dispositions with which they ought to be sustained, and of the sacred means to be employed to render them available to their great object, the salvation of mankind, and to render themselves acceptable to their great Master, who had himself trodden the same path of sufferings and of labour. After enumerating these things with great distinctness, he bursts out into a passionate expression of his affection for the Corinthians, and his extreme anxiety for their salvation: "O ye Corinthians, our heart is enlarged" with affection, and "our mouth is open" freely to express it. "Now, for a recompense"—in return, (as if he had said,) may your bowels, my dear children, be enlarged toward us! and express your affection, not in words only, but in a kind attention to our advice.

The apostle then goes on to guard his Christian converts against any unnecessary connexion with their heathen neighbours, particularly in social or domestic life. First and principally, he guards them against matrimonial connexions with unbelievers: "Be ye not unequally yoked;" in which there seems to be an allusion to the Mosaic law, which forbade plowing "with an ox and an ass together," (Deut. xxii. 10;) the one the most laborious, and the other the most sluggish of all animals; meaning hereby, perhaps, to intimate, that a heathen partner, in this state, would be a drawback upon all Christian duties and exertions, and greatly retard the course of obedience to the gospel. This must be particularly the case, as to the two great points of family religion, and the education of children.—2. He objects to Christians having any communion in their idolatrous worship, and particularly the convivial feasts in their temples, on which he had largely treated in his first epistle, but not, as it should seem, with complete success. (See 1 Epis. viii. 4, &c.)

Now, from neither of these dangers are we exempt even in the present age. Many professors scruple not to marry into Roman Catholic families: not even with the forlorn hope of bringing them to the reformed religion; but with the most perfect indifference whether they had any, or what religion, provided the person and fortune of the party were agreeable. It is true, that we have no invitations to dine in Catholic chapels; but it is not uncommon for Protestants to be drawn into them, to witness the splendour of their worship, and to hear their music; and then, how few are there who have the courage to show they take no part in the idolatry? It is a favourite maxim with the world, that "when we are at Rome we must do as they do at Rome;" which evidently implies that it is much better to conform to any idolatrous worship than to be guilty of a breach of what is called "good manners."

On the danger of convivial meetings, we have already offered some remarks, (on 1 Cor. x.) which may apply in great measure to fashionable visits and parties of pleasure, in which though neither Jupiter nor Mars be worshipped, the god of this world—the gods of fashion, of pleasure, and of chance, are unequivocally acknowledged and adored; and the zeal with which they are served may put to the blush the devotions of CHAP. VI. Ver. 1. As workers together.—The supplementary words, "with God," seem here unnecessary. Macknight renders it, "As fellow-labourers." CHAPTER VII.

1 He proceedeth in exhorting them to purity of life, 2 and to bear him like affection as he doth to them. 3 Whereof lest he might seem to doubt, he declareth what comfort he took in his afflictions, by the report which Titus gave of their godly sorrow, which his former epistle had wrought in them, 13 and of their loving-kindness and obedience towards Titus, answerable to his former boastings of them.

HAVING therefore these [a] promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse [b] ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.

2 Receive us; we have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man, [c] we have defrauded no man.

3 I speak not this to condemn you: for I have said [d] before, that ye are in our hearts to die and live with you.

4 Great is my boldness of speech toward you, great [e] is my glorying of you: I am filled with comfort, I am exceeding joyful [f] in all our tribulation.

5 For, when we were come into Macedonia, our flesh had no rest, but we were troubled on every side; without [g] were fightings, within were fears.

6 Nevertheless God, that comforteth those that are cast down, comforted us by the coming of [h] Titus;

7 And not by his coming only, but by the consolation wherewith he was comforted in you, when he told us your earnest desire, your mourning, your fervent mind toward me; so that I rejoiced the more.

8 For though I made you sorry with a letter, I do not repent, though I [i] did repent: for I perceive that the same epistle hath made you sorry, though it were but for a season.

9 Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance: for ye were made sorry [j] after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing.

11 For behold this self-same thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly [m] sort, what carefulness [n] it wrought in you, yea, what clearing [o] of yourselves, yea, what [p] indignation, yea, what [q] fear, yea, what vehement [r] desire, yea, what zeal, yea, what [s] revenge! CHAP. VII. Ver. 1—16. Paul's consolation in the Corinthians.—This chapter opens with a natural, forcible, and important inference from the last verses of the preceding. Seeing that God hath given us such "exceedingly great and precious promises," as St. Peter calls them, (2 Epis. i. 4,) we ought thereby to be animated to serve him with the more zeal and energy; and to labour to "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness (or pollution) of the flesh and the spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." Not that we are able to cleanse ourselves by our own strength, much less perfectly: but as it was in the attempt of the lame man to stretch forth his hand, that he received strength, (Matt. xii. 13,) so in our endeavours to attain this holiness, we have good reason and encouragement to expect the assistance of his Holy Spirit; and though we cannot attain perfection, yet it is only by aiming at it, that we can approach it. As to the distinction between the impurity of flesh and spirit, we conceive the former to consist in sensual affections, and the latter in pride of heart, which, however decent we may think it, is an abomination in the sight of God.

After this important inference, which ought evidently to have closed the preceding chapter, St. Paul returns to speak farther of his tenderness towards the Corinthians, and of the joy which he derived from hearing of their affection towards him. In the first place, he protests that he had in no way injured them; yet, in so saying, he means not to insinuate that they were his accusers, or any way to grieve them, for they had a deep interest in the hearts of himself and brethren: and amidst all his afflictions, he derived great consolation from hearing of their welfare, and particularly from the accounts which Titus had given him of their pious sorrow; and their earnest desire to rectify what had been wrong amongst them, and of their affectionate regard to him, notwithstanding the fidelity of his reproofs. In consequence of this, though it gave him great pain to reprove them so sharply at the time, he now rejoiced heartily in the event, and was so satisfied with their conduct, and the penitence of the offenders, that his confidence was perfectly restored towards them.

The most important topic of remark in this chapter, is the different nature and properties of worldly and of godly sorrow, which may be distinguished in their cause, their character, and their effects. 1. They differ in their cause: worldly sorrow arises from the loss of worldly property, or carnal pleasures—from the failure of ambitious projects, or exposure to public shame. On the contrary, godly sorrow arises from a conviction of the evil nature of sin; from a painful sense of God's anger on account of it, and an apprehension of its just and awful consequences. 2. They differ in their character: worldly sorrow is either clamorous and angry, or sullen, peevish, and revengeful, and often mingled with rebellious murmurings against God. Godly sorrow, on the other hand, is meek and silent; or if it kindles the more violent passions of anger and revenge, it points them against the sinner's own conduct—against his sins. 3. They differ in their effects. "Worldly sorrow worketh death," by hardening the mind in unbelief; and, as it leads the mind to despair, often ends in death, and utter destruction both of soul and body. But "godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation, not to be repented of." This repentance is the inseparable partner of faith; the Christian's guard against apostacy, and his guide to life eternal.

CHAP. VIII. Ver. 1—24. St. Paul again exhorts the Corinthians to Christian benevolence; commending the activity of Titus and some others.—In his former epistle, (ch. xxi,) our apostle had exhorted the Corinthians, who were a wealthy people, to exertions of Christian charity toward their poor brethren at Jerusalem; and he now informs them, to the honour of divine grace rather than to their own, that the churches of Philippi, Thessalonica, and other cities of Macedonia, though comparatively poor, and at the time much straitened, had eminently distinguished themselves in this cause by their generosity; not only giving their money, but their time and labour also, to assist in collecting for the saints at Jerusalem, who appear to have been peculiarly persecuted and distressed.

Having stated this fact to excite the emulation of the Corinthians, he set before them an example infinitely more exalted, and more binding upon their consciences, namely, that of our Lord Jesus Christ himself, who, though "he was rich," —infinitely rich in wisdom, power, and glory, stooped down to abundance of their joy and their deep [b] poverty abounded unto the riches of their [c] liberality.

3 For to their power, I bare record, yea, and beyond their power they were willing of themselves;

4 Praying us with much entreaty that we would receive the gift, and take upon us the fellowship [d] of the ministering to the saints.

5 And this they did, not as we hoped, but first gave their own selves to the Lord, and unto us by the will of God.

6 Insomuch that we desired Titus, that as he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same [e] grace also.

7 Therefore, as ye abound [f] in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also.

8 I speak not [g] by commandment, but by occasion of the forwardness of others, and to prove the sincerity of your love.

9 For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was [h] rich, yet for your sakes he became [i] poor, that ye through his poverty might be [j] rich.

10 And herein I give my advice: for this is expedient for you, who have begun before, not only to do, but also to be [k] forward a year ago.

11 Now therefore perform [l] the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have.

12 For if [m] there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.

13 For I mean not that other men be eased, and ye burdened:

14 But by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want: that there may be equality:

15 As it is written, [n] He that had gathered much had nothing over; and he that had gathered little had no lack.

16 But thanks be to God, which put the same earnest care into the heart of Titus for you.

17 For indeed he accepted the [o] exhortation; but being more forward, of his own accord he went unto you.

18 And we have sent with him the [p] brother, whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches;

19 And not that only, but who was also chosen [q] of the churches to travel with us with this [r] grace, which is administered by us to [s] the glory of the same Lord, and declaration of your ready mind:

20 Avoiding this, that no man should blame us in this abundance which is administered by us:

21 Providing for honest [t] things, not only in the sight of the Lord, but also in the sight of men.

22 And we have sent with them our brother, whom we have oftentimes proved diligent in many things, but now much more diligent, upon the great confidence which [u] I have in you.

23 Whether any do inquire of Titus, he is my partner and fellow-helper concerning you: or our brethren be inquired of, they are the messengers [v] of the churches, and the glory of Christ.

24 Wherefore show ye to them, and before the churches, the proof of your love, and of our boasting [w] on your behalf.

CHAPTER IX.

1 He yieldeth the reason why, though he knew their forwardness, yet he sent Titus and his brethren beforehand. 6 And he proceedeth in stirring them up to a bountiful alms, assuring both of kinds of sowing of seed. 10 which shall return a great increase to them. 13 and to cause a great number of thanks-givings unto God.

FOR as touching the ministering [a] to the saints, it is superfluous for me to write to you:

2 For I know the forwardness of your mind, for which I boast of you to them of Macedonia, such as neither mortals or angels could ever share, and such as ought to command, not only our admiration, but our devotion.

"O for this love, let rocks and hills
Their lasting silence break!
And all harmonious human tongues
The Saviour's praises speak."—Watts.

The Corinthian believers knew this love, and knowing it, it was their duty not only duly to appreciate, but humbly to imitate, and gratefully to return it, by showing kindness to their brethren in affliction; and to encourage those whose means were more limited than others, the apostle states that their charity will not be accepted of God, so much in regard to its magnitude, as to the principle in which it originated. "For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." So our Lord estimated the widow's mite above all the ostentatious charity of the Pharisees. (Mark xii. 41—44.) The apostle farther gives them to understand, that if at any future time it should please Providence, to permit them to be visited with the same trials that their brethren now suffered, he should be no less urgent on their behalf, wishing to treat all the churches upon the same principle of equality, even as did the God of Israel in distributing the manna in the wilderness, who supplied the necessities of all, without leaving for any an unnecessary abundance. (See Exod. xvi. 18.)

The apostle now takes occasion to commend Titus, his "fellow-labourer," and at the same time to thank God for the grace conferred on him, whereby he was enabled to provide with so much liberality, and distribute with so much integrity, to the necessities of the poor brethren; it being the earnest desire, both of St. Paul and his colleagues, to discharge every obligation laid upon them, honestly and honourably before both God and man. "Wherefore (says he) exhibit before all the proof of your regard to me, and justify the character I have given of you to the other churches."

CHAP. IX. Ver. 1—15. Farther arguments and exhortations to liberality.—The apostle introduces this chapter (says Dr. Macknight) with remarking, that it was unnecessary and superfluous for him to discuss the propriety of the contributions to which he refers, since they were already in progress; yet, as he understood by Titus, that a good deal still remained to be done, he had sent the brethren mentioned in the prece-

There is, he observes, a circumstance of nicety in the agreement between the two Epistles, which, I am convinced, the author of a forgery would not have hit upon, or which, if he had hit upon it, he would have set forth with more clearness. The Second Epistle speaks of the Corinthians as having begun this eleemosynary business a year before, (ver. 10; ch. ix. 2.) It appears, however, from other texts in the Epistle, that the contribution was not yet collected, or paid; for brethren were sent from St. Paul to Corinth, "to make up their bounty," (ch. ix. 5.) They are urged "to perform the doing of it," (ver. 11.) "and every man was exhorted to give as he purposed in his heart," (ch. ix. 7.) The contribution, therefore, was in readiness, yet not received from the contributors; was begun, was forward long before, yet not hitherto collected. Now this representation agrees with one, and only with one, supposition, namely, that every man had laid by in store, had already provided a fund, from which he was afterwards to contribute—the very case which the First Epistle authorizes us to suppose to have existed; for in that Epistle, St. Paul had charged the Corinthians "upon the first day of the week, every one of them, to lay by in store as God had prospered him:" 1 Co. xvi. 2.]—Bagster.

4 Lest haply if they of Macedonia come with me, and find you unprepared, we (that we say not, ye) should be ashamed in this same confident [b] boasting.

5 Therefore I thought it necessary to exhort the brethren, that they would go before unto you, and make up beforehand your [c] bounty, [d] whereof ye had notice before, that the same might be ready, as a matter of bounty, and not as of covetousness.

CHAPTER X.

Against the false apostles, who disgraced the weakness of his person and bodily presence, he setteth out the spiritual might and authority, with which he is armed against all adversary powers, 7 assuring them that as his coming he will be found as mighty in word, so he is now in writing being absent, 12 and withal taxing them for reaching out themselves beyond their compass, and vaunting themselves into other men's labours.

NOW I Paul myself beseech [a] you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ, who [b] in presence [c] am base among you, but being absent am bold toward you:

2 But I beseech you, that I may not be bold when I am present with that confidence, wherewith [d] I think to be bold against some, which [e] think of us as if we walked according to the flesh.

3 For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after [f] the flesh:

ding chapter, to encourage them to go on, that his boasting concerning their being prepared might not be rendered false; but that, at length, they might be prepared [as he had expected.] For if the Macedonian brethren who were coming with him to Corinth, should find their collection not finished, he, not to say the Corinthians, would be ashamed of his constant boasting concerning them. He had judged it necessary, therefore, to entreat the brethren to go before him to Corinth, to persuade them to complete their collection, that whatever they should give, might appear as freely given, and not as forced from them by his presence. In the mean time, to encourage them to give liberally, he put them in mind of the rule—"He that soweth sparingly shall reap sparingly." He then desires each to consult his own heart and conscience, and to give what he proposed to give without murmuring or hesitation—"For God loveth a cheerful giver." And he whose cause they supported, and whose people they relieved, would not be backward to reward what was given out of love to him or them; and those whom they thus assisted would, in return, assist them by their earnest prayers at the throne of grace on their behalf. Nor ought they for a moment to hesitate at any thing they could do for God, when they recollected that he had "not spared his own and only begotten Son"—truly an "unspeakable gift!" which called for every exertion of praise and gratitude

> "Oh thou bounteous giver of all good,
> Thou art of all thy gifts thyself the crown:
> Give what thou canst—without thee we are poor,
> And with thee rich, take what thou wilt away."—Cowper.

CHAP. X. Ver. 1—18. Paul defends himself against the insinuations of his enemies.—In this and the following chapters our apostle defends himself against the charges and insinuations of the false teachers and their adherents, who reproached him for the meanness of his personal appearance, and his deficiency in respect to those arts of rhetoric and elocution which were admired and studied by men who aspired to popular applause: at the same time they admit his Epistles to be weighty in authority, and powerful in expression; but then, say they, "his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible." With respect to his person, "In the Philopatris of Lucien, Treiphon (who said he was baptized by him) calls him, in ridicule, 'the big-nosed, bald-pated Galilean,' who had travelled through the air into the third heaven." And Chrysostom, the eloquent Greek Father, describes him as a "little man, about three cubits (or four feet and a half) high." And it is probable that his voice was weak, or inharmonious, which gave countenance to the charge of his speech or elocution being contemptible.

Paul's enemies, as it appears, had intimated that, when present with them, he appeared all meekness and humility, not daring to provoke any inquiries into his character or qualifications; but when absent, and at a distance he was bold in reproving, and assumed a tone of authority to which they thought him not entitled. In answer to this, that he might not again be charged with such presumption, he beseeches them, "by the meekness and gentleness of Christ," that they would not compel him, when next present with them, to be bold and severe with them generally, in the manner which he had already resolved to be bold in reproving some of them in particular who had charged him with walking according to the flesh; that is, according to the dictates of carnal wisdom and policy; "For though (says he) we walk in the flesh"—that is, though surrounded with all the infirmities of mortality—yet "do we not war after (or according to) the flesh; for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal"—not human force nor policy; neither philosophical science nor rhetorical skill; yet are they mighty in demolishing the strong holds of sin—in casting down the proud imaginations of the human heart, and in "bringing into captivity" or subjection, every notion or opinion inconsistent with the obedience due to Christ our Lord. At the same time that the apostle writes this, he reminds them of his having intrusted to him, by the Lord Jesus, a miraculous power able to avenge every act of obstinate disobedience. "And (says he) when your obedience is fulfilled," or become complete; that is, when you are brought to a complete submission to Christ, those who remain unsubdued may expect to be severely punished.

In these verses several effects of the apostolical warfare are

CHAP. X. Ver. 1. In presence base among you.—Nicephorus Callistus, a Greek historian of the 14th century, (lib. ii. cap. 37,) who probably combined all the traditionary information he could collect, speaks of our apostle as "small of stature, stooping, and rather inclinable to crookedness; pale faced, of an elderly look, bald on the head. His eyes lively, keen, and cheerful; shaded in part by his eyebrows, which hung a little over. His nose rather long, and not ungracefully bent. His beard pretty thick of hair, and of a sufficient length, and, like his locks, interspersed with gray."

Ver. 3. In the flesh—i. e. in the earthly house of this tabernacle. See chap. v. 1, 2, and notes——After—according to—the flesh—Always means in a carnal, worldly manner.

4 (For the weapons [g] of our [h] warfare are not carnal, but mighty [i] through [j] God to the pulling down of [k] strong holds,)

5 Casting down [l] [m] imaginations, and every high [n] thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity [o] every thought to [p] the obedience of Christ;

6 And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience, when your obedience [q] is fulfilled.

7 Do ye look on things after the outward [r] appearance? If any man trust to himself that he is Christ's, let him of himself think this again, that, as he is Christ's, even so are we Christ's.

8 For though I should boast somewhat more of our [s] authority, which the Lord hath given us for [t] edification, and not for your destruction, I should not be ashamed:

9 That I may not seem as if I would terrify you by letters.

10 For his letters, [u] say they, are weighty and powerful; but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible.

11 Let such a one think this, that, such as we are in word by letters when we are absent, such will we be also in deed when we are present.

12 For [v] we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves: but they measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, [w] are not [x] wise.

13 But we will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the [y] rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you.

14 For we stretch not ourselves beyond our measure, as though we reached not unto you: for we are come as far as to you also in preaching the gospel of Christ:

15 Not boasting of things without our measure, that is, of [z] other men's labours; but having hope, when your faith is increased, that we shall be [a] enlarged by you according to our rule abundantly,

16 To preach the gospel in the regions beyond you, and not to boast in another man's [b] line of things made ready to our hand.

17 But [c] he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

18 For not he that commendeth himself is approved, but [d] whom the Lord commendeth.

CHAPTER XI.

1 Out of his jealousy over the Corinthians, who seemed to make more account of the false apostles than of him, he entereth into a forced commendation of himself, 5 of his equality with the chief apostles, 7 of his preaching the gospel to them freely, and without any their charge, 13 showing that he was not inferior to those boasters in any legal prerogative, 23 and in the service of Christ, and in all kind of sufferings for his ministry, far superior.

WOULD to God ye could bear with me a little in my folly: and indeed [a] bear with me.

2 For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy: for I have espoused you [b] to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin [c] to Christ.

3 But I fear, lest by any means, as [d] the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.

4 For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another [d] gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear [e] with him.

briefly stated:—1. The destruction of the strong holds occupied by Pagan idolatry. 2. The breaking down all the vain reasonings and imaginations of philosophy, which are so many walls or ramparts of infidelity. 3. The leading captive all the fine theories and hypotheses invented by man to oppose the humbling doctrines of the gospel: and, lastly, the miraculous punishment of those who refused to submit to apostolical authority.

And whereas they objected to him the meanness of his external appearance, he inquires, "Do ye look upon things according to their outward appearance" only? But what are all ministers but the professed servants of Christ, and am not I the same? And though I should boast something more of my apostolical authority, I should see no reason to be ashamed, especially while that authority is used only for your edification, and not destruction.

From the latter part of this chapter, Dr. Macknight remarks two things—"1. That the apostles were specially appointed to preach the gospel in countries where it had not been preached before; and that chiefly on account of their extraordinary miraculous gifts. 2. That in preaching the gospel they were not to pass by or neglect any nation that lay in their way, where the gospel had not been preached before; but were to proceed in an orderly course from one country to another, that the light of the gospel might be imparted to all." But the false teacher (or teachers) here alluded to had come from Judea to Corinth, apparently to enter upon St. Paul's labours, and draw away from him those whom he had been instrumental in converting to Christ by his previous ministry.

CHAP. XI. Ver. 1—15. St. Paul's judgment of false teachers.—On the early part of this chapter we offer the following remarks:—

1. Conversion is an espousal to Christ, and all apostacy after such espousal is an aggravated species of spiritual adultery. Dr. Doddridge says, "This is much illustrated by recollecting that there was an officer among the Greeks, whose business it was to educate and form young woman (especially those of rank and figure) designed for marriage, and then to present them to those who were to be their husbands; and if this officer permitted them, through negligence, to be corrupted between the espousals and the consummation of the marriage, great blame would naturally fall upon him." So it would be a matter of great grief to the apostle, if, instead of preparing themselves for the marriage supper of the Lamb in heaven, any of them should be corrupted by anti-Christian errors.

2. The apostle compares the seduction of the Corinthians by their false apostles, to the old serpent (the devil) beguiling Eve to her ruin, and that of her posterity. This may lead us to inquire, by what means was Eve deceived? It is to be recollected that the serpent did not directly contradict the declaration of the Almighty, "Thou shalt surely die;" but he began with insinuating doubts and queries.—"Yea,"—indeed! "Hath God said so and so?" and, when he found that she listened to his insinuations—then he boldly adds, "Ye shall not surely die"—On the contrary, ye shall be immortalized, and become wise as gods. (Gen. iii. 1—5.) So it is highly probable that these instruments of Satan did not directly contradict the doctrine of the apostle; but first queried his divine authority, and then proceeded to insinuate that he was deceiving them, or was at least himself ignorant and deceived.

3. St. Paul guards the Corinthians against listening to any other doctrines than those which had been the means of leading them to conversion. "If, indeed, (as though he had said,)

Ver. 4. Not carnal.—The gospel disowns all worldly means of propagation or conquest—especially such as have been improperly and falsely called holy wars.

Ver. 6. And having in a readiness to revenge.—Macknight, "And are prepared [by our miraculous power] to punish all disobedience [as I shall do at Corinth] when the obedience [of such of you as are disposed to repent] is completed."

Ver. 7. He is Christ's—i. e. Christ's minister.

Ver. 8. I should not be ashamed—i. e. "by its failing me when I try it on the disobedient among you."—Macknight.

Ver. 9. As if I would terrify you.—It was a dozen years, or more, before this, that St. Paul had smitten Elymas with blindness; (Acts xiii.;) and he anticipated that they might construe some of his remarks into a threat of some similar judgment.

Ver. 10. His letters.—Doddridge, "Epistles." So ver. 9 and 11. The epistle before us seems to have been the sixth written by Paul; it is very possible, therefore, that these Corinthians might have seen two or three of them.—Powerful.—Doddridge and Macknight, "strong."

Ver. 12. For we dare not make, &c.—Doddridge, "For we presume not to number (Macknight, rank) ourselves with some who recommend themselves;" i. e. look only to their own supposed merits, and those of their own party.

Ver. 13. Not boast of things without our measure—That is, we restrain our labours within the bounds prescribed to us of God. [The expressions in these verses appear to be agonistical, taken from the Isthmian and Olympic games. The measure was the length of the course; the rule or line, was probably the same with the white line, which marked the boundaries of the stadium; and the verbs reach unto, stretch out, &c., refer to the exertions made to win the race.]—Bagster. But perhaps the allusion may be to the division of the land of Canaan. See Ps. lxxviii. 55. Compare Rom. x. 18, with Ps. xix. 4.

Ver. 15. Enlarged by you.—Doddridge, "Magnified by you."

CHAP. XI. Ver. 2. For I, &c.—Macknight, "Because I have betrothed you [by faith and holiness] to one husband, to present you [in affection and conduct spotless, as] a chaste virgin to Christ."

Ver 5 For I suppose.—Doddridge, "I reckon." The same word is thus rendered, Rom. viii. 18.——I was not a whit behind.—Macknight, "I am in nothing inferior."——The very chiefest apostles—That is, Peter, James, and John; see Gal. ii. 9. It is evident from this that Paul did not acknowledge the supremacy of Peter.

Ver. 6. Rude.—Doddridge, "unskilful." Macknight, "unlearned." Rapheliius cites a passage from Xenophon, in which (using the same word, idiotes) he calls himself "a plain (or ordinary) man."——Not in knowledge.—Paul, independent of his inspiration, had, we know, received a learned education under Gamaliel, (Acts xxii. 3,) and was deeply versed in Scriptural an [h] in knowledge; but we have been thoroughly made manifest [i] among you in all things.

7 Have I committed an offence in abasing myself that ye might be exalted, because I have preached to you the gospel of God freely?

8 I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service.

9 And when I was present with you, and wanted, I [j] was chargeable to no man: for that which was lacking to me the [k] brethren which came from Macedonia supplied: and in all things I have kept myself from being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself.

10 As the truth of Christ is in me, [l] no man shall stop me of this boasting in the regions of Achaia.

11 Wherefore? because I love you not? God knoweth.

12 But what I do, that I will do, that I may cut off occasion from them [m] which desire occasion; that wherein they glory, they may be found even as we.

13 For such are false [n] apostles, deceitful [o] workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ.

14 And no marvel; for Satan [p] himself is transformed into an angel of light.

15 Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness; whose end [q] shall be according to their works.

16 I say again, Let no man think me a [r] fool; if otherwise, yet as a fool [s] receive me, that I may boast myself a little.

17 That which I speak, I speak it [t] not after the Lord, but as it were foolishly, in this confidence [u] of boasting.

18 Seeing [v] that many glory after the flesh, I will glory also.

19 For ye suffer fools gladly, seeing ye yourselves are wise.

20 For ye suffer, if a man bring you into bondage, if a man devour you, if a man take of you, if a man exalt himself, if a man smite you on the face.

21 I speak as concerning reproach, as though we had been weak. Howbeit whereinsoever any is bold, (I speak foolishly,) I am bold also.

22 Are they Hebrews? so am I. Are they Israelites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I.

23 Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool) I am more; in [w] labours more abundant, in [x] stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in [y] deaths oft.

24 Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes [z] save one.

25 Thrice was I beaten [a] with rods, once was I [b] stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a [c] night and a day I have been in the deep;

26 In journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils [d] by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren;

27 In weariness and painfulness, in watchings [e] often, in [f] hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness.

28 Beside those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care [g] of all the churches.

29 Who [h] is weak, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I burn not?

30 If I must needs glory, I will [i] glory of the things which concern mine infirmities.

31 The [j] God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which [k] is blessed for evermore, knoweth [l] that I lie not.

32 In Damascus [m] the governor under Aretas the king kept the city of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me:

33 And through a window in a basket was I let down by the wall, and escaped his hands.

your new teacher could present you with a new Saviour, whose miracles were more convincing, or his doctrines more sublime; if another gospel were revealed, or another and more divine spirit poured from on high; then, indeed, you might have some pretence for listening to your new apostles; but as you know there is 'no other name given to men by which they can be saved, but that of Jesus,' (see Acts iv. 12,) listen not to their vain pretensions or seductive reasonings.'"

4. One thing, indeed, by which St. Paul gave great umbrage (as it should seem) to these teachers, was his refusing to receive any regular support from the churches, as the others did, and which unquestionably he had a right to do. But he gloried in making the propagation of the gospel as free as was the grace in which it originated; and therefore laboured hard in a common handicraft business, rather than burden any of the churches, and particularly the Corinthians; choosing rather to subsist on the voluntary donations of the poor Macedonians, than to be dependant on them, who, though more wealthy, were evidently less generous. (See ch. ix. 2—4.) This he calls robbing other churches to spare them.

5. Both Satan and his emissaries frequently transform themselves into angels of light, for the better accomplishment of their dark designs. Of the former there can be no doubt, and of the latter there are too many unhappy proofs. It is not for us, who have not the gift of discerning spirits, to point out individual characters; but when men show more zeal to support a party than for the conversion of souls—when they evidence more anxiety to please their hearers than to profit them—when they aim to exalt themselves and debase the characters of their brethren—then, assuredly, are they "false apostles and deceitful workers, whose end shall be according to their works."

Ver. 16—33. Paul compelled to self-defence.—"It must be confessed (says Dr. Watts) that there are some ..... occurrences in life, which make it proper, and almost necessary, to speak of one's self to advantage; prudence and religion should direct us how to distinguish those seasons and occasions. A wise man, when he is constrained to speak of his own character, or to support his own honour, feels a sort of inward uneasiness, lest he should be taken for a vain-glorious fool; and is even ashamed to speak what is necessary for his own vindication, lest it should appear like vanity and boasting. See this notably exemplified in the conduct of Paul ..... This very man, who counts himself less than the least of all the saints, was once reviled by some upstarts in the Corinthian church. ..... Then he is compelled to produce his own credentials, to display his own divine commission, and to make his superior qualifications known to the people. I suppose (says he) I was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles; though I be rude in speech, yet not in knowledge, &c.; and then he recounts his abundant labours, his abundant sufferings, and his service to Christ and souls: but mark, how often this man of heavenly wisdom represents this, his conduct, as acting like a fool; and he seems to blush while he boasts himself a little: Let no man think me a fool indeed; but, if you will think me so, yet as a fool receive me ..... Boasting of one's self, in the judgment of a great apostle, is so foolish a thing, that, when wisdom itself requires him to practise it, he is quite ashamed of it, and almost expects that he shall be taken for a fool."

In looking over the list of Paul's sufferings, in the latter part of this chapter, we cannot but feel admiration at the number and weight of calamities which he sustained in the cause of Christ; but a small portion of which are recorded in the book of Acts. For instance, we have only on record one instance of his imprisonment, (viz. at Philippi,) and one of his being scourged with rods. (Acts xvi. 20.) The shipwreck at Melita was long after his writing this Epistle, and therefore could not be one of the three here named. So numerous, so

Ver. 17. I speak it not after the Lord.—The apostle appears so jealous lest, by this appearance of boasting, he should bring any reproach upon the Spirit of inspiration, that he takes it upon himself; as if he had said, "If I seem guilty of vain boasting, attribute it to my own weakness only, and not to the Lord by whom I am inspired."

Ver. 18. Many glory after the flesh.—See chap. x. 13; xii. 5, 6. Phil. iii. 4.

Ver. 19. Ye suffer fools gladly, seeing ye yourselves are wise—i. e. you readily suffer yourselves to be made fools (as in the next verse) by other teachers and why not by me? This is evidently spoken satirically, as also several other things in this chapter; and this, perhaps, is what the apostle means by speaking foolishly, or, as it were, in jest.

CHAPTER XII.

For commending of his apostleship, through his weight glory of his wonderful revelations, 7 and other causes, ministry, to glory of his infirmities, 11 blaming them for leaving him to false apostles, 14 they is meet to come to Christ's estate, but yet no burden to them, 16 although he be crafty, 20 although he feareth he shall to his grief find many offenders, and public disorders there.

A. M. cir. 4062
A. D. cir. 58.

IT is not expedient for me doubtless to glory. [a] I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord.

2 I knew a man in [b] Christ about [c] fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) such a one caught up to the third heaven.

3 And I knew such a man, (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;)

4 How that he was caught up into [d] paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not [e] lawful for a man to utter.

5 Of such a one will I glory: yet [f] of myself I will not glory, but in mine infirmities.

6 For though I would desire to glory, I shall not be a fool; for I will say the truth: but now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he heareth of me.

7 And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn [g] in the flesh, the [h] messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure.

8 For this [i] thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me.

9 And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory [j] in my infirmities, that the power [k] of Christ may rest upon me.

10 Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake: for when I am weak, then am I strong.

11 I am become a fool in glorying; ye have compelled me: for I ought to have been commended of you: for [l] in nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, though [m] I be nothing.

12 Truly the signs [n] of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs and wonders, and mighty deeds.

13 For what is it wherein ye were inferior to other churches, except it be that I [o] myself was not burdensome to you? forgive me this wrong.

14 Behold, the third time I am ready to come to you; and I will not be burdensome to you. for [p] I seek not yours, but you: for the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children.

15 And I will very gladly spend and be spent for [q] you; though the more abundantly I love you, the less I be loved.

16 But be it so, I did not burden you: nevertheless, being crafty, I caught you with guile.

17 Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you?

18 I desired [r] Titus, and with him I sent a [s] brother. Did Titus make a gain of you? walked we not in the same spirit? walked we not in the same steps?

19 Again, think ye that we excuse ourselves [t] unto you? we speak before God in Christ but we do all things, dearly beloved, for your edifying.

20 For I fear, lest, when [u] I come, I shall not find you such as I would, and that I shall be found unto you such as ye would not: lest various, so long continued were the sufferings of this indefatigable apostle, unjustly censured and reproached as he was, by those who carefully avoided the like sufferings.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1—21. Paul proceeds to recount his various divine visions and revelations.—Admitting, as he had before done, that it did not become him to say any thing more of either his labours or his sufferings, the apostle goes on to speak of divine visions and revelations, which he had been favoured with, so far back as fourteen years from this period; and of these he speaks as regarding a third person, that he might not again be charged with glorying; yet it cannot be doubted that he is speaking of himself, since he confesses as much in the sixth and seventh verses: and here three things call for our attention—his elevating visions, his depressing afflictions, and the spiritual benefit which he derived from the latter.

1. These extraordinary visions occurred to him many years before, and probably, as Dr. Benson surmises, while in a trance in the temple, as mentioned Acts xxii. 17. They were evidently of the same nature with those vouchsafed to the Old Testament prophets; and if our common dreams often assume the most perfect appearance of reality, we need not wonder that Paul hesitated as to the fact, whether he had been carried up to heaven, or heaven brought down to him; whether he was in the body, or out of it, at the time, he could scarcely ascertain. The vision appeared so glorious, and the bliss so complete, that he seemed to be in the third heaven. By this we understand, (as the Jews did,) the immediate presence of God; that blissful region where our Lord promised to meet the converted thief, immediately after his death; that glory in which the apostle himself wished to be with his heavenly Master. (Chap. v. 8.) Nor does there seem any ground for distinction between this heaven and paradise, since St. John evidently speaks of them as the same. (Compare Rev. ii. 7, and xxii. 2.) Wherever Christ is, there is paradise, and there is heaven; nor is there any heaven to the Christian but in his presence. In this blissful place and state, our apostle heard words unutterable, and doubtless saw things indescribable; about which, therefore, it would be utterly in vain for us to attempt to form conjectures. It does not appear, however, that he received at this time any new revelations for the use of the church, for what he heard was unutterable; but the scene to which he was admitted, was probably designed to animate and encourage him in all his future labours and sufferings, even to martyrdom and death.

2. These elevating scenes were followed by circumstances no less depressing, and which have, indeed, occasioned much more controversy; namely, "the thorn in the flesh," which was sent to humble him. From this being called a messenger of Satan, many have concluded that St. Paul referred to the false apostle, who had given him so much trouble; and it is true that he did buffet him, and did all he could not only to humble him, but also to degrade him. But from the answer of the Lord to Paul, and especially from what the latter adds of his infirmities, we rather conceive that it was some painful affliction.

3. Piety can, however, triumph over all the afflictions to which human nature is subject. First, he prays for deliverance, and that repeatedly; but when he received the promise of "grace sufficient" to support him, he was not only content, but rejoiced in it. "Most gladly (says he) will I glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me." He gloried in them, 1. As a kind of certificate of the divine favour and protection; and, 2. As means of glorifying the power for help, who sent Vitellius to reduce Aretas, and to bring him alive or dead to Rome. By some means or other, Vitellius delayed his operations, and in the mean time Tiberius died; and it is probable, that Aretas, who was thus snatched from ruin, availed himself of the favourable state of things, and seized on Damascus, which had belonged to his ancestors.]—Bagster.

CHAP. XII. Ver. 1. I will come.—Gr. For [or therefore] I will come.—Macknight, "yet," &c. "The peculiarity of the apostle's circumstances rendered that conduct necessary, which otherwise would not have been 'expedient,' or conducive to general profit; and which it is probable his opposers would censure, or even deride."—Scott.

Ver. 2. A man in Christ.—In our English idiom, "A certain Christian." See chap. v. 17.—About fourteen years ago.—Our translators, dating this Epistle in A. D. 60, fix this period in A. D. 46, when Paul appears to have been at Lystra; Acts xiv. 6. But as we have fixed the date of the Epistle two years earlier, (viz. in 58,) this carries back the event to 44, when Dr. Benson thinks Paul saw the trance related Acts xxii. 17, as above-mentioned.

Ver. 7. A thorn in the flesh.—This has been a thorn in the eyes of most commentators. The expression evidently means a great and painful affliction. See Num. xxxiii. 55. Josh. xxiii. 13. "Some think, that the reproaches and insults of the principal false apostle were exclusively intended; but, as in the case of Job, so in that of the apostle, the inward assault of evil spirits combined with the outward trials, to harrass and distress him."—Scott.—A messenger of Satan.—The scriptures teach us to consider afflictions generally in this light. See Job i., ii.

Ver. 9. Rest upon me.—Doddridge, "pitch its tent upon me." Macknight, "over me."—["May overshadow me as a tent," or tabernacle, affording me shelter, protection, safety, refreshment, and rest.]—Bagster.

Ver. 11. In nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles.—Compare chap. xi. 5. On this passage the late Mr. Fuller remarks the near similitude between vices and virtues, the distinction often lying chiefly in the motive. Ex. gr. "A vain man speaks well of himself, and Paul speaks well of himself. Thus the branches intermingle. But trace them to their respective roots, and there you will find them distinct. The motive in one case is the desire of applause; in the other, justice to an injured character, and to the gospel, which suffered in his reproaches."—Fuller's Harm.—Though I be nothing—i. e. in myself.

Ver. 15. For you.—Gr. "for your souls." So Doddridge.

Ver. 16. Nevertheless, being crafty, I caught you with guile.—This is generally considered as the objection of his adversaries, the ancients not having the means that we have of distinguishing such passages by means of inverted commas. Macknight therefore supplies the words [they say.] The craft here referred to is supposed to be, that of quartering theirs, whom he there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults:

21 And lest, when I come again, my God will humble [v] me among you, and that I shall bewail many which have sinned already, and have not repented [w] of the uncleanness and [x] fornication and lasciviousness which they have committed.

CHAPTER XIII.

1 He threateneth severity, and the power of his apostleship against obstinate sinners. 5 And advising them to a trial of their faith, 7 and to a reformation of their sins before his coming, 11 he concludeth his epistle with a general exhortation and a prayer

THIS is the third time I am coming to you. In [a] the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established.

2 I told you before, and foretell you, as if I were present, the second time; and being absent now I write to them [b] which heretofore have sinned, and to all other, that, if I come again, I will not spare:

3 Since ye seek a proof of Christ's speaking in me, which to you-ward is not weak, but is mighty [c] in you.

4 For though [d] he was crucified through weakness, yet he liveth by the power of God. For we also are weak [e] in him, but we shall live with him by the power of God toward you.

5 Examine [f] yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ [g] is in you, except ye be [h] reprobates?

6 But I trust that ye shall know that we are not reprobates.

7 Now I pray to God that ye do no evil; not that we should appear approved, but that ye should do that which is honest, though we be as reprobates.

8 For [i] we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth.

9 For we are glad, when we are weak, and ye are strong: and this also we wish, even your [j] perfection.

10 Therefore I write these things being absent, lest being present I should use [k] sharpness, according [l] to the power which the Lord hath given me to edification, and not to destruction.

11 Finally, brethren, farewell. Be [m] perfect, be of good comfort, be [n] of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you.

12 Greet [o] one another with a holy kiss.

13 All the saints salute you.

14 The [p] grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the [q] communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen.

and grace of Christ, and "that the power of Christ might rest upon him."

"When I am weak, then am I strong;
Grace my support, and Christ my song!"

From this prayer, which (as even Belsham admits) was offered to Jesus Christ, Dr. Pye Smith, and others, have drawn a forcible argument in favour of our Lord's divinity; for surely Paul knew better than to pray to a mere creature, and especially for a deliverance, which none but God could give.

The apostle having thus far justified himself, and rendered glory to God, tells the Corinthians, that he intended the third time to come to see them; but he much feared it would be little either to his satisfaction or to theirs: he was fearful of still finding among them the same disorders as had before grieved him, and that he should be obliged to use towards them a severity which would greatly grieve and mortify him. A good pastor always grieves for the wandering of his flock.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1—14. The apostle closes with exhorting the Corinthians to self-examination, unity, and love.—St. Paul begins this chapter with saying, "This is the third (time) I am coming to you," and yet it is evident he had been there but once, and that (as Dr. Paley states) this Epistle was written before his second visit. How, then, shall we understand this? A verse in the preceding chapter (ver. 14) fully explains this. He there says, "Behold, the third time I am ready (prepared) to come to you." The fact is, he had before made preparations to come, and arranged his affairs, as he says in ch. i. 15, "I was minded to come to you before, that ye might have a second benefit"—that is, a second visit: but in this he was, by some circumstance unknown to us, evidently disappointed: now, then, the third time he was minded, and prepared to visit them—but it was only to pay them a second visit: for so he says expressly, (ver. 2,) "I told you before, and foretell you (now,) as if I were present the second time." So that so far from a contradiction, as some have pretended, here is a remarkable coincidence of circumstances, as Dr. Paley has more fully shown.

Having announced his intention soon to come, he gives them to understand that he should make a strict inquiry into the state of the church, and inflict, by his apostolical powers, a summary punishment on those who had disgraced and brought reproach on their profession. In the mean time, he exhorts them all to examine themselves, whether they were "in the faith," or, in plain terms, whether they were true Christians: and, as a test of their Christianity, he says, "Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates;" that is, reprobated or rejected of God for your hypocrisy or apostacy; for it must be remembered that he was writing only to those who had professed Christianity.

To be in Christ, and have Christ formed in us, are expressions often used by St. Paul, and unequivocally express a regeneration, or new creation in the soul! so, Gal. iv. 19, "My little children, of whom I travail in birth, until Christ be formed in you." To be a reprobate, on the contrary, in the Scripture sense of the term, is to be disapproved, and consequently rejected of God, as not having that necessary proof of genuine and vital Christianity.

The benediction which concludes this Epistle—"The grace of the Lord Jesus," &c., is generally, and we think justly, considered as a conclusive proof of the divinity and personality of the Holy Trinity—or sacred Three in One.

sent, upon them, though he would not burden them himself: to which he replies, "Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent?" Others consider this, as well as the following sentence, as spoken interrogatively; "Being crafty, did I take you in by guile? Did I make a gain of you?" &c.

CHAP. XIII. Ver. 1. In—Doddridge, "By"—the mouth of two or three witnesses.—See Num. xxxv. 30. Deut. xvii. 6, and xix. 15.

Ver. 4. Weak in him.—Macknight, "with him;" that is, we are weak as we was in the days of his flesh; and we shall be strong, as he now is being armed with his power, and mighty through his might.

Ver. 5. Reprobates.—Doddridge, "disapproved." We know of no instance in Scripture in which this word is used in reference to a divine decree. We believe it always signifies "disapproved," or "rejected" in consequence of such disapprobation. See Rom. i. 28. 2 Tim. iii. 8. Titus i. 16. "It does not appear that either the original word, or our English word 'reprobates,' is ever in Scripture used as the opposite to 'elect,' or indeed with direct reference to election; and as to reprobation, it is, I apprehend, a scriptural idea, (for those who are not 'chosen' must be rejected, (or passed by,) but not a scriptural word in any sense."—Scott.

Ver. 6. We are not reprobates—i. e. not disapproved.

Ver. 7. Though we be as reprobates—i. e. "Though we be treated by you, as though we were disapproved or rejected of God."

Ver. 9. Your perfection.—Doddridge, "Your perfect order." Macknight. "Your restoration." See Gal. vi. 1.

Ver. 10. Therefore I write.—Namely, to warn and caution you.

Ver. 11. Be of one mind.—Doddridge, "Attend to, (or mind) the same thing." So Macknight.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

[The most remarkable circumstance, observes Mr. Scott, in this Epistle is, the confidence of the Apostle in the goodness of his cause, and in the power of God to bear him out in it. Opposed, as he then was, by a powerful and sagacious party, whose authority, reputation, and interest, were deeply concerned, and who were ready to seize on every thing that could discredit him, it is wonderful to hear him so firmly insist upon his apostolical authority, and so unreservedly appeal to the miraculous powers which he had exercised and conferred at Corinth. So far from shrinking from the contest, as afraid of some discovery being made, unfavourable to him and the common cause, he, with great modesty and meekness indeed, but with equal boldness and decision expressly declares, that his opposers and despisers were the ministers of Satan, and menaces them with miraculous judgments, when as many of their deluded hearers had been brought to repentance and re-established in the faith, as proper means could in a reasonable time effect. It is inconceivable that a stronger internal testimony, not only of integrity, but of divine inspiration, can exist. Had there been any thing of imposture among the Christians, it was next to impossible but such a conduct must have occasioned a disclosure of it. Of the effects produced by this latter epistle we have no circumstantial account; for the journey which St. Paul took to Corinth, after he had written it, is mentioned by St. Luke only in few words, (Ac. xx. 2, 3.) We know, however, that St. Paul was there after he had written this Epistle; that the contributions for the poor brethren at Jerusalem were brought to him from different parts to that city, (Ro. xv. 26;) and that, after remaining there several months, he sent salutations from some of the principal members of that church, by whom he must have been greatly respected, to the church of Rome, (Ro. xvi. 22, 23.) From this time we hear no more of the false teacher and his party; and when Clement of Rome wrote his epistle to the Corinthians, St. Paul was considered by them as a divine apostle, to whose authority he might appeal without fear of contradiction. The false teacher, therefore, must either have been silenced by St. Paul, by virtue of his apostolical powers, and by an act of severity, which he had threatened, (2 Co. xiii. 2, 3;) or this adversary of the apostle had at that time voluntarily quitted the place. Whichever was the cause, the effect produced must operate as a confirmation of our faith, and as a proof of St. Paul's divine mission.]—Baxter.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

[THE Galatians, or Gallogræcians, were the descendants of Gauls, who migrated from their own country, and after a series of disasters, got possession of a large district in Asia Minor, from them called Galatia. (Pausanias, Attic. c. iv.) They are mentioned by historians as a tall and valiant people, who went nearly naked, and used for arms only a buckler and sword; and the impetuosity of their attack is said to have been irresistible. Their religion, before their conversion, was extremely corrupt and superstitious; they are said to have worshipped the mother of the gods, under the name of Adgistis; and to have offered human sacrifices of the prisoners they took in war. Though they spoke the Greek language, in common with almost all the inhabitants of Asia Minor, yet it appears from Jerome that they retained their original Gaulish language, even so late as the fifth century. Christianity appears to have been first planted in these regions by St. Paul himself, (ch. i. 6; iv. 13;) who visited the churches at least twice in that country, (Acts xvi. 6; xviii. 23.) It is evident that this Epistle was written soon after their reception of the Gospel, as he complains of their speedy apostacy from his doctrine, (ch. i. 6;) and as there is no notice of his second journey into that country, it has been supposed, with much probability, that it was written soon after his first, and consequently about A. D. 52 or 53. It appears, that soon after the Apostle had left them, some Judaizing teachers intruded themselves into the churches; drawing them off from the true Gospel, to depend on ceremonial observances, and to the vain endeavour of "establishing their own righteousness."]—B.

CHAPTER I.

b He wondereth that they have so soon left him and the gospel, 8 and accurseth those that preach any other gospel than he did. 11 He learned the gospel not of men, but of God: 13 and showeth what he was before his calling, 17 and what he did presently after it.

PAUL, an apostle, (not of men, neither by man, but [a] by Jesus Christ, and God the Father, who [b] raised him from the dead;)

2 And all the brethren which are with me, unto the churches of [c] Galatia:

3 Grace [d] be to you and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ,

4 Who gave [e] himself for our sins, that he might deliver us [f] from this present evil [g] world, according [h] to the will of God and our Father:

5 To whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

6 I marvel that ye are so soon removed [i] from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel:

7 Which [j] is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert [k] the gospel of Christ.

8 But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let [l] him be accursed.

9 As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other [m] gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed.

10 For do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to [n] please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not [o] be the servant of Christ.

11 But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man.

12 For [p] I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation [q] of Jesus Christ.

13 For ye have heard of my conversation in time past in the Jews' religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the church [r] of God, and wasted it:

14 And profited in the Jews' religion above many my [s] equals in mine own nation, being [t] more exceedingly zealous of the traditions [u] of my fathers.

15 But when it pleased God, [v] who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace,

16 To reveal [w] his Son in me, that [x] I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and [y] blood:

17 Neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—24. Paul reproves the Galatians for being so soon seduced into error.—Galatia was a province of the Lesser Asia, which was first evangelized by the labours of St. Paul; who passing through it in the latter part of A. D. 50, was received with much acceptance, and there planted several churches. (Acts xvi. 5, 6.) About four years after this, he paid them a second visit, when he confirmed and edified the churches he had before planted. (Acts xviii. 23.) Between these visits, (in 52 or 53,) this Epistle is supposed to have been written, from which we learn, that soon after his first visit, some Judaizing teachers from Judea attempted to subvert the gospel, and degrade the character of the apostle, as appointed not by Jesus Christ, as were the twelve, but by the church; and not equal, either in authority or gifts, to Peter and his companions. In opposition to these insinuations, the apostle begins with stating, that he was not chosen or appointed by any man, or by any number of men, but by Christ himself, and by God the Father, who raised him from the dead.

The churches of Galatia, like most of the first Christian churches, were composed both of Jews and Gentiles; and it was the former part, probably, that first listened to the legal doctrine, which made the rite of circumcision, and conformity to the Mosaic laws, necessary to salvation. The great object of this Epistle coincides with that of the Epistle to the Romans, as it respects the ground of our justification, which in both is declared to be by grace alone; the chief difference is, that in the latter (for the Epistle to the Romans was last written) he considers the impossibility of legal justification, both as regards to the law of Nature and the law of Moses; in this Epistle to the Galatians, confining himself to the Mosaic law, he contents himself with showing, that no justification before God could be obtained by obedience to that law, the reasons of which we shall see as we proceed. But some Jewish teachers, whether from their undue prejudices toward the Mosaic law, or from the desire to form a party, at the head of which they might themselves be placed, had seduced these Galatians from their allegiance to Christ, now their only Lord and Master, and persuaded them to desert to Moses, with whom those who were Gentiles had certainly nothing to do; and to whom even the Jews, having been liberated by Christ, owed no longer subjection. This the apostle regrets, and seems to attribute it to a fickleness of mind, much too common in every age, and not less to be lamented.

Luther, the great German Reformer, wrote (as is well known) a commentary on this book, of considerable extent, to which we shall often recur, if not quote; and of all his own writings, this was his favourite, because in it he largely and ably defended his favourite doctrine of "Justification by faith alone," which he considered as the grand article by which the church alone must stand or fall. This is the gospel which Paul had taught to the Galatians, and he pronounces a bitter anathema against him who should dare to preach any other, even though "he were an angel from heaven." We do not mean, however, to insinuate that there are not other truths of great importance connected with this; but this doctrine of free grace we consider as the very pith or kernel of the gospel;

CHAP. I. Ver. 1. Not of men, neither by man—i. e. not from (any society of) men, neither appointed by (any particular) man, but, &c. Macknight.—Who raised him.—This circumstance is very properly introduced, because it was part of the apostolic office to be a witness of Christ's resurrection. Acts i. 22.

Ver. 2. And all the brethren—Particularly ministers and persons inspired, including, probably, Luke, Silas, and Timothy.

Ver. 6. So soon.—If there were but four years between Paul's two visits to Galatia, and this Epistle was written in the interim, it should seem their apostacy must have been within a year or two after their conversion.

Ver. 7. Which is not another—i. e. which, in fact, is no gospel at all, though substituted for that of Jesus.

Ver. 8, 9. Accursed.—Gr. anathema. See note on 1 Cor. xvi. 22.

Ver. 10. Do I now persuade men, or God?—i. e. "Do I endeavour to ingratiate myself with men, or to approve myself to God?"—Doddridge. See Acts xii. 12. "Having made Blastus their friend:" i. e. ingratiated themselves with him. The same word as here used.

Ver. 11. Not after—Or "according to" man—i. e. not of human invention or authority. See on ver. 1.

Ver. 14. Profited.—Doddridge, "made proficiency."

Ver. 16. Among the heathen.—See Acts ix. 15, and note.—Not with flesh and blood—i. e. neither with his own feelings, nor with any of his friends.

Ver. 17. I went into Arabia—That is, after a few days spent in Damascus. But this journey is not mentioned in the Acts, and was probably more for retirement than public labour. How long he stopped there is unknown; perhaps little more than a year, and from thence he returned to Damascus, where he finished the three years mentioned in ver. 18, and was then obliged to fly. See 2 Cor. xi. 32, 33. [Arabia is an extensive country of western Asia, lying between the Persian Gulf on the east, and the Red sea on the west, the Indian ocean on the south, and Syria on the north. It is generally divided into three parts—Arabia Felix, Arabia Petræa, and Arabia Deserta. The former is surrounded on three sides by the Persian gulf, Indian ocean, and Red sea, being bounded on the north by Arabia Petræa, the capital of which was Petra, and which has Egypt on the west, and Palestine and Arabia Deserta on the north; which latter has the mountains of Trachonites on the west, the Euphrates on the east, and Syria on the north, and from its vicinity to Damascus, was probably the Arabia to which St. Paul retired.]—Bagster.

18 Then [z] after three years I [a] went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days.

19 But other of the apostles saw I none, save James [b] the Lord's brother.

20 Now the things which I write unto you, behold, before God, I lie not.

21 Afterwards I [c] came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia;

22 And was unknown by face unto the churches [d] of Judea which were in Christ:

23 But they had heard [e] only, That he which persecuted us in times past now preacheth the faith which once he destroyed.

24 And they glorified [f] God in me.

CHAPTER II.

1 He showeth when he went up again to Jerusalem, and for what purpose: 3 and that Titus was not circumcised. 11 And that he resisted Peter, and told him the reason. 14 why he and other Jews, do believe in Christ to be justified by faith, and not by works. 23 and that they live not in sin, who are so justified.

THEN fourteen years [a] after I went up again to Jerusalem with Barnabas, and took Titus with me also.

2 And I went up by revelation, and communicated unto them that gospel which I preach among the Gentiles, but [b] privately to them which were of reputation, lest by any means I [c] should run, or had run, in vain.

3 But neither Titus, who was with me, being a Greek, was compelled to be circumcised:

5 To whom we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour; that the truth of the gospel might continue with you.

6 But of those who seemed [g] to be somewhat, whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me: God [h] accepteth no man's person: for they who seemed to be somewhat in conference added nothing to me:

7 But contrariwise, when they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision was committed unto [i] me, as the gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter;

8 (For he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, the same was mighty in me toward the Gentiles:)

9 And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be [j] pillars, perceived the grace [k] that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision.

the holy tempers and good works resulting from this principle may, indeed, be compared to the beautiful blossoms, or wholesome fruits, which this plant bears, and therefore as essential to the system.

In the following part of the chapter he offers other facts, in proof that he received both his authority and instructions alone from heaven; for upon his conversion, instead of going up to Jerusalem, either to consult or to receive instruction, he went immediately into Arabia, and did not go to Jerusalem till three years after his conversion; and then he found there only two of the apostles, with whom he stopped but a few days; so that he could receive from them neither his commission nor his information. And as to the Jewish churches there, he had no personal introduction even to them; only they heard, through Peter and James, that he now preached the faith he formerly persecuted, and "glorified God" on his account.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—21. Paul continues to vindicate his authority, and states the principal topic of this Epistle.—Fourteen years after his conversion, and eleven years from the former visit, Paul, directed by a divine intimation, went up again to Jerusalem, with Barnabas and Titus, and there privately communicated to the apostles and elders the doctrine which he taught relative to the Mosaic ritual, and the doctrines which he taught relative to its abrogation by the gospel; and the liberation of Jews as well as Gentiles from its farther obligation. This was not done with a view to consult them on the truth of these principles, in which he had been instructed by Christ himself, but rather to inform them on what authority they were founded, before he delivered them to a promiscuous congregation.

In this instance it does not appear that our apostle met with any opposition from his brethren; for being under the same inspiration, they were all, of course, agreed in judgment.

Doddridge and Macknight consider this as the visit to Jerusalem mentioned in Acts xv. 2, &c., when Paul, being directed by a divine influence to go up to Jerusalem, was accompanied by Barnabas and certain others, who were deputed by the church at Antioch to lay the case before the council of the apostles, when Peter himself became an advocate for the Gentiles, who it was agreed should be exempted from the Mosaic yoke: and yet when Peter came to Antioch soon after, while Paul and Barnabas were there, (Acts xv. 35,) his natural timidity returned, and he temporized in a manner that provoked Paul to reprove him publicly, which surely he dared not have done if he had been the "Prince of the Apostles," as the church of Rome pretends.

The case was simply this: When Peter came, knowing the sentiments of Paul and of the church of Antioch, he made no scruple to eat with the Gentiles, as they did; but when certain friends of James came from Jerusalem, who disapproved the liberal character and conduct of Paul and his brethren at Antioch, he withdrew, and refused to eat with the Gentiles any longer.

The French infidel wit, Voltaire, who turned every thing serious into farce, represents this as a dispute between Paul and Peter about eating meats prohibited to the Jews, (as pork and black-puddings, &c. Phil. Dict. in Peter.) But this is evident misrepresentation; neither did Paul censure Peter for eating any particular article, or with any particular persons; but for his inconsistency in eating with Gentiles at one time and refusing at another, merely because some brethren had come from Antioch who were of a different opinion; whereas he, as one of the chief pillars of the Christian church, ought to have maintained a more firm and consistent conduct. What he did was evidently not from difference of opinion, but from want of firmness; and his dissembling was the more dangerous to the peace and unity of the church, because that, when he deserted, "the other Jews dissembled with him, and even Barnabas was drawn aside" by his example. The reply which he puts into the mouth of Peter has two faults—1. It is utterly false; and, 2. Nothing to the purpose. Indeed, it does not appear that Peter made any reply, and the words which Voltaire ascribes to him, are only something similar to what he uttered more than seven years before, on a very different occasion. (Acts xi. 5, 6.) See Dr. Finlay's Ans. to Volt. § 23.

We now come to consider the great doctrine of this Epistle, as well as of that to the Romans, namely, justification by faith alone—by which is not meant a dead faith, accompanied with no good works; but that those works have no part in our justification before God. Upon this subject we shall add a short extract from the third Homily: (Part 2:)—

"Nor when they say [i. e. the Greek and Latin Fathers before referred to in this Homily] that we should be justified freely, do they mean that we might afterwards be idle, and that nothing should be required on our part afterwards. . . . . But this saying, that we be justified by faith only, freely, and without works, is spoken for to take away clearly all merit of our works, as being unable to deserve our justification at God's hands, and thereby most plainly to express the weakness of man, and the goodness of God; . . . . the imperfection of our own works, and the most abundant grace of our Saviour Christ; and therefore wholly to ascribe the merit and deserving of our justification unto Christ only, and to his most precious blood shedding."

In the close of this chapter, the apostle explains how it is that believers in Christ still obey the law, though they look to no justification from it. "If while we seek to be justified by Christ, we are found sinners"—i. e. persevering in a course of sin, Is Christ therefore to blame? "Is Christ therefore the minister of sin? God forbid!" So far, however, am I from living in sin, that though "I through the law am dead to the law," that is, as to all hopes of salvation from it—yet is this

Ver. 23. Once he destroyed.—Doddridge, "ravaged;" i. e. persecuted. See Acts ix. 21.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. Fourteen years after.—Referring to the same era as in ver. 18, namely his conversion. So Doddridge and Macknight. Supposing his conversion to have been in A. D. 36, this would bring us to the year 50. [This journey appears evidently to refer to that which the Apostle took to Jerusalem about the question of circumcision, mentioned in Ac. xv. 2, &c. These years, says Whitby, must be reckoned from the time of his conversion mentioned here, (chap. i. 18,) which took place A. D. 35, (or 33,) his journey to Peter was A. D. 38, (or 36,) and then between that and the council of Jerusalem, assembled A. D. 49, (or 52,) will be 14 intervening years.]—Bagster.

Ver. 2. By revelation—i. e. by divine intimation—but privately.—Meaning, perhaps, not individually: but apart from the other brethren.—Lest I should run—That is, labour—in vain.—He means, lest he should not maintain the harmony or unanimity which he desired.

Ver. 4. Unawares brought in.—Macknight, "secretly introduced."

Ver. 6. Seemed (Gr. were esteemed) to be somewhat.—Doddridge, "appeared to be considerable," or "of reputation;" the same word as in ver. 9. —God accepteth no man's person.—See Rom. ii. 11.—Added nothing unto me—i. e. said nothing in reply.

Ver. 7. Contrariwise.—Doddridge, "on the contrary"—The circumcision—i. e. the Jews

11 But when Peter was come to [m] Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed.

12 For before that certain came from James, he did eat [n] with the Gentiles: but when they were come, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision.

13 And the other Jews dissembled likewise with him; insomuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation.

14 But when I saw that they walked not uprightly according to the truth [o] of the gospel, I said unto Peter [p] before them all, If thou, being a Jew, livest after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews?

15 We who are Jews by nature, and not sinners [q] of the Gentiles,

16 Knowing that [r] a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith [s] of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: for [t] by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified.

17 But if, while we seek to be justified by Christ, we [u] ourselves also are found sinners, is therefore Christ the minister of sin? God forbid.

18 For if I build again the things which I destroyed, I make myself a transgressor.

19 For I [v] through the law am dead to the law, that I might live [w] unto God.

20 I am crucified [x] with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in [y] me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself [z] for me.

21 I do not frustrate the grace of God: for if [a] righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain

CHAPTER III.

1 He asketh what moved them to leave the faith, and hang upon the law? 6 They that believe are justified, 9 and blessed with Abraham. 10 And this he showeth by many reasons.

O FOOLISH [a] Galatians, who [b] hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you?

2 This only would I learn of you, Received [c] ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or [d] by the hearing of faith?

3 Are ye so foolish? having [e] begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by [f] the flesh?

4 Have ye suffered [g] so many things in [h] vain? if it be yet in vain.

5 He therefore that ministereth [i] to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

6 Even as Abraham [j] believed God, and it was [k] accounted to him for righteousness.

7 Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children [l] of Abraham.

8 And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify [m] the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, [n] In thee shall all nations be blessed 9 So then [o] they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham.

10 For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse: for it is written, [p] Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them.

11 But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, The [q] just shall live by faith.

12 And the law [r] is not of faith: but, The [s] man that doeth them shall live in them

13 Christ [t] hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us: for it is written, [u] Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree:

14 That [v] the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise [w] of the Spirit through faith.

15 Brethren, I speak after the manner of men; Though it be but a man's [x] covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto.

16 Now to [y] Abraham and his seed were the only "that I might live unto God," and be his devoted servant. But "I am crucified with Christ," and die unto sin, even as he died for sin: yet "nevertheless I live," namely, by faith in him; "yet (it is) not I" that live independent of Christ; "but Christ liveth in me," my life, my hope, and my salvation: and "the life which I now live, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me. I do not therefore frustrate the grace of God," or depreciate its value: "for [on the contrary] if righteousness (come) by the law"—if we could be justified by our own works, "then (indeed) were Christ dead in vain."

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—29. The folly of forsaking the gospel, and the blessedness of receiving it.—This chapter opens in the mingled language of pity and reproof, remonstrating with the Galatians upon their folly in forsaking the gospel, in which the infinite love and compassion of the Saviour had been so visibly and vividly exhibited before them as crucified for their sins, to return to a system of carnal ordinances, which, separate from the gospel it had prefigured, was merely a body without a soul. To desert the vivifying spirit of Christianity for the mere "carcass of dead piety," (which was all that was now left of the ritual law,) was, as Paul expresses it, to begin in the spirit, and seek to finish and perfect themselves by the flesh.

In confirmation of his doctrine as opposed to that of their legal teachers, St. Paul now appeals, 1. To the miracles which he had wrought among them. "He therefore that ministereth unto you, and worketh miracles among you," (meaning evidently himself,) doth he this "by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?" is he a minister of the legal, or the evangelical system? The answer he leaves to them; and then appeals,

2. To the case of Abraham, who received all his blessings, not through the ritual services of Moses, which, indeed, were not then instituted, but through the covenant of grace, (which was the foundation of the gospel;) as it is said, "Abraham believed God, and it (his faith) was accounted (or imputed) to him for righteousness." But what did Abraham believe? He believed the promise of a seed, (or son,) "in whom all the nations of the earth" should eventually "be blessed:" and it is to those only who have faith in the promised Messiah, that the privilege belongs of being his children, as the same inspired writer argues at large, in the 4th chapter of his Epistle to the Romans. "So then they [and they only] which be [the children] of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham." On the other hand, they who still adhere to the law, as a covenant of life and salvation, are subject to its curse; "For it is written, Cursed is he that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law to do them." And as none of us have thus continued, we all, of course, are subject to its curse.

3. The same point may be argued as well from the prophets as from the law; for it is written in the prophet Habakkuk,

---

Ver. 11. I withstood, &c.—Macknight, "I opposed him personally." It would seem that Paul did not regard Peter as infallible.

Ver. 18. If I build again, the things which I destroyed—i. e. If I should encourage sin, which is a violation of the law, for the destruction and suppression of which I labour, then, indeed, should "I build again," &c.

Ver 19. I through the law, &c.—That is, "the more I consider its nature and tenor, the more I am convinced of the impossibility of justification by it." See Doddridge.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1. O foolish Galatians.—Doddridge, "thoughtless"—Who hath bewitched you?—Doddridge "enchanted you?" Macknight, "deceived you?" The latter remarks, that it alludes to the deceptions of jugglers, who impose upon the weak and credulous, by dazzling their sight with the rapidity of their motions.

Ver. 3. Are ye now made perfect.—Macknight, "Ye now make yourselves perfect."—(The Gr. verb is in the middle voice.)

Ver. 4. So many.—This seems to refer to the reproach and persecution they had suffered for Christ.

Ver. 11. The just shall live by faith.—Compare Hab. ii. 4. with Heb. x. 38.

Ver. 15. A man's covenant.—We have remarked repeatedly, that the same word in Greek signifies both covenant and testament; but we think the former term agrees best here.

promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ.

17 And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which [z] was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect.

18 For if [a] the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise.

19 Wherefore then serveth the law? [b] It was added because of transgressions, till the seed [c] should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels [d] in the hand [e] of a mediator.

20 Now a mediator is not a mediator of one, but God [f] is one.

21 Is the law then against [g] the promises of God? God forbid: for if [h] there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law.

22 But the scripture hath concluded all [i] under sin, that the promise [j] by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe.

23 But before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed.

24 Wherefore the law [k] was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith.

25 But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster.

26 For ye are all the children [l] of God by faith in Christ Jesus.

27 For [m] as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ.

28 There is [n] neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus.

29 And if ye be Christ's, then [o] are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs [p] according to the promise.

CHAPTER IV.

1 We were under the law till Christ came, as the heir is under his guardian till he be of age. 5 But Christ freed us from the law: 7 therefore we are servants no longer to it. 14 He remembereth their good will to him, and his to them, 22 and showeth that we are the sons of Abraham by the freewoman.

NOW I say, That the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all;

2 But is under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the father.

3 Even so we, when we were children, were in bondage under the [a] elements of the world:

4 But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law,

5 To redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons.

6 And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit [b] of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father.

7 Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but

"The just shall live by faith:" but the law is not of faith, and therefore "cannot justify," or give us life. The gospel, however, which we believe, teaches us that "Christ hath redeemed us [both Jews and Gentiles] from the curse of the law, (by) being himself made a curse for us," by his crucifixion; for it is written, (Deut. xxi. 23,) "Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree" Now, as every honest man will keep his covenant, or promise, and especially when it is ratified on oath, much more the God of truth and righteousness, who, indeed, "cannot lie." Nor can his covenant, when once ratified by sacrifice or oath, be afterwards disannulled; consequently, God's covenant with Abraham cannot be set aside by the law of Moses, which was not given till 430 years afterwards, and then for a very different purpose—namely, to convince of sin, and lead us to seek for mercy.

Of this law it is said, that it was "ordained by [the ministry of] angels in the hands of a Mediator;" (see Ps. lxviii. 17, compare with Acts vii. 53;) and that Mediator was Moses, the servant of God; but the term Mediator implies two parties, of whom God is only one. The other was the people of Israel, to whom Moses delivered the tables of the law, which he received from the hands of God. But the gospel is a far more illustrious dispensation, brought from heaven by the Son of God himself, our divine Mediator with the Father.

There is not, however, any real inconsistency between these dispensations, the one being only preparatory to the other. If the law itself could have given life, then, indeed, salvation might have been by the law; but as it is, the law was only our guide, our conductor, or (as our translators express it) our schoolmaster to lead us unto Christ; in which there is an allusion to an ancient custom not generally observed. The Roman ladies, it seems, in the earliest and best times, used themselves to educate their children; but as times degenerated, this was intrusted to the servants and public schools. A slave, whose office it was to conduct the children to the public schools, and to assist them in learning their first lessons, was on that account called a pedagogue (the very word here used.) (D'Arnay's Priv. Life of the Rom., chap. vii.) Such is the office of the Mosaic law. The moral law shows us that we are sinners, and need a Saviour; the ceremonial law leads us to the cross to receive instruction. Every sacrifice directs to the great atonement for justification; and every ceremony points us to some doctrine or precept of Christianity. But "Faith being come"—This expression is, we apprehend, elliptical, and must intend either Christ, who is the object of faith, or the gospel, elsewhere called "the law of faith;" (Rom. iii. 27;) and here "the promise by faith of Jesus Christ."

But now being come to Christ, we are no longer under the care of a common pedagogue: God has committed us to the instruction of his own Son: so it was the custom of the Romans, after children had received the elements of instruction at school, to place them under the care of some eminent philosopher or rhetorician; unless the parent was sufficiently qualified to instruct them himself, as was the case with Augustus. (See D'Arnay, as above.) And this is the case not with a few only of God's favoured children, but with them all—Jew or Gentile, rich or poor, &c. They are all alike the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—31. Christ frees us from the sentence of the law—this illustrated by an allegory.—St. Paul here resumes his allusion to the mode of juvenile education, particularly among the Romans. The heir of an estate, while yet a child, differed nothing in authority from a servant or slave, and was even, in some cases, subjected to their control. So the church and children of God were in bondage, till liberated by Christ. But when "the fulness of the time," ordained and predicted, "came," then the Father sent forth his Son from his own bosom, and liberated them from their subject condition—introduced them into "the glorious liberty of the sons of God"—and bestowed on them the spirit of adoption, whereby they were allowed to claim the privilege of sons, and call the Most High their Father.

In verse 8, and sequel, the apostle proceeds to remonstrate with these Galatians, and blames them for that, after they had been admitted to the liberty of children, they suffered themselves to be drawn back, if not into the slavery of idolatry, at least into the thraldom of a carnal Judaism. The late Mr. Fuller justly remarks, that the apostle speaks in much more tolerant and gentle language to the Romans, (Rom. xiv. 5,) because he is there addressing himself to Jewish converts, who had been educated in the observance of those festivals, and who might innocently observe them, though not now bound to do so: but here he is addressing Gentile converts, who had never been in subjection to the law of Moses, nor were by any law, Christian or Mosaical, required so to be: but they had been beset by certain Judaizing teachers, who drew them into

Ver. 16. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many—i. e. the word seed is not here used in the plural sense, but in the singular, as in Gen. iii. 15; iv. 25; xxi. 12, &c.—Which.—Macknight, "Who."

Ver. 17. Four hundred and thirty years.—See note on Exod. xii. 40.

Ver. 20. A mediator is not a mediator of one.—The very name not only implies two parties, but also a difference between them. The Jews could not come into the presence of God but through the medium of Moses: nor can we entertain communion with God, but through the incarnation of our Saviour Christ. (Heb. x. 20.)

Ver. 22. Hath concluded all under sin.—Doddridge and Macknight, "Hath shut up [as criminals] all under [the condemnation of] sin."

Ver 23. Kept under—shut up, &c.—May not this refer to the subjection of children to their father's slave, in the character of a pedagogue? May not the servant have had the authority of confining a child, when he should prove refractory, and neglect his lesson? See next verse.

Ver. 24. Our schoolmaster.—Gr. "Pedagogue." So next verse

Ver. 25. No longer under a schoolmaster—i. e. of so inferior a character: God has now committed us to the instruction of his own Son.

Ver. 27. Put on Christ.—All who are baptized put on thereby the profession of Christianity. Mr. Locke says, that by their putting on Christ, it is implied, "that to God now looking on them, there appears nothing but Christ. They are (as it were) covered all over with him, as a man is with the clothes he has put on." Hence, in the next verse, it is said they are all one in Christ Jesus, as if they were but that one [mystical] person.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1. From a servant.—The Greek (doulos) properly signifies a "slave."—Though he be lord—That is, though he is entitled so to be, when of age.

Ver. 3. Elements.—Doddridge, "worldly elements;" i. e. the more carnal part of religion—rites and ceremonies. So in verse 9.

Ver. 4. God sent forth his Son.—This certainly implies his prior existence in the bosom of the Father. See John i. 18.

Ver. 6. Abba Father.—The learned Selden quotes a passage from the Jew a son; and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ.

8 Howbeit then, when ye knew not God, ye did service unto them which by nature are no gods.

9 But now, after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye [e] again to the weak and beggarly [d] elements, whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage?

10 Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years.

11 I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labour in vain.

12 Brethren, I beseech you, be as I am; for I am as ye are: ye have not injured me at all.

13 Ye know how through [e] infirmity of the flesh I preached the gospel unto you at the first.

14 And my temptation which was in my flesh ye despised not, nor rejected; but received me as an angel [f] of God, even as [g] Christ Jesus.

15 [h] Where is then the blessedness ye spake of? for I bear you record, that, if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me.

16 Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?

17 They zealously affect you, but [i] not well; yea, they would exclude [j] you, that ye might affect them.

18 But it is good to be zealously affected always [k] in a good thing, and not only when I am present with you.

19 My [l] little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you,

20 I desire to be present with you now, and to change my voice; for [m] I stand in doubt of you.

21 Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law?

22 For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one [n] by a bondmaid, the other [o] by a freewoman.

23 But he who was of the [p] bondwoman was born after the flesh; but he of the freewoman was by promise.

24 Which things are an [q] allegory: for these are the two [r] covenants; the one from the mount [s] [t] Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar.

25 For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and [u] answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children.

26 But Jerusalem [v] which is above is free, which is the mother of us all.

27 For it is written, [w] Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not: for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath a husband.

28 Now [x] we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise.

29 But as then he [y] that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so [z] it is now.

30 Nevertheless what saith [a] the scripture? Cast out the bondwoman and her son: for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman.

31 So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free.

the observance of the Jewish festivals, which were now becoming obsolete, even to the Jews themselves; and he was jealous, lest by this compliance they should be drawn under the yoke of circumcision, and the whole Jewish law. He remonstrates with them, therefore, on returning to mere ritual services, which, though originally instituted by God, were now no more acceptable to him, when placed in opposition to the gospel, than the rites of Pagan superstition. Indeed, ritual services, abstracted from heart devotion, were never acceptable to the true God; and now those services were placed in opposition to his own gospel, they were no less an abomination than idolatry itself.

Verse 12. The apostle reminds them that he was once no less attached to these "beggarly elements" than they now were, or indeed could be; but he had seen the folly of such an attachment, and entreated them to profit by his example, and adhere to Christ and his gospel. "Be as I [am;] for I [was] as ye [are."] He was a Hebrew of the Hebrews, and of the straitest sect of that religion; but the grace of God had weaned him from all undue attachment to outward forms, and he was anxious that grace might do the same for them. He reminds them of the attachment which they had formerly shown to him, notwithstanding his infirmities—when they received him as if it had been Christ in person; but such over-zealous professions are often marks of instability, and are soon followed by a reverse of feeling. He then begs them not to consider him as their enemy, because he had told them the truth, and endeavoured to guard against the pretended friendship of those Jewish teachers, who now endeavoured to ensnare them, and for that purpose had been trying to alienate their affections from him and from his brethren.

In the latter part of this chapter, (verse 24—31,) the apostle introduces an allegorical exposition of the history of Hagar and Sarah, and their respective children, in application to the Jewish and Christian systems. It is well known that the Rabbies were always very fond of these allegories, and it is supposed that St. Paul may have employed this as a kind of argument ad hominem, against the Jewish teachers who opposed him.

"An allegory (says Dr. Macknight) when persons or events present, or near at hand, with th qualities and circumstances, are considered as types, or re sentations, of persons and events more remote, to which they have a resemblance. Of this kind were the histories of some persons and events recorded in the Old Testament. . . . For the qualities and circumstances of these persons were, it seems, so ordered by God, as to be apt representations of such future persons and events, as God intended should attract the attention of mankind." This allegory is thus explained:—

(Ver. 24.) Which things are an allegory: for these [women] are the two covenants; the one verily from mount Sinai, bringeth forth [children] into bondage, which is Hagar. (25. For [the name] Hagar (or Agar) denotes mount Sinai in Arabia) and answereth to the present Jerusalem, and is in bondage with her children. (26) But the Jerusalem above is the free [woman,] who is the mother of us all." The apostle then quotes a passage from Isaiah, supposed to allude to the same subject, in which case the barren woman is Sarah, (who was long desolate and barren,) but whose children, meaning the children of the promise, shall be more numerous than those of Hagar. It is added, as Ishmael persecuted Isaac, so the carnal world persecutes the church. In applying the allegory, ish Gemara, to prove that slaves were never allowed to address their masters under this title.

Ver. 8. Ye did service.—Doddridge, "were in bondage." Macknight, "Ye served as slaves."——No gods—i. e. either mere idols of wood and stone, or, at best, the celestial luminaries.

Ver. 9. Known of God—i. e. acknowledged and distinguished by him.——How turn ye again?—But these had never been under the yoke before; now then can he say, turn back to the weak and beggarly elements? &c. Perhaps the omission of the article the in the translation would remove all difficulty, thus—"How turn ye again to weak and beggarly elements?" meaning a religion of mere rites and ceremonies; for the ceremonies of Judaism, abstracted from all reference to the Messiah, are no less "weak and beggarly" than those of Paganism. This agrees with the sense given of this passage by most commentators.

Ver. 10. Ye observe days, and months.—This is generally supposed to refer to the Jewish festivals; but Archbishop Potter understands it in reference to the lucky and unlucky days of the superstitious Greeks and Romans. It does not, however, appear, that any attempt was made to draw the Galatians back to Paganism.

Ver. 12. For I am.—This verb is wrong supplied. Doddridge, Macknight, and most modern translators, supply the past tense—"I was as ye are."

Ver. 14. My temptation . . . . . in my flesh.—The thorn in his flesh; 2 Cor. xii. 7.

Ver. 15. The blessedness ye spake of—That is, the happiness they professed to enjoy under his ministry.

Ver 17. They zealously affect you—i. e. "they profess great attachment."

Compare 2 Cor. xi. 2.—But not well—i. e. not truly.——They would exclude you.—Margin, Us. So read both some MS. and printed copies, and it is thought to be the true reading by Doddridge, Macknight, and others.

Ver. 20. I desire—Doddridge, "I could wish"—to be present with you, and to change my voice—i. e. "to change the tone of my language toward you." See Macknight.——For I stand in doubt of you.—Margin, "I am perplexed;" i. e. what to think of you.

Ver. 21. Do ye not hear the law?—i. e. hear it read in your public assemblies.

Ver. 24. Which things are an allegory.—Doddridge, "may be allegorized;" but Macknight prefers the common version. There is some difficulty, however, in the translation of this and the next verse. Doddridge, to avoid the absurdity of saying, (as our version does,) "This Sinai is Agar—for this Agar is Sinai," would render the illative particle (gar) as an expletive—"I say." Mr. Parkhurst (Lex. in Agar, 2d edit.) reads and points the passage thus:—"The one . . . . which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar, (for this Agar means mount Sinai in Arabia,) and answereth," &c. He adds, from Busching, that Hagar is, in Arabic, a rock. N.B. Hagar and Agar are the same word, as pronounced with or without an aspirate.

Ver. 27. Than she which hath a husband.—Doddridge, "than her who had," &c. This must be applied to Hagar if the other is to Sarah; but it can be only as an accommodation.

Ver. 29. He that was born, &c.—i. e. the carnal world persecute the spiritual.

Ver. 30. Cast out the bondwoman—i. e. in the allegorical sense, the law as a covenant, &c. See Gen. xxi. 10.

CHAPTER V.

1 He moveth them to stand in their liberty. 3 and not to observe circumcision: 13 but rather love, which is the sum of the law. 19 He reckoneth up the works of the flesh, 22 and the fruits of the Spirit, 25 and exhorteth to walk in the Spirit.

STAND [a] fast therefore in the [b] liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage.

2 Behold, I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing.

3 For I testify again to every man that is circumcised, that he is a debtor to do the whole law.

4 Christ is become of no effect [c] unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen [d] from grace.

5 For we through the Spirit wait [e] for the hope of righteousness [f] by faith.

6 For in Jesus Christ neither [g] circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision; but faith which [h] worketh by love.

7 Ye did run well; who did [i] hinder you that ye should not obey the truth?

8 This persuasion cometh not of him that calleth you.

9 A little [j] leaven leaveneth the whole lump.

10 I have confidence in you through the Lord, that ye will be none otherwise minded: but he that troubleth you shall bear [k] his judgment, whosoever he be.

11 And I, brethren, if I yet preach circumcision, why do I yet suffer [l] persecution? then is the offence [m] of the cross ceased.

12 I would they were even cut off which trouble you.

13 For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty: only use not [n] liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love [o] serve one another.

14 For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; [p] Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

15 But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another.

16 This I say then, Walk [q] in the Spirit, and [r] ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh.

17 For [s] the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary [t] the one to the other: so that [u] ye cannot do the things that ye would.

18 But if [v] ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the law.

19 Now the works of the flesh [w] are manifest, which are these; Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness,

20 Idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies,

21 Envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, the advice is, "Cast out the bond-woman and her son;" that is, reject the law, and embrace the gospel!

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—26. The Galatians exhorted to maintain their Christian liberty inviolate.—"These Galatians, who were converted to the faith of Christ, had been closely beset," as Dr. Watts observes, "by some zealous Judaizing Christians, who would fain have had them circumcised, and engaged to keep the Jewish law." The apostle, who well understood the liberty of the gospel, would not suffer them to be thus imposed upon; and therefore he argues, he allures, he threatens, he denounces—he uses all the proper methods of an apostle, and a preacher of Christianity, to establish them in the liberty wherewith Christ had made them free; and to guard them against yielding a tittle of compliance with the Jewish ceremonies and bondage. He shows them in this [Epistle,] that the promise was given to Abraham, the great believer, with all the blessings of salvation contained in it; and to all those who imitate his faith, by trusting in the gospel of Christ, for they are the [true] seed of Abraham. And the law curses and condemns sinners, but it does not, it cannot, save them. . . . . The question arises, (ver. 19,) To what end then serveth the law? The answer is, To show them their sins, and to keep alive a sense of sin among them [by continual sacrifices] till Christ should come, who was to remove sin. Then comes in the objection—Is not the law then against the promises? Is not the promise to Abraham contradicted by the law given to the Jews? No; by no means; for they were designed for different purposes. The law was given for special and peculiar reasons in this life, to the Jews: the promise was given to Abraham, and, through him, to all Gentile as well as Jewish believers, for eternal life. Whereas, "if there had been a law given, which could have given life, (i. e. eternal life,) verily, righteousness should have been by the law: but the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe."

Thus far we have a judicious abstract of the apostle's argument in the preceding chapters: he now tells them plainly and pointedly, that by conforming to the Jewish ceremonial law, which never was designed for them, they were guilty of apostacy, and renounced Christianity, no less than if they had returned to Paganism. "Behold, I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing." How so, Paul? "Every man that is [now] circumcised becomes a debtor to do the whole law:" because he goes back from Christ, who has fulfilled the law for believers—renounces his atonement, and takes all the responsibility on himself. Christ becomes of "no effect" to those who turn their backs upon him, and seek to be justified and saved by the law of Moses. But to those who believe in Christ, whether Jews who have been circumcised, as born under the law of Moses; or Gentiles, from whom circumcision is not required, "faith which worketh by love" is the only ground of their acceptance—the only foundation of their hope.

On the 2d verse of this chapter ("Behold, I Paul," &c.,) Martin Luther has this pointed remark:—"This place is, as it were, a touchstone, whereby we may most certainly and freely judge of all doctrines, works, religions, and ceremonies of all men. Whosoever teacheth that there is any thing necessary to salvation (whether they be Papists, Turks, Jews, or sectaries) besides faith in Christ; or shall devise any work or religion, or observe any rule, tradition, or ceremony whatsoever, with this opinion, that by such things they shall obtain forgiveness of sins, righteousness, and everlasting life; they shall hear in this place the sentence of the Holy Ghost pronounced against them by the apostle, that Christ profiteth them nothing. Seeing Paul durst give this sentence against the law and circumcision, which were ordained of God himself, what durst he not to do against the chaff and the dross of men's traditions?"

But while Paul deprecates the merit of works, he highly extols the excellency of true—not barren, unproductive—faith, but "faith which worketh by love," on which the same great Reformer just quoted thus descants:—"It is as much as to say, He that will be a true Christian . . . . must be a true believer. Now he believeth not truly, if works of charity follow not his faith. So . . . . as well on the right hand as the left, he shutteth hypocrites out of Christ's kingdom. On the left hand, he shutteth out the Jews . . . . saying, In Christ neither circumcision—that is to say, No works, no service, no worship, no kind of life in the world; but faith, without any trust in works, or merits, availeth before God. On the right hand he shutteth out all slothful and idle persons, which say, If faith justify without works, then let us work nothing; but let us only believe, and do what we list. Not so, ye enemies of grace: Paul saith otherwise. And although it be true, that only faith justifieth, yet he here speaketh of faith in another respect; that is to say, that after it hath justified, it is not idle; but occupied and exercised in working through love. Paul therefore in this place setteth forth the whole life of a Christian man; namely, that inwardly it consisteth in faith towards God; and outwardly, in charity and good works towards our neighbour. So that a man is a perfect Christian inwardly

Ver. 7. Who did hinder you.—The original expression, according to Doddridge, is Olympic, in reference to the races, and alludes to some one "coming across the course while a person is running," and so "stopping," or "driving him back," as the Margin is.

Ver. 8. Him that calleth you.—If this expression be referred to "effectual calling," which is the work of God, it must be ascribed to the Author of all good, as Rom. viii. 30. But if it be understood of the ministerial instrument, then it must refer to Paul only, as in chap. i. 6.

Ver. 9. A little leaven.—See note on 1 Cor. v. 7.

Ver. 10. Shall bear his judgment—i. e. receive his just punishment. See verse 12.

Ver. 11. If I yet preach circumcision.—This is supposed to be an objection of one of his opponents, who perhaps had heard him assert the divine origin of circumcision, which he certainly did not deny: but if they thought him the advocate for circumcision, why persecute him?

CHAPTER VI.

1 He moveth them to deal mildly with a brother that hath slipped, 2 and to bear one another's burden: 6 to be liberal to their teachers, 9 and not weary of well doing. 12 He showeth what they intend that preach circumcision. 14 He gloryeth in nothing, save in the cross of Christ.

BRETHREN, [a] if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore [b] such a one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted.

2 Bear [c] ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ.

3 For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself.

4 But let every man prove [d] his own work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself [e] alone, and not in another.

5 For every man shall bear his own burden.

¶ Unto the Galatians, written from Rome.

through faith before God, who hath no need of our works; and outwardly before men, whom our faith profiteth nothing; but our charity, or our works."

To this clear and judicious statement we add a beautiful illustration, from one of the most eloquent writers of the present day:—"The faith (saith Robert Hall) to which the Scriptures attach such momentous consequences, and ascribe such glorious exploits, is a practical habit, which, like every other, is strengthened and increased by continual exercise. It is nourished by meditation, by prayer, and by the devout perusal of the Scriptures: and the light which it diffuses becomes stronger and clearer by an uninterrupted converse with its object, and a faithful compliance with its dictates; as, on the contrary, it is measured and obscured by whatever wounds the conscience, or impairs the purity and spirituality of the mind."

As the best proof that these Galatians (the more pious part of them, at least) possessed this practical and saving faith, the apostle now exhorts all who were quickened by the Holy Spirit, to endeavour to walk under his daily guidance, and so produce the fruits of the Spirit which are here enumerated—"Love, joy, peace," &c.; while, on the other hand, the works (or fruits) of the flesh, which also are enumerated, are solemnly deprecated; and all who practise them are warned, most solemnly warned, that "they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God."

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—18. Farther admonitions, concluding with the apostolical benediction.—The preceding chapter concludes with recommending an humble and spiritual walk and conversation: this begins, with admitting that it was possible for the most careful, and most pious believer, to be overtaken in a fault, either from the depravity of human nature, or the sudden temptation of the enemy; even as a man, in the fairest weather, may sometimes be overtaken in a thunder storm: in this case, however, he should by no means be abandoned to his fate; but the most spiritual of his brethren should endeavour to restore him to the church, even with the same care and tenderness as they would restore a dislocated limb: considering, at the same time, that they are all exposed to the same danger, and might one day stand in need of the same attentions. They should be candid to each other's failings, and kind to each other in affliction, according to the Saviour's great command, of love and unity and humility.

He cautions them against self-deception, to which persons of a vain-glorious disposition are most exposed: it therefore becomes such to be particularly watchful over their tempers and conduct. He encourages them to liberality, especially toward their faithful teachers; and never to be weary in well-doing, under the idea that they have done enough already. None is more worthy of reward than the faithful minister of the gospel; and no labour more entitled to remuneration than that which is exerted for the good of souls. "Nothing is more conformable to the dictates of reason and of justice, than that those who receive regular public instructions on the most important of all topics, should, according to their ability, compensate their instructers."

In the close of the Epistle, we find, as has before been intimated, that St. Paul was in the habit of employing an amanuensis—(see Rom. xvi. 22)—only himself adding the salutation, as we see in the close of his first Epistle to the Corinthians, and the second to the Thessalonians; but in this case he evidently wrote the whole, and meant this to be considered as a mark of his attention and respect for them. And here we should expect the letter to have closed, but his anxiety will not suffer him to end without a farther caution against their Judaizing teachers, who seemed to glory only in circumcision; whereas, he says, for his part, God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ!"

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

GALATIA was situated between Phrygia on the south, Pamphylia and Bithynia on the north, and Pontus on the east.

St. Paul had heard, that since his departure from Galatia, corrupt opinions had got in amongst them about the necessary observations of the legal rites, induced by several impostors who had crept into that church, and who endeavoured to undermine the doctrine St. Paul had there established, by vilifying his person, slighting him as an apostle, and as not to be compared with Peter, James, and John, who had familiarly conversed with the Lord Jesus Christ in the days of his flesh, and been immediately deputed by Him. In this epistle, therefore, he reproves them with severity, that they had been so soon led out of the right way wherein he had instructed them, and had so easily suffered themselves to be imposed upon by the crafty artifices of seducers. He vindicates the honour of the apostolic office, and shows that he had received his commission immediately from Christ, and that he came not behind the very chief of those apostles.—Cave, Antiq. Apos. 1676.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

["ALTHOUGH," says Dr. Paley, "it does not appear to have been ever disputed, that the Epistle before us was written by St. Paul, yet it is well known that a doubt has long been entertained concerning the persons to whom it was addressed. The question is founded on some ambiguity in the external evidence. Marcion, a heretic of the second century, as quoted by Tertullian, a father in the beginning of the third, calls it the Epistle to the Laodiceans. From what we know of Marcion, his judgment is little to be relied on; nor is it perfectly clear that Marcion was rightly understood by Tertullian. . . The name, in Ephesus, in the first verse, upon which word singly depends the proof that the Epistle was written to the Ephesians, is not read in all the manuscripts extant. I admit, however, that the external evidence preponderates with a manifest excess on the side of the received reading." The same learned writer then proceeds to argue, from internal evidence, that the Epistle could hardly be written to a people with whom the Apostle resided three years; there being no allusion or appeal, as in other epistles, to what had passed when he resided among them.—"It has been said," says Macknight, "that if this Epistle was directed to the Ephesians, it is difficult to understand how the Apostle contented himself with giving them a general salutation, without mentioning any of his numerous friends and acquaintance, with whom he had been intimate during his long residence at Ephesus. But the answer is, . . . there are no particular salutations in the epistles to the Galatians, the Philippians, the Thessalonians, and to Titus, because to have sent particular salutations to individuals, in churches where the Apostle was so generally and intimately acquainted . . . might have offended those who were neglected, . . . and to have mentioned every person of note in those churches, would have taken up too much room. In writing to the Romans, the case was different. The Apostle was personally unknown to most of them . . . and therefore he could, . . . without offence to the rest, take particular notice of all his acquaintance." As, therefore, "the external evidence preponderates with a manifest excess in favour of the received reading," which is not contradicted by its internal evidence; and as Dr. Paley appears to be mistaken in supposing that the word Ephesus was wanting in any manuscript extant, (see Bishop Middleton on the Greek article, p. 510,) we are fully justified in regarding this Epistle as written to the Ephesians. The gospel was first preached in the celebrated but licentious city of Ephesus by St. Paul, with the most abundant success; and such was the Apostle's concern for their spiritual welfare, that he did not leave them till three years afterwards; and on his return from Macedonia and Achaia to Jerusalem, he sent for the elders of the church to meet him at Miletus, where he took an affectionate leave of them, and delivered to them a most solemn charge. (Acts xviii. 19—21; xix; xx. 17—38.) Some years after, he wrote this Epistle from Rome, as stated in the subscription, during his first imprisonment in that city, (chap. iii. 1; iv. 1; vi. 20,) and, from his not expressing any hopes of a speedy release, probably in the early part of it, about A. D. 61;—to establish them in the great doctrines of the Gospel, to guard them against errors, to excite them to a holy conversation, and to animate them in their Christian warfare.]—Bagster.

Grotius has remarked of this Epistle, that it expresses the grand matters of which it treats, in words more sublime than are to be found in any human tongue.

CHAPTER I.

1 After the salutation, 3 and thanksgiving for the Ephesians, 4 he treateth of our election, 6 and adoption by grace, 11 which is the true and proper fountain of man's salvation. 13 And because the height of this mystery cannot be easily attained unto, 16 he prayeth that they may come 18 to the full knowledge, and 20 possession thereof in Christ.

PAUL, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, to the [a] saints which are at [b] Ephesus, and to the faithful [c] in Christ Jesus:

2 Grace [d] be to you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 Blessed [e] be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly [f] places in Christ:

4 According as he hath chosen [g] us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be [h] holy and without blame before him in love:

5 Having predestinated [i] us unto the adoption of [j] children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good [k] pleasure of his will,

6 To the praise [l] of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in [m] the beloved.

7 In whom [n] we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace;

8 Wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence;

9 Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath [o] purposed in himself:

10 That in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in [p] heaven, and which are on earth; even in him:

11 In whom also we have obtained an [q] inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will:

12 That we should be to the praise of his glory, who first [r] trusted in Christ.

13 In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard [s] the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed [t] with that holy Spirit of promise,

14 Which is the earnest [u] of our inheritance until the redemption [v] of the purchased [w] possession, unto the [x] praise of his glory.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—23. Paul implores upon the Ephesian church all the richest blessings of divine grace.—The first preaching of the gospel at Ephesus, the chief city of Proconsular Asia, was by the ministry of St Paul, as we find it recorded in the 18th and 19th chapters of the Acts. There we learn, that at first he was kindly received, both by Jews and Gentiles, until the great adversary of souls raised an opposition against him, by means of Demetrius and his craftsmen. This obliged Paul to leave the city; not, however, before his doctrine had taken deep root, and a Christian church had been there established. Some time after this, in his way to Jerusalem, he sailed past Ephesus, through fear of being detained there by his kind friends; (Acts xx. 16;) but landing at Miletus, he sent for the elders of the Ephesian church, and delivered to them the very affectionate address; (Acts xx. 17—33;) and from which, as well as from the Epistle now before us, it appears that a strong attachment had been formed between them and our apostle.

"What an improbable union!" says the pious Mrs. More. "The late idolatrous worshippers of Diana, and the late persecutor of the saints of Jesus, have now but one heart and one soul. These recent enemies to Christ, and to each other, now meet in one common point of attraction. With what holy triumph does he dilate on their mutual faith!—that love of God in Christ Jesus, which is their common centre, their indissoluble bond of union!"

At least five of St. Paul's Epistles were written from a prison, and this is one of them; in which, as the same excellent female remarks, "He speaks not as from a prison, but as from a region of light, and life, and glory. His thoughts are in heaven; his soul is with his Saviour; his heart is with his treasure. No wonder then that his language has a tincture of the idiom of immortality."

The leading doctrine of this Epistle is the union between Jews and Gentiles; not merely in themselves considered, but in Christ Jesus, their common Lord and Saviour, and the centre of all those blessings, which flow from the fountain of eternal light, and love, and blessedness. So the Epistle opens, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly

CHAP. I. Ver. 1. To the saints which are at Ephesus.—Of the authenticity of this Epistle there is no doubt: but, so early as the second century, Marcion, a well known heretic, asserted, that some copies for Ephesus, read Laodicea; and some such copies still exist, though the great majority, both of copies and versions, read Ephesus. This doubt has been revived in modern times by Grotius and Mill, and the arguments on that side are collected and enforced by Paley. (Horæ Paul. chap. vi. No. 1.) On the other hand, Lardner and Macknight have no less ably defended the present reading. An abstract of the evidence on both sides may be seen in Horne's invaluable Introduction; where it is also remarked, that some ancient copies left a blank for the name, as if it had been a circular intended to be sent to different churches; and as Paul was in prison when he wrote this, it is not impossible that he might have a copy taken with a blank inscription, to be sent to Laodicea also. One thing strikes us forcibly, that though here is no allusion to the circumstances which occurred while he was at Ephesus, the affectionate language in which he speaks of the Ephesians well agrees with his known attachment to them, and with their pious character; whereas of that in Laodicea, we know little to its advantage. See Col. ii. 1; iv. 16. Rev. iii. 14.——And to the faithful.—Some understand this as implying, that this Epistle was addressed, not to the church at Ephesus only, but to all believers, and favours the idea of copies having been sent to Laodicea, and perhaps other churches; and this also will account for the Epistle having no allusion in it to any circumstances peculiar to the Ephesians.

Ver. 2. In heavenly places.—Margin and Doddridge, "heavenly (things;)" but Macknight preserves "places;" understanding thereby the Christian church, which our Lord repeatedly calls "the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. xiii. 24, 31, 33, &c.) Beza understands it, however, of heaven itself, and the blessings there laid up, as in Col. i. 5.

Ver. 9. The mystery of his will.—Seems to refer to the calling of the Gentiles—a mystery long kept secret, and, when revealed, but slowly understood. See Rom. xi. 25; xvi. 25.

Ver. 10. In the dispensation of the fulness of times.—Namely, in the gospel. Gal. iv. 4.——In heaven (Gr. "the heavens") . . . . and on earth.—By this, Locke, and others, understand the Jews and Gentiles. (See Mat. xxi. 43.) Whitby, Doddridge, &c., "Angels and men." We understand the expression to mean, that all persons or things chosen in Christ, should be brought to actual union and communion with him. See Col. i. 20.

Ver. 12. Who first trusted.—This is generally explained of the Jews, and, we presume, justly. See Luke ii. 25, 38.

Ver. 13. Sealed with that Holy Spirit.—See Rom. viii. 1—16, also 2 Co. i. 22.

places (or things) in Christ."—The blessings here referred to, as Dr. Doddridge observes, must "manifestly take in every spiritual blessing, and principally must refer, not to extraordinary and miraculous gifts, but to the sanctifying and saving graces of the Spirit; such as effectual calling, justification by grace, the adoption of children, the illumination of the Spirit, and all the graces of the Christian life, which are common to all believers, and communicated to them in all their several branches. And these are blessings in heavenly things, as they are things that have a manifest relation and respect to heaven, and have a tendency to fit us for it."

These blessings, we have said, flow from the Fountain of all blessedness: "According (says the apostle) as he hath chosen us in him (that is, Christ) before the foundation of the world." We do not think it necessary here to enter into the doctrine of divine decrees; thus far appears to us obvious, both from the Scriptures and common sense: if God is that infinite, eternal, and unchangeable Being we are accustomed to believe, whatever he does in the course of infinite duration, he must always have intended to do; and if he constituted his only begotten Son to be the Head and Saviour of his people before the foundation of the world, he must also have then chosen and appointed them to be the members of his church, (or mystical body,) and the subjects of his kingdom. But it is important for us always to bear in mind the great end and object of this appointment; namely, that they should "be holy and without blame before him in love." It is, therefore, a contradiction in terms, as well as an error in fact, to pretend that the doctrine, that men are predestinated to holiness, has in itself a tendency to lead them to licentiousness.

We are not, however, warranted to say, that such was the happy lot of all the members of the Ephesian church, since undoubtedly there were hypocrites among them, as well as in other churches; but the apostles, as Dr. Doddridge remarks, 'had reason, in the judgment of charity, to believe, that the greater part were" true believers.

There is a singular richness and evangelical unction in the style of this epistle, which attributes every thing "to the praise of the glory of divine grace," and the mercy of that divine Being, who, perfectly independent of his creatures, "worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." In describing the operations of divine grace, they are compared to that almighty energy by which Christ was raised from the dead; and then St. Paul bursts into a rapture on contemplating the glories to which our Saviour is exalted, "far above all principality and power:" and the fulness of grace which he possesses, as "Head over all things to his church, which is his [mystical] body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all;" that is, that filleth with light, and happiness, and glory, all the pure intelligent creation.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—22. St. Paul describes what the Ephesians were by nature, and what they were made by grace.—By nature the Ephesians, as, indeed, all mankind, were dead in trespasses and sins; buried in the pleasures of vice, and the absurdities of idolatry. But he who had raised our Lord, in a literal sense, from the dead, and exalted him to his own right hand in glory, had, by his Holy Spirit, raised them from their graves of ignorance and lust—had quickened them, through their union to him, and virtually exalted them to sit and reign with him in heaven; that is, he had begun in them a work of grace, which was to terminate "in glory everlasting." In this account, two or three circumstances demand our attention.

1. The depths of human guilt and misery, commonly comprised under the term Original Sin, which is defined, to be "the fault and corruption of the nature of every man, that naturally is engendered of the offspring of Adam, whereby man is very far gone from original righteousness, and is of his own nature inclined to evil, so that the flesh lusteth always contrary to the spirit." Original sin naturally leads to actual sins; for our spiritual death is not of that nature as to destroy moral action, or human responsibility. The active mind of man devoid of grace will only multiply transgression; and what the apostle elsewhere says of females, (1 Tim. v. 8,) "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth," is equally true of the other sex; and never was the trade of criminal pleasure carried to a greater excess than among the Ephesians. And not only were they sunk into sensuality, but also into infidelity and even atheism. "The Ephesians, in common with other Gentiles, (says Hall,) are described as being, previous to their conversion, without God in the world—that is, without any just and solid acquaintance with his character, destitute of the knowledge of his will, the institutes of his worship, and the hopes of his favour; to the truth of which representation, whoever possesses the slightest acquaintance with Pagan antiquity, must assent; nor is it a fact less incontestable, that while pagan, human philosophy, was never able to abolish idolatry in a single village, the promulgation of the gospel overthrew it in a great part (and that the most enlightened) of the world."

2. That regeneration, conversion, and sanctification, are peculiarly the work of God. "God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love, wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in our sins, hath quickened us together with Christ. By grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast." And notwithstanding we have so repeatedly recurred to this truth, and shown it to be the foundation doctrine of the church of Christ, we cannot refrain from quoting one other short but pointed passage from "The Homily of Salvation:" "This faith the Holy Scripture teacheth us: this is the strong rock and foundation of the Christian religion; this doctrine all old and ancient authors of Christ's church do approve; this doctrine advanceth and setteth forth the true glory of Christ, and session" is the church, Acts xx. 28; and the redemption here spoken of, that final one of "the redemption of the body." Rom. viii. 23.

Ver. 15. After I heard.—St. Paul not having been at Ephesus for five or six years, had made anxious inquiries after their welfare, and rejoiced in the reports which he received.

Ver. 18. The eyes of your understanding being enlightened.—Doddridge, [and that he would give you to have] "the eyes of your understanding enlightened."

Ver. 19. The exceeding greatness, &c.—Bishop Pearson notices the great beauty and emphasis of this passage.——Mighty power.—Doddridge, "Power of his might."

Ver. 23. That filleth all in all.—Doddridge, "all [persons] in all places." See Col. ii. 9. Chandler thinks here is an allusion to the famous statue of Diana; who, according to St. Jerome, was considered as the nurse, supporter, and life of all living creatures.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. And you hath he quickened.—By the words, "hath he quickened," being put by our translators in Italic, we are warned that they are not in the original of this passage, but supplied from some other verse, which in this case may be from the preceding chapter, wherewith, no doubt, it is intimately connected; as from verse 20. God raised Christ from the dead, and set him at his own right hand: so also "hath he quickened you," who were spiritually dead—"dead in trespasses and sins:" and, upon the whole, we think with Doddridge, that this is the most natural supplement, corresponding, as it does, with verses 6 and 7 following. Chandler and Macknight, however, take the supplement from the verse immediately preceding: "And you hath he filled;" namely, from the fulness which is in Christ. John i. 14, 16. This also is a good and pertinent sense, though we prefer the former 7 That in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness [t] toward us through Christ Jesus.

8 For by grace [m] are ye saved through [n] faith; and that not [o] of yourselves: it is the gift of God:

9 Not of works, lest any man should boast.

10 For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which [p] God hath before [q] ordained that we should walk in them.

11 Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands;

12 That at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world:

13 But now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh by the blood [r] of Christ.

14 For he [s] is our peace, who hath made both [t] one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us;

15 Having abolished [u] in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace;

5 The hidden mystery, 6 that the Gentiles should be saved, 3 was made known to Paul by revelation: 8 and to him was that grace given, that 9 he should preach it. 13 He desireth them not to faint for his tribulation, 14 and prayeth 19 that they may perceive the great love of Christ toward them.

FOR this cause I Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles,

2 If ye have heard of the dispensation [a] of the grace [b] of God which is given me to youward:

3 How that by revelation [c] he made known unto me the mystery; (as I wrote [d] afore in few words;

4 Whereby, when ye read, ye may understand my knowledge in the [e] mystery of Christ)

5 Which in other ages was not [f] made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto the holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit;

beateth down the vain glory of man; this, whosoever denieth, is not to be accounted for a Christian man, nor for a setter forth of Christ's glory; but for an adversary to Christ and his gospel, and for a setter forth of men's vain glory."

3. Not only are regeneration and justification works of grace, but the whole process of human salvation; and no part more so than the great work of reconciliation and atonement, as thus expressed: "Ye who were afar off are made nigh by the blood of Christ." Here seems, as Dr. Doddridge remarks, to be an evident allusion to the privilege of those Israelites, who, having been under any ceremonial pollution, "were cleansed from their guilt by the blood of atonement, and so had free liberty of entering the temple and conversing with God, on which account they are called a people near him." (Ps. cxlviii. 14.) It is added, "He is our peace, who hath made both one;" that is, who hath reconciled both Jews and Gentiles to himself, and to each other; "and hath broken down the middle wall of partition;" alluding to the wall that separated the two courts of the Jews and Gentiles in the temple. "Having abolished in (or by) his flesh, the law of the commandments contained in (the Mosaic) ordinances; to make in himself of twain, one new man;" that is, to form by the union of Jews and Gentiles, one mystic body, even the Christian church. "And that he reconciles both unto God in one body by the cross, having slain the enmity thereby;" that is, the enmity of both to God, and to each other. Here we must always remember, that the first motion of reconciliation comes from God, who, though the offended party, provides the atonement necessary to satisfy his justice; and even condescends, by his word and ministers, to beseech sinners to be reconciled unto him. Even Christ himself, "who is our peace," came down and preached peace personally to the Jews; and ministerially, by his apostles to the Gentiles: and both being formed into one house, or household, and built on one foundation, "grow up," as it were, through the influences of the Holy Spirit, into a sacred temple, a habitation for the Most High himself.

4th, and lastly, (though not so placed in our chapter,) the scheme of redemption no less secures the interests of holiness and good works, than it does the glory of God's free grace. "We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." Can any thing be more strongly expressed? "Ordained to good works," and new-created, expressly to enable us to perform them! Will any man after this say, that the doctrines of grace are unfriendly to good works?

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—21. The mystery of the conversion of the Gentiles opened and explained.—St. Paul recommends himself to the affections of the Ephesians, by informing, or rather reminding them, that he was now a prisoner, on account of his strong attachment to their cause, as Gentiles, and for the exercise of his ministry among them. This divine mystery, namely, that the Gentiles should be admitted to be fellow heirs, and partake on equal terms of all the blessings of Messiah's kingdom, had been revealed to him immediately by Jesus Christ himself; from whom he had received a special commission to publish it to the heathen world, and in the publication of which he was supported and succeeded by "the effectual working" of God's Holy Spirit. In the sequel of this chapter the apostle speaks, 1. Of himself, and of the high privilege bestowed upon him, in constituting him the apostle of the Gentiles; and, 2. Of the glory of the dispensation committed to his hands.

1. St. Paul speaks of himself as less than the least of all saints; to express which idea, he coins a word of peculiar modesty, in which there is no doubt but he refers, as in other cases when speaking of himself, to his former persecution of the saints, when he was, as he calls himself, "a blasphemer, a persecutor, and injurious." (1 Tim. i. 13.) On this circumstance we may remark, that good men, after their conversion, ought never to forget what they were before.

"How different (says the pious Dr. Watts) is our common behaviour from that of holy Paul! When we think of self, we are ready to raise our thoughts beyond all measure, and aggrandize our ideas to a vast and shameful degree, as though we stood as fair, and as large, and as high in the eyes of our fellow-worms, as we do in our own eyes. Vain imaginations! wretched self-flattery—and foolish pride! We take the least

Ver. 8. And that not, &c.—The gift of God here spoken of is salvation.

Ver. 10. God hath before ordained.—Margin and Doddridge, "prepared us." The former sense, if not here, is plainly expressed in verse 4 of chap. i.; and the latter is thus expressed in the 10th article of the Church of England: "We have no moral power to do good works, pleasant and acceptable to God, without the grace of God by Christ preventing [i. e. going before] us, that we may have a good will, and working with us when we have that good will." That want of ability to do right, which springs from a depraved will, or bad disposition, does not excuse men from their obligations to do right; because, the more disinclined men are to do their duty, the more culpable they are.

Ver. 12. Having no hope—i. e. no well-grounded hope.—Without God.—Gr. Atheists.

Ver. 19. Strangers and foreigners.—The strangers were probably proselytes, who resided with them.

Ver. 20. Corner stone.—Builders tell us, this corner stone (akrogoniaiou) was the key-stone of an arch. "It is a chief stone, and in the most conspicuous situation—the highest place. It is precious, or valuable; generally a picked piece, and richly sculptured. It is exactly in the centre of the arch; or, as the idea of the apostle expresses, the very point where the prophets and the apostles, the Old and New Dispensations, meet; and it is the foundation or security of the whole; for if the key-stone were removed, the whole building would fall in ruins."

Ver. 21. Fitly framed.—This may allude to Solomon's temple, of which all the stones were shaped and fitted before they were brought together. 1 Kings vi. 7. So all the stones of the heavenly temple are fitted by the Holy Spirit on earth, before they are raised to Heaven.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1. For you Gentiles.—There is no doubt but the persecuting spirit of the Jews, which led to all Paul's sufferings, was kept up chiefly by his zeal for the conversion of the Gentiles. See Acts xxi. 28.

Many commentators include verses 2 to 13 within a parenthesis, and read, "For this cause, &c. I bow my knees;" but we see no necessity for this, if with Doddridge and Macknight, we supply the verb am thus—"I Paul [am] the prisoner of Jesus Christ," &c.

Ver. 2. If.—Doddridge, "since." Macknight, "seeing."

Ver. 3. By revelation.—See Acts ix. 15, 16; xxii. 21, &c.—I wrote afore—This, some think, refers to what Paul had said in the preceding parts of this epistle—"I have written afore;" namely, chap. i. 9, 10; ii. 11, &c.

Ver. 5. Which in other ages was not, &c.—"It was known long before that the Gentiles should be added to the church; but it was not known that they should be "heirs of the same inheritance," &c. Doddridge.

G That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the Gospel:

7 Whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual [z] working of his power.

8 Unto me, who am less [h] than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches [i] of Christ;

9 And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the [j] mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by [k] Jesus Christ.

10 To the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom [l] of God.

11 According to the eternal [m] purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord:

12 In whom we have [n] boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him.

13 Wherefore I desire that ye faint not at my tribulations for you, which [o] is your glory.

14 For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ,

15 Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named,

16 That he would grant you, according to the riches [p] of his glory, to be [q] strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner [r] man;

17 That Christ may dwell [s] in your hearts by faith; that ye, being [t] rooted and grounded in love,

18 May be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height;

19 And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness [u] of God.

20 Now [v] unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us,

21 Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

CHAPTER IV.

1 He exhorteth to unity. 7 and declareth that God therefore giveth divers gifts unto men, that his church might be 14 edified and 16 grow up in Christ. 18 He calleth them from the impurity of the Gentiles, 24 to put on the new man, 25 to cast off lying, and 29 to put away corrupt communication.

I THEREFORE, the prisoner [a] of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk [b] worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called,

2 With all [c] lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love;

3 Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

4 There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling;

5 One Lord, one faith, one baptism,

6 One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all.

7 But unto every one of us is given grace according to the [d] measure of the gift of Christ.

8 Wherefore he saith, [e] When he ascended up on high, he led [f] captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men.

9 (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth?

of syllables, the least of letters, [I,] and swell and amplify it, (if I may so speak,) to fill a page, or to spread over a whole leaf, and we scarcely leave a scanty margin for all other names to stand in."

But to return to our apostle: 2. We must briefly notice the end and object of his mission, which Dr. Chandler and other commentators think, is here spoken of in allusion to the temple and worship of Diana. There treasures were hidden of great value; and mysteries were practised, known only to the initiated and to the officiating priests; but in the gospel are mysteries and treasures infinitely more valuable, which, indeed, had long been hidden in the secret counsels of the Almighty, but were now to be publicly declared to all men; and not to men only, but to angels, who in the churches of Christ listen with pleasure, to learn the manifold wisdom of God—that is, the wisdom which is displayed in his gospel. (See 1 Pet. i. 12.)

St. Paul entreats his Ephesian friends not to be at all discouraged at hearing of his suffering affliction, or persecution, on their account; since he gloried in sufferings for Christ's sake, and wished them to do the same. For his part, he was neither anxious to avoid, or be delivered from them; but only that they might be instrumental to promote the glory of God, and the salvation of men: and, for the Ephesians, his prayer was, that they might be strengthened, comforted, and enlightened, by the Spirit of God; that being planted in Christ, and founded on him, they might be deeply rooted in love to God, and, as he elsewhere states it, grow up into a spiritual building—"a habitation of God through the Spirit;" that is, into a spiritual temple filled with the glory of God in all its beauty, and in all its communicable fulness, that their minds might be enlarged, so as, in great measure, to comprehend the love of Christ, which is indeed, in its utmost extent, incomprehensible; and to be filled with all the fulness of God, which is infinite and inconceivable.

> "Now to the God, whose power can do
> More than our thoughts or wishes know,
> Be everlasting honours done,
> By all the church, through Christ his Son."—Watts.

CHAP. IV. 1—32. The simplicity and harmony of the Christian faith, on which are founded exhortations to peace and holiness.—As a farther inducement to the Ephesians to listen to his affectionate advice, St. Paul again reminds them, that he was now a prisoner for their sake; he beseeches them, therefore, to walk worthy their high and holy vocation, with all meekness and affection, endeavouring to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." There is (saith he) one mystical body, namely, the church of Christ; one holy Spirit, by which that body is animated; one Lord Jesus, to whom we all owe subjection and obedience; one system of faith and righteousness, which we all acknowledge; one baptism, by which we are all introduced into the church of Christ, and one God and Father of all—that supreme eternal Being, from whom all our blessings flow, and, "in whom we live, and move, and have our being." (Acts xvii. 28.)

He is the great fountain, both of our temporal and spiritual blessings, which are distributed to us through the medium of Christ our Mediator, and according to his pleasure—that is, as he is pleased to measure out to us from his fulness. (John i. 16.) Wherefore David saith, "When he [Christ] ascended up on high," after his resurrection, he received, as a part of his high reward, and that he might bestow them on his followers, a variety of spiritual gifts, which he accordingly distributed. In this there seems a double allusion to the military triumphs of

---

Ver. 6. That the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, &c.—Macknight renders this more literally, "Joint heirs, and a joint body, and joint partakers," &c.—that is, the Gentiles are united with the Jews in all their privileges.

Ver. 8. Less than the least.—(Gr. Elachistoteros.) Dr. Goodwin thinks he might here have some reference to his Roman name, Paulus, which signifies little: as also to the smallness of his person.——Unsearchable riches.—Literally, untraceable.

Ver. 9. And to make all men see.—Literally, "to enlighten all men that they may see."——The fellowship of the mystery—That is, of God's mercy to the Gentiles; and instead of revealing these doctrines to a select few only, as in the Pagan mysteries, they were to be revealed to all nations, and to all classes of mankind; even though hitherto kept secret, and hidden, as it were, in the bosom of the Almighty, from the foundation of the world; i. e. from eternity, for thus ancient are all the purposes of God, (see ver. 11;) even of him who created all things by Jesus Christ. Some critics, indeed, interpret this, not of the creation of our system, but of the regeneration of mankind by the gospel. But this agrees not with the context: for to say the mystery immediately referred to had been kept secret from the first promulgation of the gospel, is directly contrary both to the fact and the design of the apostle.

Ver. 10. The manifold wisdom.—The multifarious or greatly diversified wisdom of God.

Ver. 12. In—by, or through——whom we have boldness.—Doddridge, "freedom of speech."——By the faith of him—i. e. by faith in Christ.

Ver. 14. Of our Lord Jesus Christ.—These words are wanting in some ancient MSS. and versions; but neither their insertion nor their omission at all affects the sense.

Ver. 15. Of whom—i. e. of God the Father.——Is named.—Macknight, "denominated." The Jewish writers call heaven the upper, and earth the lower family of God.

Ver. 16. Riches of his glory, &c.—Riches of grace are called riches of glory in scripture. In this verse, mercy is intended by the phrase riches of his glory, for it is that which God bestows and for which the apostle prays. Compare Rom. ix. 22, 23. In these verses the apostle speaks of God's making known the power of his wrath on the vessels of wrath, and of making known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy.

Ver. 17. Rooted and grounded.—Macknight, "Firmly rooted and founded."

Ver. 19. Filled with all.—Hammond, "Unto all." "Suggesting," says Pye Smith, "the sublime conception of an approximation to the supreme perfection which is begun by religion now, and shall be ever growing in the holiness and bliss of the future state."

CHAP. IV. Ver. 5. One baptism.—It has been disputed whether this be intended of water baptism, or the baptism of the Spirit; but we see no reason to separate what our Lord Jesus has joined together, John iii. 5. "Except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

Ver. 8. He led captivity captive.—It may mean, he led captive those who had carried others captive. See Col. ii. 15; and compare Judges v. 12.—Gave gifts.—The Psalm just quoted says, "received;" but they were received only to bestow.

12 For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ:

13 Till we all come [i] in the unity [j] of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect [k] man, unto the measure of the [l] stature of the fulness of Christ:

14 That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried [m] about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive;

15 But [n] speaking the truth [o] in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the [p] head, even Christ:

16 From [q] whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.

17 This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, in the vanity of their mind,

18 Having the understanding [r] darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the [s] blindness of their heart:

19 Who being past feeling have [t] given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness.

20 But ye have not so learned Christ;

21 If so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus:

22 That ye put [u] off concerning the former conversation the old [v] man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts;

23 And be renewed [w] in the spirit of your mind;

24 And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created [x] in righteousness and [y] true holiness.

25 Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth [z] with his neighbour: for we [a] are members one of another.

26 Be ye angry, and sin not: let [b] not the sun go down upon your wrath:

27 Neither [c] give place to the devil.

28 Let him that stole steal no more: but rather let [d] him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to [e] give to him that needeth.

29 Let [f] no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good [g] to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers.

30 And grieve [h] not the holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed [i] unto the day of redemption.

31 Let all [j] bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and [k] evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice:

32 And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving [l] one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.

CHAPTER V.

2 After general exhortations, to love, 3 to flee fornication, 4 and all uncleanness. 7 not to converse with the wicked, 15 to walk warily, and to be 18 filled with the Spirit. 22 he descendeth to the particular duties, how wives ought to obey their husbands, 25 and husbands ought to love their wives, 32 even as Christ doth his church.

BE ye therefore followers of God, as dear children;

2 And walk in [a] love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a [b] sweet-smelling savour.

3 But [c] fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once [d] named among you, as becometh saints;

4 Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which [e] are not convenient: but rather giving of thanks.

5 For this ye know, that [f] no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who [g] is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

6 Let no man deceive [h] you with vain words:

the Romans; in which they led captive the chief of the princes and generals whom they had subdued, with their wives and families, and a number of inferior persons; and, at the same time, used to distribute liberal rewards among their own soldiers and dependants. The gifts which Christ received, and afterwards distributed again, were not for himself, but for the saints, and especially for the different classes of ministers, to furnish them for their respective duties. As, under the Old Testament, when the tabernacle was to be erected and furnished, the Lord gave suitable gifts to the different artisans; (see Exod. xxxi. 2;) so, under the New, the proper gifts were afforded to all the persons employed to build up the Christian church. Another metaphor is here introduced—"Till we all come . . . . unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ," on which we shall only remark, that the perfection of the Christian character consists in its resemblance to that of Christ: and, as we learn from verse 16th, the perfection of the church, as a body, consists in the unity and harmony of all its members. (See note on chap. iii. 6.)—The remainder of this chapter is filled up with some excellent maxims of Christian morality, on which we shall offer only two or three brief remarks.

1. That the sins and vices which compose the heathen character, belong to "the old man," or our unrenewed nature; and the opposite graces of truth, meekness, honesty, &c. to "the new man," which, "after God, is created in righteousness and true holiness." (Compare Rom. vi. 4—6.) All that is bad is attributable to our corrupt nature; all that is good, to the renewing grace of God. 2. That our conversation with the world forms and demonstrates much of our moral character: wherefore, says the apostle, "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth;" by which, in the next chapter, (ver. 4,) he explains himself to mean "filthiness," and "foolish talking," and "jesting," which are not convenient nor consistent with the Christian name; and should, therefore, by all means be avoided. 3. These things not only disgrace our character, and bring in question our sincerity, but they "grieve the Holy Spirit of God," and provoke him to withdraw, for a time at least, those enlightening and comfortable influences on which much of our happiness, and especially our dying consolations, must depend.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—33. Exhortations to Christian virtues and domestic duties.—Doddridge joins to this chapter the two last verses of the preceding, and not without reason; for when the apostle exhorts the Ephesians to be followers, or imitators, of God as dear children, it has a peculiar reference to the Ver. 10. Far above all heavens.—Not only the material heavens which we behold, but also above the celestial beings which reside in God's immediate presence. See chap. i. 20, 21. Phil. ii. 10.——That he might fill all things—i. e with his presence; as chap. i 23.

Ver. 11. He gave some, apostles—i. e. he gave gifts suited to all the different classes, as in ver. 8.

Ver. 12. For the perfecting—i. e. for the furnishing, or fitting up of holy men for the work of the ministry. See Doddridge.

Ver. 13. Till we all come in—Doddridge, "till we all arrive at"—the unity, &c. The perfection of the Christian character consists in its resemblance to that of Christ: and, as we learn from verse 16th, the perfection of the church, as a body, consists in the unity and harmony of all its members.

Ver. 14. By the sleight of men.—Doddridge thinks this refers to the dishonest practices of gamblers; or perhaps it may refer to the tricks of jugglers.

Ver. 16. Fitly joined, &c.—See Col. ii. 19.

Ver. 18. Blindness.—Margin, "hardness;" because blindness is often occasioned by a hard skin growing over the sight of the eye.

Ver. 21. If so be that—Doddridge, "Forasmuch as"—ye have heard him—Namely, Christ, in his word.

Ver. 26. Be ye angry, and sin not—i. e. refrain from all sinful passions: be angry rather at the sin than at the sinner; and let not your anger be unduly protracted. Ward informs us, that "one of the apartments in the houses of some rich men [in India] is appropriated to a curious purpose, viz. when any of the members of the family are angry, they shut themselves up in this room called the room of anger; . . . . and the master of the family goes and persuades him to come out."

Ver. 32. As God for Christ's sake.—Gr. "As God in Christ hath freely forgiven," &c.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1. Followers.—Gr. "Imitators." So Doddridge.

Ver. 2. An offering and a sacrifice.—Bates thinks that these terms refer to the peace-offerings and sin-offerings of the Jews.

Ver. 3. All uncleanness.—In the English idiom, "Every kind of uncleanness."——Or covetousness.—Doddridge, "insatiable desire;" which may include not only the avaricious, but the lustful.

for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of [i] disobedience.

7 Be not ye therefore partakers with them.

8 For [j] ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light [k] in the Lord: walk as children [l] of light:

9 (For the fruit [m] of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth;)

10 Proving [n] what is acceptable unto the Lord.

11 And have [o] no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove [p] them.

12 For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret.

13 But all things that are [q] reproved are made manifest [r] by the light: for whatsoever doth make manifest is light.

14 Wherefore [s] he saith, [t] Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light.

15 See then that [u] ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, 16 Redeeming the time, because the days are [v] evil.

17 Wherefore be ye not unwise, but understanding what [w] the will of the Lord is.

18 And be not drunk [x] with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit;

19 Speaking to yourselves in [y] psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, [z] singing and making melody in your [a] heart to the Lord;

20 Giving thanks [b] always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ;

21 Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God.

22 [c] Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord.

23 For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church: and he is the saviour of the body.

24 Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in every thing.

25 Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it;

26 That he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing [d] of water by the word,

27 That he might present [e] it to himself a glorious church, not having [f] spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish.

28 So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself.

29 For no man ever yet hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church:

30 For we are members [g] of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones.

31 For [h] this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two [i] shall be one flesh.

32 This is [k] a great mystery: but I speak concerning Christ and the church.

33 Nevertheless let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she reverence her husband.

CHAPTER VI.

1 The duty of children towards their parents. 5 Of servants towards their masters. 10 Our life is a warfare. 12 not only against flesh and blood, but also spiritual enemies. 13 The complete armour of a Christian. 18 and how it ought to be used. 21 Tychicus is commended.

CHILDREN, [a] obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right.

2 Honour [b] thy father and mother; which is the first commandment with promise;

3 That it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth.

4 And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

---

divine virtue of forgiveness; in which we are called upon to imitate the gratuitous mercy of God in pardoning us, by freely forgiving one another, even without those compensations which the world are in the habit of expecting and exacting. And it is remarkable, that we are to take our example, not only from the freeness of the Father's mercy, but also from the infinite extent of the Saviour's love. "Walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and given himself for us." So the Apostle John: "Hereby perceive we the love of God, [i. e. of Christ,] because he laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." (1 John iii. 16.)

The apostle then proceeds to warn the Ephesians against uniting with the heathen in any of the unfruitful works of darkness, among which he includes the profane mysteries, and riotous and lascivious indulgences of idolatry. From this state of spiritual sloth and darkness, he calls upon them to awake and to arise, that they might receive the beams of light from heaven—"Christ shall give thee light."

Among the precepts here enumerated, on two only shall we offer an observation. 1. On "Redeeming the time." An Italian philosopher chose a motto, importing that time was his estate: but alas! like other estates, time may be lost, and require redemption; but the redemption of it is precious, and it demands many sacrifices to redeem it; we must sacrifice our ease, our comfort, and our pleasure: and this, if not accomplished in the present life, is hopeless, and "ceaseth for ever!" We have to redeem the time that has been lost in the vanity of childhood, in the follies of youth, and in the sins of riper years.

2. We are to guard against a farther waste of time, by avoiding all those vain amusements and convivial indulgences which secularize and debase the mind. Instead of the song of the drunkard and the debauchee, we are to cheer and animate each other by "Psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs;" either those provided for us in the sacred Scriptures, or others composed on the same principles.

We do not mean to recommend the introduction of Psalmody into mixed and promiscuous meetings, either of business or friendship; yet we cannot but think, that "Hymns to Christ," such as Pliny says the primitive Christians used to sing in their private meetings, would at any time better become Christians, than "Jolly Bacchus," or "Glorious Apollo."

The last verses of the chapter relate to the conjugal relation, and its domestic duties; and the apostle lays it down as an incontestable duty, that every Christian husband should love his wife, "even as Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it;" and wherever such a husband can be found, who loves his wife well enough to die for her, surely such a man must be reverenced, and there can be no hardship in submitting to him.

The relation between Christ and his church is in perfect analogy to that between JEHOVAH and his people Israel: "Thy Maker is thy husband, the Lord of hosts is his name; and thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel." (Isa. liv. 5.) Hence the sin of apostacy, under both dispensations, is considered and punished as adultery.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—24. The duties of parents and children, masters and servants. The Christian soldier, his armour, and his conflicts.—All our social duties are reciprocal; parents who give their children a careful and religious education, have a right to expect a cheerful and uniform obedience. At the same time, authority should be always exercised with prudence and moderation. The evil passions should neither be indulged nor provoked; but parental discipline should be exercised in the fear of God. So masters should be sparing in their threatenings, and moderate in punishing, knowing that we all have "a Master in heaven," who is no respecter of persons; who will scrutinize the conduct of the sovereign and the slave with equal justice and impartiality. Christian servants, however, must take no advantage of the conscientious lenity of their Christian masters, but serve them with equal

Sac. 90 Unto God—Doddridge, "Even"—the Father

Ver. 23. He is the saviour of the body.—This, we apprehend, refers to the husband as well as to Christ. He is the head of the wife, and the saviour of the body; i. e. it is the duty of the husband not only to govern, but to protect the wife, even at the risk of his own life: and if it be the duty of husbands to "lay down their lives for the brethren," (as St. John says,) surely it is the duty of the husband to lay down his life for his wife, in a similar case.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 2. The first commandment with promise—i. e. with a special and peculiar promise.

Ver. 3. On the earth—Or "land." See Exod. xx. 12

Ver. 4. Nurture and admonition—According to Doddridge, mean "Discipline and instruction," which should always go together.

5 [c] Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of your heart, as unto Christ;

6 Not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart;

7 With good will doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men:

8 Knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free.

9 And, ye masters, do the same things unto them, [d] forbearing threatening: knowing that your Master also is in heaven; neither is there respect [f] of persons with him.

10 Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might.

11 Put on the whole armour [g] of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil.

12 For we wrestle not against [h] flesh and blood, but against [i] principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against [j] spiritual wickedness in [k] high places.

13 Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having [l] done all, to stand.

14 Stand therefore, having your loins girt [m] about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness;

¶ Written from Rome unto the Ephesians by Tychicus.

reverence, and promptitude, as others—"With good will doing service, as to the Lord, and not unto men."

We now come to consider the Christian soldier, his armour, and his conflicts. The life of man was by the ancients compared to a warfare; that of a Christian is eminently so: but then Christianity provides him with armour, both defensive and offensive; and not only so, but likewise with strength and fortitude for the engagement.

"Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." Nor has the believer, however weak in himself, reason to fear the result, while thus supported by divine assistance, notwithstanding the number and magnitude of the hostile powers against him. These are divided into two classes, internal and external; domestic and foreign, if we may so speak; to both which he is continually exposed. Our internal enemies are flesh and blood: that carnal and corrupt nature so pathetically lamented by St. Paul himself, in his epistle to the Romans, (chap. vii. 24:) "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" This continually opposed his advancement in the divine life, and often threatened to cramp the energy of his exertions: but when he recollected the promised strength of his divine Master—the "grace sufficient" to support him under all circumstances; he then burst into the triumphant exclamation—"I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord!" But Paul had, as we also have, other enemies to contend with; namely, "principalities and powers, the rulers of the darkness of this world, and spiritual wickedness," or wicked spirits, who formerly occupied high situations in the upper world, but sinned, and were cast down therefrom; namely, Satan and his host. These wind themselves into the human mind like serpents, seeking whom they can seduce; or prowl about the earth like lions, seeking whom they might devour. It is possible, however, that the expression, "spiritual wickedness in high places," may have a different meaning, and allude to the advanced ground, or elevated stations, from which their fiery darts are aimed at us.

But let us now examine the panoply, or "whole armour of God," provided for us to resist such mighty enemies. The girdle of truth, is the first and most essential part of this armour; for without simplicity and godly sincerity, all our exertions are unquestionably in vain. The breastplate of righteousness, or internal sanctification, is equally necessary to guard the heart; and the shoes, or sandals of peace, are no less important to guard our feet in a path strewed, not with roses, but with thorns and briers—with broken flints, or with burning lava! Above, and over all these, we are commanded to take the shield of faith, which is able to resist and quench the fiery darts of Satan. The helmet of salvation, or the hope and confident expectation of eternal life, is the crowning and completing article of this defensive armour: but we now come to offensive armour, without which, however obstinately the Christian may resist, he can never gain the victory—we mean the sword of the Spirit, which we are told is "the word of God:" and the Spirit of supplication, and watchfulness, and perseverance, are no less necessary to engage upon our side "the power of his might," by which we alone can conquer.

The apostle here drops the allegory, and having spoken of prayer, urges them thereto with all earnestness; and begs an interest in their prayers on the behalf of all saints, and particularly for himself, that he might be enabled, though his body were enchained, freely and boldly to proclaim the mystery of the gospel to the Gentiles, to whom he was sent as an ambassador, with the proclamation of divine mercy.

"Soldiers of Christ, arise,
And put your armour on,
Strong in the strength which God supplies
Through his eternal Son.
Strong in the Lord of Hosts,
And in his mighty power;
Who in the strength of Jesus trusts,
Is more than conqueror."—C. Wesley.

Ver. 6. Eye-service—i. e. while the master's eye is upon them.

Ver. 9. Forbearing—Margin, "moderating"—threatening.—Some masters who are moderate, and perhaps backward, in punishing, are yet violent and outrageous in their threatenings; which, while it is very unbecoming, at the same time often exposes them to contempt.

Ver. 11. The whole armour—(Gr. panoplia) or panoply—of God—i. e. the complete suit of Christian armour.

Ver. 12. Spiritual wickedness in high places.—Margin, "Wicked spirits in the heavenlies." Doddridge explains it of the apostate spirits who formerly resided there. See Jude ver. 6.

Ver. 13. Whole armour.—Complete suit of armour, both offensive and defensive.

Ver. 14. Breast-plate.—[The breast-plate consisted of two parts; one of which covered the whole region of the thorax or breast, and the other the back, as far down as the front part extended.]—Bagster.

Ver. 15. Having your feet shod.—The Grecian soldiers wore greaves and shoes of brass, to preserve their legs and feet: Macknight explains this of the virtues necessary for those who first prepared the way for the gospel, particularly fortitude and perseverance.

Ver. 16. Above (or over) all, taking the shield of faith.—This seems to refer to those large shields which the ancients used to cover their whole bodies; and the fiery darts, to the fire-bearing darts and arrows described by Thucydides and Livy, the lower parts of which were surrounded with tow and other combustible matter, and which, when set on fire, were darted against the enemy. See Orient. Customs, No. 544.—Of the wicked.—Doddridge, "wicked one."

Ver. 17. Sword of the Spirit.—Comp. Heb. iv. 12.

Ver. 18. With all prayer—Social and private, studied and extemporary, supplicatory and deprecatory, &c. Bp. Wilkins, in his treatise of prayer, explains this of improving the gift of prayer by continual exercise, and gathering fit materials by reading, conversation, meditation, &c.

Ver. 20. Ambassador in bonds.—Gr. "In a chain." See Acts xxviii. 20: by which it appears that Paul, as was not unusual, was suffered to dwell in his own hired house, under the charge of a Roman soldier, to whom he was fastened by a single chain. See Paley's Horæ Paul. chap. vi. No. 5.

Ver. 21. Tychicus—Was "one of Paul's friends and fellow-labourers, and had been his companion in the last interview he had with the elders of Ephesus." Acts xx. 4. See also 2 Tim. iv. 12. Titus iii. 12.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

Ephesus was the capital of Proconsular Asia; and the gospel was first preached in this celebrated but licentious city, by St. Paul, with the most abundant success: and such was the Apostle's concern for their spiritual welfare, that he did not leave them till three years afterwards. On his return from Macedonia and Achaia to Jerusalem, he sent for the elders of the church to meet him at Miletus, where he took an affectionate leave of them, and delivered a most solemn charge. (Acts xviii. 19—21; xix; xx. 17—38.) Some years after, he wrote this epistle from Rome, as stated in the subscription, during his first imprisonment in that city. (Ch. iii. 1; iv. 1; vi. 20.) and from his not expressing any hopes of a speedy release, probably in the early part of it, about A. D. 61; to establish them in the great doctrines of the gospel, to guard them against errors, to excite them to a holy conversation, and to animate them in their Christian warfare.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

[The Church at Philippi in Macedonia was planted by the Apostle Paul about A. D. 53, (Acts xvi. 9—40;) and it appears he visited them again, A. D. 60, though no particulars are recorded concerning that visit, (Acts xx. 6.) The Philippians were greatly attached to St. Paul, and testified their affection by sending him supplies, even when labouring for other churches; and when they heard that he was under confinement at Rome, they sent Epaphroditus, one of their pastors, to him with a present, lest he should want necessaries during his imprisonment. The more immediate occasion of the Epistle was the return of Epaphroditus, by whom the Apostle sent it as a grateful acknowledgment of their kindness; which occurred towards the close of his first imprisonment, about the end of A. D. 62, or the commencement of 63, as is evident from the expectation he discovers of his being soon released and restored to them, as well as from intimations that he had been a considerable time at Rome.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER I.

3 He testifieth his thankfulness to God, and his love toward them, for the fruits of their faith, and fellowship in his sufferings, 9 daily praying to him for their increase in grace. 12 He showeth what good the faith of Christ had received by his troubles at Rome. 21 and how ready he is to glorify Christ either by his life or death, 27 exhorting them to unity, 28 and to fortitude in persecution.

A. M. cir. 4066. A. D. cir. 62

PAUL and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at [a] Philippi, with the bishops and deacons:

2 Grace [b] be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 I thank my God upon every [c] remembrance of you,

4 Always in every prayer [d] of mine for you all making request with joy,

5 For your fellowship in the gospel from the first day until now;

6 Being [e] confident of this very thing, that he [f] which hath begun a good [g] work in you will [h] perform it until the day [i] of Jesus Christ:

7 Even as it is meet for me to think this of you all, because [j] I have you in my heart; inasmuch as both in my bonds, and in the [k] defence and confirmation of the gospel, ye all are partakers [l] of my grace.

8 For God is my record, how greatly I long after you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ.

9 And this I pray, that your love may abound [m] yet more and more in knowledge and in all [n] judgment;

10 That [o] ye may [p] approve things that are [q] excellent; that ye may be [r] sincere and without offence till the day of Christ;

11 Being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the [s] glory and praise of God.

12 But I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the gospel;

13 So that my bonds [t] in Christ are manifest in all [u] the palace, and [v] in all other places;

14 And many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear.

15 Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife; and some also of good will:

16 The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds:

17 But the other of love, knowing that I am set for the defence of the gospel.

18 What then? notwithstanding, every way, whether in pretence, or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice.

19 For I know that this [w] shall turn to my salvation through [x] your prayer, and the supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ,

20 According to my earnest expectation and my hope, that in nothing I shall be [y] asl amed, but that with all [z] boldness, as always, so now also, Christ shall be magnified in my body, [a] whether it be by life, or by death.

21 For to me to live is Christ, and to die [b] is gain.

22 But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour: yet what I shall choose I wot not

23 For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire [c] to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far [d] better:

Chap. I. Ver. 1—30. Introduction; with an exposition of Paul's hopes and views.—Philippi was one of the first cities of Macedonia into which St. Paul carried the gospel, where it was successful in the conversion of Lydia and her household, with many others. There, in consequence, a Christian church was planted at an early period; Acts xvi. 9, &c.; and which the apostle repeatedly visited as he passed to and from Greece, and he was much respected and beloved by them. The brethren hearing of his imprisonment at Rome, sent Epaphroditus, one of their most highly esteemed pastors, to comfort and assist him, as in chap. iv. 18. This marked attention on their part, occasioned the epistle now before us, wherein he unites with his own name that of his beloved son Timothy. After the usual apostolic benediction, he assures them of the interest which he took in their spiritual welfare, and the pleasure which he felt in the assurance, that the God of all grace, who had thus "begun a good work" among them, would not leave them, either as a church, or as individual believers, till he had accomplished in them all the good pleasure of his will.

He then informs them, that his present situation, painful as it was, had contributed rather to the furtherance of the gospel than to check it, as its enemies designed. In particular, his imprisonment had excited great attention to the cause, and procured converts even in Cesar's household, (chap. iv. 22.) And other preachers, so far from being intimidated, had, on the contrary, been thereby emboldened; and even supposing that some might have been actuated by improper motives, he could not but rejoice, notwithstanding, to see the gospel spread around him, and become the power of God to men's salvation.

As to himself, Paul's great desire was, that Christ might be Chap. I. Ver. 1. The bishops.—[The word Bishop properly denotes an overseer; and, except its being once applied to Christ, (1 Pe. ii. 25,) is every where spoken of men who have the oversight of Christ's flock.]—Bagster.

Ver. 5. For your fellowship—That is, the Christian communion which he had at different times enjoyed with them.

Ver. 6. He which hath begun, &c. will perform.—This may be understood either of the church, or of individual believers. The objection, that confidence of success has a tendency to produce carelessness and indifference, is so contrary to the general experience of mankind, that we cannot but wonder when we see it mentioned. What so much animates and encourages any person in the progress of a great work, as the persuasion that he shall be enabled to complete it?——The day of Jesus Christ—i. e. of death and judgment.

Ver. 7. I have you in my heart—i. e. you have a deep interest in my affections. See Margin. The phrase is equivocal, and no doubt but the regard was mutual.——Ye all are partakers of my grace—i. e. partakers of the same grace that I am.

Ver. 9. In knowledge.—Rather, perhaps, with knowledge; meaning that their love might be guided by knowledge and discretion.——And in all judgment.—Doddridge, "perception." Macknight, "feeling," or "sensibility."

Ver. 10. Things that are excellent.—Paul intimates that a knowledge of men and things, and a delicate sensibility, or "moral feeling," was necessary to guard the Philippians against being imposed upon. See ver. 15.——Sincere—[Gr. "eilikrineis," from eile, the splendour of the sun, and krino, I judge, discern, properly pure and unsullied to such a degree as to bear examination in the full splendour of the solar rays.]—Bagster.

Ver. 16. Not sincerely—i. e. as Doddridge explains it, not with a pure and simple aim for the salvation of souls. Have modern times produced no instances of preachers pretending to be highly evangelical, out of an envious desire to rival and supplant their brethren?

Ver. 18. I therein do rejoice.—A good man should rejoice in the spread of the gospel, even though his own popularity, or even his congregation, should be diminished thereby.

Ver. 21. For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain.—Some render this, "Christ is gain to me, living or dying;" but this is rather a paraphrase than a translation; and, as Doddridge remarks, destroys the beautiful antithesis between the members of the sentence.

Ver. 22. What I shall choose, &c.—Doddridge, "Which I should choose I know not."

Ver. 23. I am in a strait betwixt two.—Doddridge, "I am borne two different ways." He adds, "the original seems to be an allusion to a ship riding at anchor, and at the same time likely to be forced to sea by the violence of the winds.——Which is far better.—Macknight, "By much far better." This, he adds, "is the highest superlative which it is possible to form in any language."

24 Nevertheless, to abide in the flesh is more needful for you.

25 And having this confidence, I know that I shall abide and continue with you all for your furtherance and joy of faith;

26 That your rejoicing may be more abundant in Jesus Christ for me by my coming to you again.

27 Only [e] let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ: that whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, that ye [f] stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving [g] together for the faith of the gospel;

28 And in nothing terrified [h] by your adversaries: which [i] is to them an evident token of perdition, but [j] to you of salvation, and that of God.

29 For unto you it is given [k] in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake;

30 Having the same conflict which ye saw [l] in me, and now hear to be in me.

CHAPTER II.

1 He exhorteth them to unity, and to all humbleness of mind, by the example o Christ's humility and exaltation: 12 to a careful proceeding in the way of salvation, that they create hearts to the wicked world, 16 and so comforts to him their apostle, whose now ready to be offered up to God. 19 He hopeth to send Timothy to them, whom he greatly commendeth, 25 as he purposeth also, whom he presently sendeth to them.

IF there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any [a] bowels and mercies,

2 Fulfil [b] ye my joy, that ye be [c] like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind.

3 Let nothing [d] be done through strife or vain glory; but in lowliness of mind let each [e] esteem other better than themselves.

4 Look not every man on his [f] own things, but every man also on the things of others.

5 Let this [g] mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus:

6 Who, being [h] in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal [i] with God:

7 But [j] made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a [k] servant, and was made in the [l] likeness of men:

honoured and magnified in him, either in his life and labours, or in his death and martyrdom. "For me, (says he,) to live is Christ;" that is, Christ's honour and his cause were the great objects for the promotion of which he was still content to live, though, at the same time, he contemplated in death an immense and eternal gain. This, indeed, somewhat straitened him in his present views and wishes; for though in life only could he expect to see the fruit of all his sufferings and labours; yet "to be with Christ" was "far much better;" not only than a prison, but even than a palace.

On 2 Cor. chap. v. 1—10, we have already adverted to the doctrine of a separate intermediate state, which receives an ample confirmation from the passage now before us, on which Dr. Macknight thus remarks:—"From what the apostle saith here, we may infer that he had no knowledge nor expectation of a middle state of insensibility between death and the resurrection. For if he had known of any such state, he would have thought it better to live, and promote the cause of Christ and religion, than, by dying, to fall into a state of absolute insensibility. Besides, how could he say that he had a desire to be with Christ, if he knew that he was not to be with him till after the resurrection?" It is clear that his object was not merely rest, but enjoyment—an enjoyment very far better than he could expect or hope on earth.

The chapter concludes with some excellent practical advice to the members of the Philippian church: "Only, (says he,) let your conversation be as becometh the gospel;" in the original of which passage there seems to be an allusion to their heavenly citizenship; as if he had said, "Remember, you are the citizens of no mean city, but of that Jerusalem which is above, and which is the mother of us all—(Gal. iv. 25, 26)—and let all your conduct and conversation be found becoming so high a privilege."

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—11. Exhortations to humility and condescension, after the divine pattern of our Saviour.—This very interesting chapter opens with the most earnest and affectionate exhortations to unanimity and mutual affection; exhorting the Ephesians not to attend only to their several private interests, but, (as Doddridge expresses it,) "each also to aim at promoting the interests of others:" denying themselves, and neglecting their own ease and comfort—condescending to persons of low estate, and even submitting to labour and to sufferings, for those who had no claim, either of merit or obligation: and to enforce this, he sets before them an example, the most extraordinary that earth or heaven can furnish, and wholly without a parallel: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus," &c.; a passage highly valuable, both as furnishing an unequivocal testimony to the proper divinity of our Lord and Saviour, and a practical lesson, equally striking and important. And here we may remark, that the Scriptures do not classify theology under the heads doctrinal and practical, as we do; but they draw all their exhortations to duty from facts, which facts furnish both the most important doctrines and precepts of Christianity, of which we have an instance now before us.

Its practical bearing we have already stated; and we have said this passage also furnishes an unequivocal testimony to the proper divinity of our Lord, which we shall state in the words of the learned and pious Dr. Burgess:—"The language of St. Paul evidently expresses two very different states of being; one highly exalted, the other very humble. In one, Christ is represented as 'being in the form of God;' in the other, as 'made in the likeness of men;' and as having divested himself of one, to assume the other. . . . . We have, then, in these words an exact counterpart of the language of St. John in his gospel, (see chap. i. 1 & 14,) in which he says, that in one state Christ 'was God,' in the other, he was 'made flesh.' . . . . St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Hebrews, (chap. i. 3,) has the same contrast between Christ's pre-existent and human natures, but differently conducted, for his object was different. In [this] Epistle to the Philippians, he is recommending the example of Christ's humility, and therefore he dwells most on his low and despised condition on earth. In the Epistle to the Hebrews, his object is to display the infinite value of the sacrifice of Christ, and therefore he dwells most on the dignity of Christ's pre-existent state."

But to confine ourselves to the passage now before us, it is true that criticism has extorted a different meaning from this text, and some have been bold enough to make it speak on the other side—"He did not think of the robbery of being equal to God!" But, it is evident to common sense, that the passage can have no such meaning: for, 1. Christ is here set forth as an example of humility and condescension; but where is the humility of a creature in not assuming divine honours? or where is the condescension of a man in stooping to the ranks of humanity? 2. The text contains a striking antithesis, between the glory of Deity, and the frailty of humanity—between receiving divine honours, and suffering the deepest disgrace and misery; which antithesis is by this interpretation totally destroyed.

We now come to the reverse of this interesting scene. We have seen our Saviour "evidently set forth" as bending downward from the skies; and as then farther humbled to death and to the grave; but the grave could not detain him. We are now called upon to behold him rising to the highest seat in glory, in a manner no less admirable than his descent to earth and the grave was deeply affecting. His condescension had an object, and that object is accomplished. He came to

---

Ver. 25. I know, &c.—Most probably St. Paul had received a divine intimation to that effect.

Ver. 27. Let your conversation.—[Act suitably to the high honours and privileges which you sustain as citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, and seek the honour of the gospel, and the welfare of the church in all your actions.]—B.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. Bowels and mercies.—This, in the Hebrew idiom, would be "bowels of mercies," as in Col. iii. 12.

Ver. 2. Like-minded.—Doddridge, "unanimous."—Of one accord, of one mind.—Doddridge, "Having your souls joined together in attending to the one (great) thing;" namely, practical holiness. Guise understands the first expression (like-minded) as a general term, and the following as particulars of it; having the same love, the same designs, the same principles.

Ver. 6. The form of God.—The term seems most naturally to mean, "existing in the glory and majesty of Deity," as in Heb. i. 3. Some light may be thrown on this passage, from a parallel expression of Clement, Bishop of Rome, in the close of the first century:—"The sceptre of the majesty of God, our Lord Jesus Christ, came not in the show of pride, though he could have done so, but with humility," &c. (Wake's Epis. ch. xvi.) Here "the sceptre of God's majesty" seems to explain the "form of God;" and the opposition between the members of the sentence is very similar: Christ is also here proposed as a pattern of humility.—Thought it not robbery—Or injustice —to be, or represent himself as, EQUAL with God.—We have not room, nor would it be consistent with our plan, to introduce long verbal criticisms; but justice requires us to remark, that some very able scholars, and at the same time zealous defenders of the divinity of Christ, give a very different version of this expression. Waterland says, "I am persuaded that the words may very justly be translated, 'He did not very highly value—did not insist upon his equality with God,'" &c. Pye Smith also renders it—"Did not esteem it an object to be caught at, to be on a parity with God; but emptied himself," &c. Wardlaw, however, and other able critics, contend in favour of the common version.—Equal with God.—Some contend that the Greek (isa) should be rendered "like;" but in the scriptures, the terms like and equal are often used as equivalent—"To whom will ye liken me, or shall I be equal? saith the Holy One?" Isa. xl. 25; xlvi. 5.

Ver. 7. But made himself of no reputation.—Gr. "emptied himself," so Doddridge; but Macknight, "divested himself," i. e. of his honours and his glory.—And took [Gr. "taking"] upon him the form—the character, the station—of a servant—a bondman, or slave, as the word usually signifies, (so Macknight:) but this does not mean literally that he was in any servile capacity, but treated as such—scourged, crucified, &c.—And was made [Gr. "being made"] in the likeness of men—Means, he became as a common ordinary man. See Isa. liii. 2.

humbled himself, and became [m] obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.

9 Wherefore [n] God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name:

10 That at the name of Jesus [o] every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth;

11 And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is [p] Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

12 Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work [q] out your own salvation with [r] fear and trembling.

13 For it is God [s] which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure.

14 Do all things without [t] murmurings and [u] disputings:

15 That ye may be blameless and [v] harmless, the sons [w] of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a [x] crooked and perverse nation, among whom [y] ye shine as lights [z] in the world;

16 Holding forth the word of life; that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in [a] vain, neither laboured in vain.

17 Yea, and if I be [b] offered [c] upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy, and rejoice with you all.

18 For the same cause also do ye joy, and rejoice with me.

19 [d] But I trust in the Lord Jesus to send Timotheus [e] shortly unto you, that I also may be of good comfort, when I know your state.

20 For I have no man [f] like-minded, who will naturally care for your state.

21 For all seek their [g] own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's.

22 But ye know the proof of him, that, as a son with the father, he hath served with me in the gospel.

23 Him therefore I hope to send presently, so soon as I shall see how it will go with me.

24 But [h] I trust in the Lord that I also myself shall come shortly.

25 Yet I supposed it necessary to send to you [i] Epaphroditus, my brother, and companion in labour, and [j] fellow-soldier, but your messenger, and he that ministered to my wants.

26 For he longed after you all, and was full of heaviness, because that ye had heard that he had been sick.

27 For indeed he was sick nigh unto death: but God had mercy on him; and not on him only, but on me also, lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow.

28 I sent him therefore the more carefully, that, when ye see him again, ye may rejoice, and that I may be the less sorrowful.

29 Receive him therefore in the Lord with all gladness; and [k] hold such in reputation:

30 Because for the work of Christ he was nigh unto death, not regarding his life, [l] to supply your lack of service toward me.

CHAPTER III.

1 He warneth them to beware of the false teachers of the circumcision, 4 showing that himself hath greater cause than they to trust in the righteousness of the law 7 which notwithstanding he counteth as dung and loss, to gain Christ and his righteousness, 12 therein acknowledging his own imperfection. 15 He exhorteth them to be thus minded, 17 and to imitate him, 18 and to decline the ways of carnal Christians.

FINALLY, my brethren, rejoice [a] in the Lord. To write the same [b] things to you, to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe.

redeem our ruined race, and had in the covenant of redemption a stipulated reward. He rises in the same nature in which he died, and bears with him to heaven the trophies of his victory. He has a name given him above every name, and receives an accumulation of honours from heaven and earth, and from the invisible world. But here our curiosity must be repressed. Let us join with all the intelligent creation in ascribing to him glory—assuredly believing, that there is no jealousy in the divine Being; but whatever praise is rendered to the Son redounds no less to the glory of the Father also: and however fearful some persons may appear to be, of paying excessive honours to the Son, himself hath told us, that "He that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father." (John v. 23.)

One thing may particularly merit our attention, that though it is the same person who thus ascended, that had previously descended, it was with a peculiar accession of honour and felicity. Not, indeed, that any thing could be added to his happiness as a divine person; but he had taken human nature into union with the divine: that nature had suffered and died; that nature is therefore exalted to the highest happiness, as well as glory, that a created nature is capable of enjoying. This was the reward of suffering love; "Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him!"

Ver. 12—30. The Philippians exhorted to "work out their salvation" with diligence and care. The praise of Epaphroditus.—The apostle having set before his beloved Philippians the example of Jesus Christ, and the glory to which he had been advanced, urges upon them the necessity of practical religion: "Work out your own salvation .... for it is God which worketh in you," &c. M. Claude (an eminent French Protestant divine) treats this passage with great judgment. After a few expository remarks, he deduces from the words the following theological propositions:—1. God by his Holy Spirit illuminates the understandings of men; for working in us to will, must necessarily be by illuminating the understanding. 2. That operation of grace which illuminates the understanding is practical, and not barely speculative, but descends even to the heart. St. Paul says, God works in us to do. 3. The first dispositions to conversion are effects of grace, as well as conversion itself: for St. Paul not only says, God worketh in us to do; but he adds, he worketh in us to will; now this will consists in dispositions to conversion. 4. This operation of grace does not consist in putting us in a state capable of converting ourselves, as the admirers of sufficient grace say; but it actually converts us: for the apostle says, "God worketh in us to will and to do." 5. The operation of this grace which converts us, is of victorious efficacy, and obtains its end in spite of all the resistances of nature; for St. Paul says, God "effectually worketh in us to will and to do;" which means, that when he displays this grace, nothing can [effectually] resist him. 6. When God converts us, whatever irresistibility there is in his grace, he displays it, nevertheless, to us in a way which neither destroys our nature, nor offers any violence to our will; for St. Paul says, "God worketh in us to will;" that is to say, he converts us by inspiring us with love for his gospel in gentle ways, suited to the faculties of our souls.

Dr. Doddridge says—"The original (of this passage) is very emphatical, as Mr. Howe beautifully observes; for it asserts, on the one hand, that God is actually or continually operating, and, on the other, that thus to work in the heart for such noble purposes, is the prerogative of God, and an effect worthy his divine attributes and perfections." President Edwards says—"I question if any word can be found in all the Greek language more expressive." When it is added, that we are to work out our salvation "with fear and trembling," the words imply a great degree of humility and reverence, and are in this sense applied by St. Chrysostom to the holy angels, as is observed by Dr. Hammond.

In the latter part of this chapter St. Paul intimates the probability of his being sacrificed on their account, and his blood being poured forth as a libation or drink-offering; but in the contemplation of this he triumphed in the true spirit of martyrdom.

Before this event, however, should take place, he hoped not only to send them his son Timothy, but even to be liberated, that he might himself visit them. Also to send back unto them their beloved messenger Epaphroditus, of whom he speaks in the most affectionate and endearing terms.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—21. St. Paul warns the Philippians against false teachers, and exhorts them to place their whole confidence in Christ.—The apostle's first caution is expressed in very strong and unceremonious terms. Dr. Macknight

Ver. 8. Even the death of the cross.—That is, the most degrading, excruciating, and accursed, of all the forms of death.

Ver. 9. Given him.—Macknight, "bestowed on him."

Ver. 10. At (Gr. "in") the name of Jesus—i. e. to him, as the Saviour of men—every knee should bow—i. e. all creatures should worship him. See Rev. v. 13, 14; and compare Rom. xiv. 11.

Ver. 13. Which worketh.—Macknight, "Who inwardly worketh."

Ver. 15. Ye shine.—Margin, "Shine ye." So Theophylact. Compare Mat. v. 14, 16. But Saurin explains this in reference to light-houses, and particularly the famous tower of Pharos, in which lights were always kept burning, as a guide to mariners.

Ver. 17. Offered upon.—Margin, "poured forth;"—i. e. if my blood should be poured forth in martyrdom. [Parkhurst well remarks, that the Apostle compares the faith of the Philippians to the sacrificial victim, and his own blood shed in martyrdom to the libation—i. e. the wine poured out, on occasion of the sacrifice.]—Bagster.

Ver. 19. Your state—i. e. the state of the church and of the cause.

Ver. 25. Messenger.—Gr. "apostle." The pastors were the apostles' messengers, or angels of the churches: St. Paul and the eleven were apostles of Jesus Christ.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1. To write the same things.—To repeat what he had said in the preceding chapter, verses 17, 18.

2 Beware of [c] dogs, beware of [d] evil workers, beware of the [e] concision.

3 For we [f] are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh.

4 Though I might also have confidence in the flesh. If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more:

5 Circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, a Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a [g] Pharisee;

6 Concerning [h] zeal, persecuting the church; touching the righteousness which is in the law, [i] blameless.

7 But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss [j] for Christ.

8 Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for [k] the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have [l] suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ,

9 And be found in him, not having mine own [m] righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness [n] which is of God by faith:

10 That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the [o] fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death;

11 If by any means I might [p] attain unto the resurrection of the dead.

12 Not as though I had already attained, either were already [q] perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus.

13 Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting [r] those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before,

14 I press [s] toward the mark for the prize of the high [t] calling of God in Christ Jesus.

15 Let us therefore, as many as be [u] perfect, be thus [v] minded: and if in any thing ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you.

16 Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same [w] rule, let us mind the same thing.

17 Brethren, be followers [x] together of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us [y] for an ensample.

18 (For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies [z] of the cross of Christ:

19 Whose [a] end is destruction, whose [b] God is their belly, and whose [c] glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things.)

20 For our [d] conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look [e] for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ:

21 Who shall change [f] our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working [g] whereby he is able even [h] to subdue all things unto himself.

observes—"The apostle calls the bigots among the unbelieving Jews, dogs, because they barked against the doctrines of the gospel and its faithful teachers, and were ready to devour all who opposed their errors. Our Lord used the word dogs in the same sense, when he commanded not to give that which is holy unto the dogs. (Matt. vii. 6.) Perhaps the unbelieving Jews are called dogs, likewise, to signify that, in the sight of God, they were now become as abominable for crucifying Christ, and persecuting his apostles, as the idolatrous heathens were in the eyes of the Jews, who, to express their abhorrence of them, called them dogs." The same persons are evidently intended by "evil workers," and "the concision," or "the excision," as the commentator just named renders it; a word formed by St. Paul, to designate those who contended for circumcision as necessary to salvation; in opposition to whom, the apostle describes himself and brethren as "the true circumcision;" those who looked to the spiritual intent and design of that ordinance—"who worshipped God in the spirit;" that is, spiritually and evangelically, and "put no confidence in the flesh," nor in any fleshly ordinances, farther than the word of God requires and justifies them in so doing: not but, as he says, if such a confidence were warrantable, no man could have a greater right to boast in external privileges and advantages than himself, being "a Hebrew of the Hebrews," &c. as he subjoins.

But what things soever he had formerly accounted gain, and valued himself upon, those he now "counted loss for Christ," and in deference to his gospel and his cause. "Yea, doubtless," adds he, bursting into a rapture of holy triumph—"Yea, doubtless, and I count all things (but) loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things;" namely, fortune, character, and fame—ease, comfort, and (that in which above all things I gloried) my own self-righteousness; "and do still count them all (but) dung, that I may win Christ, and be found (interested) in him; not having my own righteousness, which is of the law; but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith;"—that righteousness which God imputes to penitent sinners believing in his Son. (See exposition, Rom. iii. 20—31.)

The apostle adds—"That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection," &c. as if he had said, That I may have an experimental acquaintance with his love—feel the attractive power of his resurrection, drawing up my heart and affections to heaven and heavenly things—obtain a fellowship in his sufferings and death; if by any means I might attain to the resurrection from the dead—meaning the first resurrection, or the resurrection of the just. St. Paul then returns to his favourite metaphor, comparing the course of a Christian life to the Olympic races—"Not as though I had already attained the prize, or completed my course, (see 1 Cor. ix. 24—26;) but I follow after (it,) if that I may (but) apprehend that, for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." To apprehend, is literally to lay hold of; Christ had laid hold of the apostle, to introduce and to help him onward in the course, and his own anxiety was, that he also might reach the goal. For this purpose, forgetting the things that were behind, namely the attainments he had already made, he was still eagerly reaching forward, still pressing toward the goal, eager to "lay hold on eternal life," which is "the prize of (our) high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

"Let, therefore, as many as be perfect"—that is, all who have attained to any proficiency in the Christian life, "be thus minded"—thus earnest in persevering, thus eager to gain the prize.—"Nevertheless, (or however,) whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, (mark, or line,) till we complete our race, and seize the prize of immortality, the resurrection of the dead."

Before we close this chapter, there is one thing on which we beg leave to remark, that many Christians lose time, by stopping to survey the ground they have passed, instead of eagerly reaching forward to the end; we mean, (without a figure,) they trust too much to past experiences, instead of keeping the eye steadily looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of their faith, (Heb. xii. 2.) There is also another point of view in which this expression may be understood and im-

Ver. 2. Beware of dogs.—L'Enfant states, that the Romans used to chain their dogs at their house-doors, and write over a caution to strangers to beware of them; to which he thinks the apostle here alludes.—Of the concision.—Macknight, "excision;" a term framed and used satirically for the bigoted advocates of circumcision.

Ver. 5. A Hebrew of the Hebrews.—See Rom. xi. 1.

Ver. 7. I counted loss—i. e. "I threw them away, as mariners (often) do their goods, lest they should endanger their lives. See Acts xxvii. 21."—Doddridge.

Ver. 8. The loss of all things.—Doddridge thinks it not improbable (we think it almost certain) that Paul had been laid, by his unbelieving brethren, under the great excommunication, which forfeited all his property.

Ver. 10. The power of his resurrection.—See Rom. vi. 4, 5. 2 Co. i. 5—7, &c.

Ver. 11. Resurrection of the dead.—Macknight, "from the dead;" i. e. the first resurrection, which is of believers only; 1 Co. xv. 23. 1 Thess. iv. 16.

Ver. 12. Already perfect.—Some think this may refer to the initiated in the heathen mysteries who were so called; others, with more probability, refer it to the public games here alluded to. Those who obtained a prize were said thereby to be made perfect; that is, to have gained their object.—Apprehended of Jesus Christ.—Some think this may refer to those who were taken by the hand, and introduced to the games by persons of repute and credit.

Ver. 13. Forgetting those things which are behind.—This is commonly understood as referring to the ground passed over in the course; but Hammond quotes from Horace a striking passage, which, speaking of a competitor in the chariot-races, says—"He presses to overtake those horses which are before his, but contemns and looks not back after any that he has left behind."—And reaching forth.—Macknight, "Exceedingly stretching myself forward."

Ver. 14. I press toward—Macknight, "I follow along"—the mark—i. e. the white line chalked out to guide their course.

Ver. 19. Whose God is their belly—Or "the belly;" for the pronoun is unnecessary. These were evidently gluttons and drunkards, and gloried in their vices, of which they ought to be ashamed.

Ver. 20. Our conversation, &c.—Doddridge, "We converse as citizens of heaven."

Ver. 21. Who shall change our vile body.—Literally, "Who shall transform the body of our humiliation."—Doddridge.

CHAPTER IV.

From particular admonitions 4 he proceeleth to general exhortations, 10 showing how he rejoiced at their liberality towards him lying in prison; not so much for the supply of his own wants, as for the grace of God in them. 19 And so he concludeth with prayer and salutations.

THEREFORE, my brethren dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved.

2 I beseech Euodias, and beseech Syntyche, that they be of the same mind in the Lord.

3 And I entreat thee also, true yoke-fellow, help those women which laboured with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and with other my fellow-labourers, whose names are in the book of life.

4 Rejoice [a] in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice.

5 Let your moderation [b] be known unto all men. The Lord [c] is at hand.

6 Be careful [d] for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God.

7 And the peace [e] of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.

8 Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are [f] true, whatsoever things are [g] [h] honest, whatsoever things are [i] just, whatsoever things are [j] pure, whatsoever things are [k] lovely, whatsoever things are of good [l] report; if there be any [m] virtue, and if there be any [n] praise, think on these things.

9 Those things, which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do: and the God [o] of peace shall be with you.

10 But I rejoiced in the Lord greatly, that now at the last your care of me [p] hath flourished again; wherein ye were also careful, but ye lacked [q] opportunity.

11 Not that I speak in respect of want: for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be [r] content.

12 I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound: every where and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need.

13 I can do all things through [s] Christ which strengtheneth me.

14 Notwithstanding ye have well done, that ye did communicate with my affliction.

15 Now, ye Philippians, know also, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no [t] church communicated with me as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only.

16 For even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my necessity.

17 Not because I desire a gift: but I desire fruit that may abound to your account.

18 But [u] I have all, and abound: I am full, having received of Epaphroditus the things which were sent from you, an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice [v] acceptable, well pleasing to God.

19 But my God shall supply [w] all your need according to his riches [x] in glory by Christ Jesus.

20 Now [y] unto God and our Father be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

21 Salute every saint in Christ Jesus. The brethren which are with me greet you.

22 All the saints salute you, chiefly they that are of Cesar's household.

23 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

¶ It was written to the Philippians from Rome by Epaphroditus.

proved. The racers never stopped to look back after their competitors, whom they had distanced and left behind: so Christians, when they appear to have gained an advance, and got before their brethren, should not employ themselves in depreciating their slow advances, or in commending their own superior progress; but each should still keep pressing on, while there is but one before them.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—23. General exhortations to perseverance—the apostle's thankfulness for the liberality of the Philippians, and to God on their behalf.—The first verse of this chapter contains a general inference from the preceding:—"Therefore, my brethren dearly beloved and longed for," seeing that such a hope of a glorious resurrection, and of everlasting life, is set before us, "Dearly beloved, my joy and crown, so stand fast in the Lord"—and be not shaken in the firmness of your principles, nor impeded in the ardour of your pursuit of heaven and endless glory. The apostle next names certain individuals, to whom he had been personally known, and from whom he had received assistance in the prosecution of his ministry; and then combining what he had to say to all, in one general address, exhorts them to "rejoice in the Lord"—to moderate their pursuits respecting the present life—to submit all their desires to the divine will—to cast all their cares, by prayer, upon the Lord, and to devote themselves to the practise of every moral virtue and Christian duty. "Whatsoever things are true and just, grave and respectable, pure and lovely, or of good report among mankind—If (says he) "there be any virtue" in them—any praise resulting from them—"think of these things"—meditate on their nature and excellency, and reduce them into practice.

St. Paul then delicately introduces an acknowledgment of his own personal obligations to them, at the same time stating his independence of the world—having "learned, in whatsoever state" he might be placed, "therewith to be content" and thankful. He knew how to bear abasement, and to enjoy abundance: in short, he could "do all things through Christ strengthening" him. Notwithstanding which, he gratefully acknowledges their kindness, and assures them that God would richly reward them, by supplying all their need, "according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

We conclude with noticing the happy consequences of being able to commit all our concerns to God, both temporal and spiritual, which is, a "peace which passeth all understanding," and is able to keep the heart from all anxiety and alarm. It is "the peace of God—the God of peace:" and "if he give peace, who can make trouble?" (Job xxxiv. 29.)

CHAP. IV. Ver. 2. I beseech Euodias, and beseech Syntyche, that they be of the same mind.—These appear to have been two Christian females (perhaps deaconesses) who seem to have had some difference between them, and whom Paul wished by all means to reconcile.

Ver. 3. True yoke-fellow.—Doddridge, "Associate." We apply the term exclusively to the conjugal relation, but Paul, we are to recollect, was not married, and the word is masculine.—With Clement also.—The same Clement, probably, whose Epistle to the Romans we have referred to in the second chapter of this Epistle.—Whose names are in the book of life.—It is hardly to be supposed that Paul meant to reveal the decree of God respecting these individuals by name; Doddridge therefore softens the expression: "Whose names (as I have reason in charity to hope) are written," &c. See Mat. iii. 16. Rev iii. 5. But And. Fuller gives a somewhat different explanation in his discourses on the Apocalypse. "The blessed God (says he) is represented as keeping a register of his servants, not as elect, or as redeemed, or as called, but as his professed followers. When any turn back, their names are blotted out. Hence, at the last judgment, it is made the rule of condemnation 'Whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire' (Rev. xx. 15.) Some were never there, never having professed to be the followers of Jesus; while others, who had been there, were blotted out: in either case, their names would not be found there. Hence also (chap. xxi. 27) it is the rule of admission into the New Jerusalem."

Ver 5. The Lord is at hand.—See 2 Thess. ii. 2.

Ver. 6. Be careful—Doddridge, "anxious"—for nothing.

Ver. 7. The peace of God—Is that of which he alone is the author, and which he alone can give. John xiv. 27.

Ver. 8. Honest.—Doddridge and Macknight, "venerable," or "grave." The true idea seems to be as expressed by Lardner: "Without levity in word, action, habit, and behaviour;" which (levity) often renders persons despicable.

Ver. 10. Hath flourished again.—"In this figurative expression (says Macknight) the apostle likened the Philippians' care of him to a plant, which withers and dies in winter, but groweth again in the following year; or to trees, which, after their leaves drop in autumn, put them forth again next spring. Lest, however, the Philippians might think this expression insinuated a complaint that they had been negligent latterly, the apostle immediately added, that they had always been careful to supply his wants, but had not had an opportunity till now."

Ver. 12. I am instructed.—The word commonly used for those who were initiated into the ancient mysteries, and perhaps intimating that these practical instructions are the best initiation into the Christian mysteries, as they teach both humility and gratitude.

Ver. 13. I can do.—Macknight, "I am able to bear." Doddridge, "I am sufficient for"—all things.

Ver. 15. When I departed from Macedonia.—Doddridge, "was departing." He must have received these sums before he left Macedonia, and the last, perhaps, just as he was departing; about twelve years before this Epistle was written.

Ver. 16. Even in Thessalonica.—A famous city in Macedonia. See Acts xvii. 1, &c.

Ver. 22. Cesar's household.—[The cruel, worthless, and diabolic Nero, was at this time emperor of Rome; but it is not improbable that the empress Poppea was favourably inclined to Christianity, as Josephus relates that "she was a worshipper of the true God." Jerome states, (in Philem.) that St. Paul had converted many in Cesar's family; for "being by the emperor cast into prison, he became more known to his family, and turned the house of Christ's persecutor into a church."]—Bagster.

The subscription of this Epistle "from Rome, by Epaphroditus," seems correct. Compare chap. iii. 25. We have before mentioned that none of these are of any divine authority, being added by some transcriber, and chiefly upon conjecture. Paley particularly rejects those appended to the first Epistle to the Corinthians, the Galatians the first to the Thessalonians, &c.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS.

[COLOSSE was a large and populous city of Phrygia Pacatiana, in Asia Minor, seated on an eminence to the south of the river Meander, near to the place, says Herodotus, (l. vii. c. 30,) where the river Lycus enters the earth, which course it continues for five furlongs, before it emerges and falls into the Meander. It was situated, according to ancient authorities, between Laodicea and Hierapolis, nearly equi-distant from each; all which cities, according to Eusebius, were destroyed by an earthquake, in the tenth year of the emperor Nero, and about a year after the writing of this Epistle. Colosse, however, doubtless rose again, like her sister cities, from her ruins; and Constantine Porphyrogennetus states that it was called in his time Chonæ. Colosse is supposed to have occupied a site now covered with ruins, near the village of Konous, or Khonas, about three hours from Laodicea, but on the other side of the river which is supposed to be the Lycus, and about twenty miles N. W of Degnizlu. By whom, or at what time, the church at Colosse was founded is wholly uncertain; but it would appear from the Apostle's declaration, ch. ii. 1, that he was not the honoured instrument. It appears from the tenor of this Epistle to have been, upon the whole, in a very flourishing state; but some difficulties having arisen among them, they sent Epaphras to Rome, where the Apostle was now imprisoned, (ch. iv. 3,) to acquaint him with the state of their affairs. This was the immediate occasion of the Epistle; to which we may add the letter sent him by the Laodiceans, (ch. iv. 16,) concerning certain false teachers. This Epistle appears to have been written about the same time with that to the Philippians, (compare chap. i. 1. with Phi. ii. 19,) that is, towards the end of A. D. 62, and in the ninth of the emperor Nero.]—B.

CHAPTER I.

1 After salutation he thanketh God for their faith, 7 confirmeth the doctrine of Epaphras, 9 prayeth further for their increase in grace, 14 describeth the true Christ, 21 encourageth them to receive Jesus Christ, and commendeth his own ministry.

PAUL, [a] an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timotheus our brother,

2 To the saints [b] and faithful brethren in Christ which are at Colosse: [c] Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 We [d] give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you,

4 Since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love which ye have to all the saints,

5 For the hope which is laid up [e] for you in heaven, whereof ye heard before in the word of the truth of the gospel;

6 Which is come unto you, as it is in all [f] the world; and bringeth [g] forth fruit, as it doth also in you, since the day ye heard [h] of it, and knew the [i] grace of God in [j] truth:

7 As ye also learned of [k] Epaphras our dear fellow-servant, who is for you a faithful minister of Christ;

8 Who also declared unto us your love [l] in the Spirit.

9 For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his [m] will in all [n] wisdom and spiritual [o] understanding;

10 That ye might walk [p] worthy of the Lord unto all [q] pleasing, [r] being fruitful in every good work, and increasing [s] in the knowledge of God;

11 Strengthened [t] with all might, according to his glorious power, unto all [u] patience and long-suffering with [v] joyfulness;

12 Giving thanks unto the Father, which hath made us meet [w] to be partakers of the inheritance [x] of the saints in light:

13 Who hath delivered us from the power of [y] darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of [z] his dear Son:

14 In [a] whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins:

15 Who is the image [b] of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature:

b He. 1. 3.

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—14. Paul's apostolical benediction to the Colossians—his prayers and thanksgivings on their behalf.—Colosse was a populous city of Phrygia, in Asia Minor, not far from Laodicea. Drs. Lardner and Macknight, Bishop Tomline, and others, are of opinion, that St. Paul preached the gospel in this city, as he passed twice through Phrygia, wherein it lay: others think it more probable, that some of the Colossians might have heard him in his tour through the neighbouring parts, and been converted by his ministry, though unknown to him; and that they carried the first tidings of salvation to that city, which (as is inferred from chap. ii. 1) he had not yet visited. Epaphras, their minister, whom Paul calls his fellow-labourer, and a faithful minister of Christ, might be one of those: however that were, he appears to have been an active agent in forming and arranging their church, probably in communication with, and under the direction of, the apostle.

The occasion of this epistle seems to have been the attempt of certain Judaizing teachers, to introduce some new and crude opinions, relative to the worshipping of angels, by which Christ was probably degraded and confounded with them, who was indeed their head and Lord, as the apostle here shows.

These epistles were evidently written during Paul's first imprisonment in Rome, as may be seen by comparing Ephes. iii. 1, with Coloss. i. 24; in both which he speaks of himself as a prisoner on their behalf, suffering for his attachment to the Gentiles, as we have already remarked in a note upon the former text. The many coincidences between them, both of matter and phrase, are very rationally accounted for by Dr. Paley, on the supposition of their being written at the same time, or very nearly so.

The epistle before us is remarkably rich in evangelical truth and unction; and the two great points of which it chiefly treats are, the personal dignity of the Son of God, and the efficacy of his atonement; both which are introduced in the present chapter, and, as always in the New Testament, with a strong bearing in favour of practical religion.

After the usual apostolical benediction, St. Paul commences his epistle with informing the Colossians of the pleasure he received in hearing of their conversion, and of the honourable manner in which they had hitherto maintained their Christian profession; being actuated by a lively faith in Christ, an ardent affection for the saints, and a hope full of immortality. He prays for them, that they might be enlightened with all wisdom, made fruitful in every good work, and "strengthened unto all patience and long-suffering with joyfulness," under the persecution which they might be called to suffer for the cause of God. He then unites with them in thankfully acknowledging the mercy of God in their conversion.—"Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son; in whom (saith he) we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins:" which verse contains not only the same sentiment, but is expressed in the same words, as he addressed to the Ephesians, chap. i. 7. The very mention of Christ, and of his dying love, instantly makes him break out into admiration of the person and character of the Saviour.

Ver. 15—29. The person and character of Christ described.—With respect to the divine character of Christ, he is introduced not only as the Son of God, but as his first-born, both in respect of date and rank. "I will make him my first-born,

CHAP. I. Ver. 2. Saints.—[The term saint, properly denotes a holy person, separated from sin, and consecrated to God, probably from agos, a thing sacred, purity; and such the gospel requires every man to be, and such every true believer is. To restrict it here to those who adhered to the purity of the Christian faith in opposition to the Judaizing Christians, greatly impoverishes and debases the sense, as Doddridge well remarks.]—Bagster.

Ver. 3. God and the Father.—Doddridge and Macknight, "The God and Father."

Ver. 4. Since we heard of your faith.—It by no means follows from this, that Paul knew of their conversion by hearsay only: it is very consistent with this to suppose, that Paul might have preached to them, in the first instance, though his stay was too short to see much of the fruit of his labour, but after which he would very naturally inquire of Epaphras, their stated minister. Ver. 7.

Ver. 6. In all the world—i. e. the Roman empire, which then comprehended nearly all the civilized world.

Ver. 7. Epaphras.—From this and Col. iv. 12. and Phil. ii. 25, it appears, that this Epaphras, pastor of Colosse, was come to Rome to visit Paul when he was in prison

Ver. 8. Your love in the Spirit.—"In the bonds of that one Spirit who unites all our hearts."—Doddridge.

Ver. 9. Knowledge—wisdom—understanding.—It is not easy, perhaps, to affix distinct and determinate ideas to each of these words. St. Paul, in his usual rapid style, accumulates words on words to express the fulness of his ideas.

Ver. 10. Unto all pleasing.—Macknight, "so as to please him in all things;" which is undoubtedly the sense, though the expression is elliptical.

Ver. 11. Strengthened, &c.—"That is, in all the graces of the new nature, with an energy suited to their utmost need; according to 'the glorious power of God, by which he converted, upheld, and comforted believers,' to the praise of his glory:' that so they might be enabled to bear all tribulations and persecutions with patient submission, persevering constancy, meekness of long-suffering, and joy in the Lord."—Scott.

Ver. 12. To be partakers of the inheritance—i. e. the heavenly Canaan, Heb. xi. 16, which is allotted to them by divine grace, as the land of promise to the Israelites.

Ver. 15. The image of the invisible God.—Compare Heb. i. 3.—The first-born of every creature.—Doddridge and Macknight, "Of the whole creation." "According to the Arians, (says Macknight,) the first-born of the whole creation is the first made creature; but the reason advanced to prove the Son the first-born of the whole creation, overturns that sense of this passage. For surely the Son's creating all things does not prove him to be the first made creature." Burgess says, it should be "born before every creature;" and quotes the Pastor of Hermas, and Schmidius, as authorities. Hill says, "The sense either is, that he was begotten of the Father.... before any creatures were in being [as above stated;] or that he is the first Parent, or 16 For by [c] him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by [d] him, and for him:

17 And he is before [e] all things, and by him all things consist.

18 And he is the head [f] of the body, the church: who is the beginning, [g] the first-born from the dead; that [h] in all things he might have the pre-eminence.

19 For it pleased the Father that in him [i] should all fulness dwell;

20 And, [j] having made [k] peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself, by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven.

21 And you, that were sometime alienated and enemies [l] in your mind [m] by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled

22 In the body of his flesh through death, to present [n] you holy and unblameable and unreproveable in his sight:

23 If ye continue [o] in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every [p] creature which is under heaven; whereof I Paul am made a minister;

24 Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions [q] of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake which is the church:

CHAPTER II.

1 He still exhorteth them to be constant in Christ, 8 to beware of philosophy, and vain traditions, 18 worshipping of angels, 20 and legal ceremonies, which are ended in Christ.

FOR I would that ye knew what great [a] conflict I have for you, and for them at [b] Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh;

2 That their hearts might be comforted, being nigher than the kings of the earth." (Ps. lxxxix. 28.) Yea, higher than the angels in heaven—the first-born, the heir, the Lord of the whole creation; for "by him were all things created, both in heaven and earth, and by him they still subsist, and are kept in being to display his glory—"Upholding all things by the word of his power," as we read in Hebrews i. 3.

Nor is he less pre-eminent in the church than in the world. "He is the head of the body," for whom, though he died, he still lives, "the beginning, the first-born, from the dead;" being not only the first "raised to die no more," but for the express purpose "that he might be Lord both of the dead and of the living," (Rom. xiv. 9;) and "that in all things he might have the pre-eminence."

Not only is the Son of God thus exalted above all blessing and praise in himself, but he is made (as it were) the depository of all divine fulness. In the next chapter (verse 9) this fulness is explained of the divine nature; but here it seems to refer to that fulness which is deposited in him for our benefit; and not for ours only, but, as many think, for the benefit of angels also. It has pleased God the Father to constitute his Son, as it were, the treasurer, or rather treasury, of all heavenly blessings, and, through him, to communicate all the streams of mercy to mankind, and of benevolence to angels; and this honour is conferred upon him in consequence of his mediatorial office, and the atonement which he offered on the cross. But what interest, it may naturally be inquired, have angels in this atonement? How can Christ have reconciled to God the inhabitants of heaven who never sinned?

This leads us to look into the meaning of the expression, "things on earth and things in heaven?" and three interpretations here present themselves.—1. Dr. Hammond and others, by the "things in heaven," understand the Jews; and by the "things in earth," the Gentiles; but for this, we confess, we can find no authority in Scripture usage or example.—2. Calvin, and the great body of expositors, by these terms understand the inhabitants of heaven and earth—angels and men. But good angels have never been at variance with God, and consequently require not reconciliation; and evil angels do not reside in heaven, nor are they ever mentioned as the subjects of reconciliation.—3. There are, however, innumerable beings in heaven that have been reconciled, namely, the departed saints; and there are also many nations upon the earth to whom the word of reconciliation is still sent: these beings, then, both in heaven and earth, are reconciled by the death of Christ, and the apostle distinctly enumerates among them the Colossian church—"You that were sometimes alienated.... hath he reconciled." We wish to speak with modesty on a question where the ablest divines and commentators are so much divided: but we confess ourselves strongly inclined to the latter interpretation, as least exceptionable; unless we could be satisfied with a suggestion of Dr. Macknight, that the term rendered "reconciled," means only "united," of which he has produced no direct proof. We read, indeed, of elect (or chosen) angels, and have no objection to the idea which has been suggested by some divines, that they have been fixed in permanent and eternal happiness, as a reward for their fidelity to the Son of God, when Satan and his angels "by transgression fell."

Dr. John Edwards seems to have been nearly of the same opinion with Dr. Macknight, that men and angels were united, or brought to meet in Christ as their common centre; for which he cites, as parallel passages, Ephes. i. 10; ii. 14—16.

But not to dwell any longer here, in the close of this chapter the apostle exhorts his beloved Colossians to a steady adherence to the gospel, which was now no longer confined to the Jewish nation, but ordered to be preached to "every creature" under heaven; and which Paul, as the minister of the Gentiles, was commissioned to preach among them.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—23. Believers exhorted to constancy, and warned against vain philosophy.—The apostle begins this chapter with stating his great anxiety and regard for the Colossians and others, with whom he held communion in spirit, though he was debarred by his present situation from visiting them in person. He writes, however, to comfort and encourage them, by directing their faith to the great mysteries of the gospel, and to the glorified person of the Saviour, in whom were not only hidden "all the treasures of divine wisdom and knowledge;" but in whom also dwelt "the fulness of the Godhead bodily;" that is, in his human nature, as the sublimest temple of the Deity. He therefore directs them to make Christ the root and foundation of their faith, that they might not be "spoiled through philosophy and vain deceit."

We are not to infer hence, that Christianity is an enemy to science and true philosophy; but they have different depart-

Bringer forth of every creature into being, as the word (he says) will bear to be rendered," by changing the place of the accent: and to this Burgess seems to incline; but this is merely a conjectural alteration, and will not agree with the use of the same word in verse 18.

On these considerations, Doddridge and Macknight understand the expression in the sense of "Heir and Lord of all things," as the term implies, and as it is applied to our Lord in Heb. i 3, which we consider as a parallel text. So Pye Smith understands it to mean, "the Lord and Chief of all the creation." John Edwards has also well justified this sense of the expression, and refers for examples of this use of the term "first-born," for the Lord and Chief, to Jer. xxxi. 9. Job xviii. 13. Isa. xiv. 30. Ps. lxxxix. 28. Rom. viii. 29. Rev. i. 5 James i. 18.

Ver. 16. Thrones, or dominions, &c.—This seems to indicate different ranks and orders in these heavenly bodies, though it would be presumption in us to attempt to distinguish and arrange them systematically. But see chap. ii. 15.

Ver. 17. He is before all things—Both in date and rank. Compare Rev. iii. 14.—By him all things consist.—Doddridge, "subsist."

Ver. 18. The first-born from the dead.—Not only the first that was raised "to die no more," Rom. vi. 9; but also the chief, the "Lord, both of the dead and of the living," Rom. xiv. 9. Compare Rev. i. 5.

Ver. 19. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell—Macknight, "all the fulness"—namely, of the Godhead. See chap. ii. 9. But here we think, with Pye Smith, it rather intends "the rich abundance, the perfection of all those blessings which the context represents as bestowed by Christ upon those who believe in him."

Ver. 20. By him—[Christ] it hath pleased the Father—to reconcile all things unto himself.—By him [Christ] whether, &c. "Though I have translated the word (apokatallaxai,) to reconcile, which is its ordinary meaning, I am clearly of opinion that it signifies here. to unite all things to Christ, as their head and governor. See Ephes. i. 18. But though I think this the apostle's meaning, I have not ventured to alter the translation."—Macknight. Compare Ephes. i. 10; ii. 14—16.

Ver. 21. In your mind by wicked works.—Davenant, "By a mind intent on wicked works."

Ver. 24. In my sufferings.—"The sufferings of the apostle came upon him, chiefly by preaching to the Gentiles: but the blessed effects of his ministry among them, and that of those who concurred with him in it, caused him to rejoice in all that he endured for their sakes: for he thus 'filled up that which was behind of the afflictions of Christ.'"—Scott

Ver. 29. Striving, &c.—Macknight, "Striving vigorously, according to the effectual working of him who worketh effectually in me with power."

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. What great conflict Doddridge, 'contention:" and ments. Christianity is purely a revealed religion. True philosophy is founded upon experiment, and false upon speculation: the truths and the facts of Christianity depend on neither, but on the word of God. The philosophy here referred to, is thought to be that of Essenes, a Jewish sect of high antiquity, practising great austerities in their manner of living, which was retired and mortified to an extreme degree: denying themselves not only the luxuries, but the comforts of human life; to the extent of refraining from all animal food—("Touch not; taste not; handle not")—merely on human authority, and for no valuable end; for it has often been found, that persons who practise these voluntary austerities, indulge at the same time in secret crimes. This the apostle calls will-worship, and voluntary humility; neither commanded by, nor acceptable to God.

But the most singular and objectionable part of their principles related to their doctrine and worship of angels, whose names all their disciples were solemnly bound, as Josephus says, to preserve with great care and reverence. This, introducing a species of idolatry, (since copied in the Christian church,) justly provoked the censure of our apostle, as every thing must do, which exalted the creature and depreciated the Saviour. And though we cannot now penetrate all the mysteries of this sect, from the tenor of this epistle, (in which the great object of the writer evidently was to exalt the Saviour, as the Head and Lord of all principalities and powers,) it is most reasonable to conclude, that these Christian Essenes confounded Christ with angels, and worshipped him as one only of the number.

As to the use of animal food, which is here alluded to, since it was expressly allowed by God to Noah, and practised by our Saviour, we regard no reproach which can possibly be attached to it; nevertheless, we believe that many indulge themselves in far too much of it; and if there be any persons (as there may be) to whom all animal food is injurious, they doubtless do well in refraining from its use. At the same time, the modern philosophy sufficiently proves, that we can neither drink nor breathe without the swallowing of living creatures with the air: a fact which has been strongly illustrated by an incident of recent date, related in Forbes's Oriental Memoirs. A learned Brahmin, who prided himself on never having swallowed animal food, received from Europe a valuable microscope, which convinced him that he had been in the habit of swallowing insects and animalculæ with all his fruit and vegetables; and he was rendered thereby so unhappy, that he totally destroyed the instrument, that it might not have the same effect on others.

On the question of animal food, we are satisfied that there is no sin in receiving whatever God bestows; but there is much sin in refusing his benefits, and in attempting to be "wise above what is written."

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—25. The Colossians exhorted to set their affection upon Christ and things above—to mortify their carnal appetites, and to practise every Christian virtue.—In the preceding chapter, the Colossians had been reminded that, by their baptism and public profession of Christianity, they had followed the Lord Jesus through his sufferings and death,—had been by the power of his Spirit quickened from a death of trespasses and sins—and been virtually raised with him to heaven, in whom all the treasures of grace and glory were de-

Ver. 14. Blotting out.—This refers to the most ancient method of cancelling obligations, and is frequently alluded to in the Old Testament. See Ps. li. 1. Isa. xliii. 25; xliv. 22. The Jewish ritual law is here referred to, which was not only obliterated by Christ, but nailed in triumph to his cross, when he said, " It is finished." The types, when they were fulfilled, expired. When the apostle speaks of Christ's blotting out the handwriting, taking it away, and nailing it to his cross, he alludes, by a beautiful gradation, to the various ways of cancelling a debt-bond; one of which was striking a nail through it on a post, in a public place.

This is another reference to the Grecian games, in which illegal methods were sometimes taken to deprive the successful candidates of their prize. *Orient. He represents this view of the matter as most humble and reverential, and there is no doubt but it prevailed among other Jews. Compare Tobit xi. 14; xii. 12, 15.

8 But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth.

14 And above all these things put on [o] charity, which is [p] the bond of perfectness.

16 Let the word [r] of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in [s] psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord.

17 And whatsoever [t] ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him.

18 [u] Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as it is fit in the Lord.

19 Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them.

20 [v] Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well pleasing unto the Lord.

21 Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged.

22 [w] Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh; not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but in singleness of heart, fearing God:

23 And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men;

24 Knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance: for ye serve the Lord Christ.

25 But he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done: and there is no respect of persons.

CHAPTER IV.

1 He exhorteth them to be fervent in prayer, 5 to walk wisely toward them that are not yet come to the true knowledge of Christ. 10 He saluteth them, and wisheth them all prosperity.

MASTERS, [a] give unto your servants that which is just and equal; knowing that ye also have a Master in heaven.

2 Continue [b] in prayer, and watch [c] in the same with thanksgiving;

3 Withal praying also for us, that God would open [d] unto us a door of utterance, to speak the mystery of Christ, for which I am also in bonds:

posited, and whither their hopes and best affections would naturally aspire. "If ye then (says he) be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection," fix your mind and heart, "on things above," where Christ is, and where your [eternal] life is hidden with "him, in the bosom of God," beyond the reach of fear or danger. But fix not your heart on things below, where you "have no continuing city," and from whence you are liable to be summoned without an hour's notice. But mortify all your earthly pleasures, and indulge not in any of those things "for which the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience."

He then reminds them, that though they were by nature Gentiles, that would by no means lessen their interest in Christ; for there are no nationalities in the Christian religion, but "Christ is all and in all." He is every thing to the believer, and to every believer he is the same. He then exhorts them to imitate the mercy of God, and the compassion of Christ; forgiving one another as freely and gratuitously as Christ had forgiven them; and to "let the peace of God preside" in all their internal deliberations, and in all their social meetings. So, instead of seeking to the vain and sinful pleasures of the world for amusements or diversions, to let "the word of Christ," that is, his heavenly doctrine, (and perhaps some parts of Matthew's Gospel were now getting into circulation,) dwell in them richly; to be frequent in recollecting his divine sayings, and in rehearsing them to one another. And if you wish to exhilarate and animate your minds, or each others, teach and admonish "one another in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord."

This passage appears to refer to such meetings for devotion and mutual instruction as the apostle had mentioned in his first epistle to the Corinthians, (chap. xiv. 26,) when each member produced a devotional psalm, a doctrinal discourse, a prophecy, or the interpretation of a prophecy. This seems to be what the apostle elsewhere calls speaking to themselves, or to one another, "in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs;" each being anxious to contribute something to the general edification, and to advance the divine glory. Only he cautions them to admit no secular or profane mixtures in their religious meetings—no worldly business—no political discussion—no secular odes, much less wanton or profane songs. But, "whatsoever ye do, in word or deed, (says he,) do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God, even the Father, by him."

The concluding verses, exhorting to Christian and moral duties, are so similar to those in the last chapter of the Epistle to the Ephesians, that we shall only refer to our exposition of that chapter.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—18. Exhortations to prayer and Christian conduct; with notice of several esteemed fellow-labourers.—Prayer is certainly one of the most important of Christian duties, and one of the most estimable of Christian privileges. It opens a communication between earth and heaven; drawing up the soul to God, and drawing down the blessings of his grace. It is a duty of universal interest; for even an apostle, (and, for labours and talents, the chief of them,) was earnest in requesting an interest in the prayers of his brethren of Colosse. Until we get within the veil, we shall never know the efficacy of those odours (which are the prayers of saints) presented by the twenty-four elders to the Lamb, (Rev. v. 8,) and which doubtless owe their acceptability to their being presented through his hands, and from the incense which he offers with them.

The next exhortation is, to "walk in wisdom towards them that are without;" that is, without the pale of the church, meaning their Pagan neighbours and acquaintances; a most important precept, in the observance of which, two extremes are to be avoided. 1. We must not obtrude our religion un-

CHAP. III. Ver. 5. Mortify—That is, "kill." Macknight, "put to death." Not the members of the animal body, but the body of sin and death. See Rom. vii. 24.—Members which are upon the earth—and earthly, as fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection.—Macknight, "unnatural lust."

Ver. 10. Put on the new man.—Compare Ephes. ii. 15.

Ver. 14. Put on charity [or love]—Which, as a capacious robe, "covers a multitude of faults," or sins. James iv. 20.

Ver. 15. Let the peace of God rule.—Doddridge, "preside." He thinks it alludes to the Master who presided at the Olympic games.

Ver. 16. In psalms and hymns and spiritual songs.—So in Ephes. v. 19. As David's sacred compositions are differently inscribed, psalms, hymns (tehillim,) and (shurim,) sacred odes or songs, Calvin, and others of our old divines, think none but the inspired compositions of the Old Testament can be here referred to. But Doddridge, Macknight, and our modern divines in general, extend the latter terms to those extemporaneous (and often inspired) compositions common among the first Christians; who, according to a well-known passage in Pliny, used to "meet before daylight, and sing hymns to Christ as to a God." Nor does this absolutely require inspiration, since Burney (the musical historian) mentions it as a common practice among the gondoliers (or bargemen of Venice) to address and challenge one another in extemporaneous stanzas.

Ver. 17. To God and the Father.—Doddridge, "Even the Father."

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1. Masters, give, &c.—J. Edwards justly remarks, that this verse should have been attached to the preceding chapter.

Ver. 3. A door of utterance.—See 1 Co. xvi. 9, and the references there. [The term door is used metaphorically for an entrance to any business, or occasion or opportunity of doing any thing; and consequently, "a door of utterance" is an opportunity of preaching the gospel successfully. So Cicero—"the doors of friendship are opened;" there is now an opportunity of reconciliation.]—Bloomfield.

seasonably upon them—"We must not cast our pearls before swine." (Matt. vii. 6.) Religion is not adapted for hours of gayety, amusement, or conviviality. On the contrary, we must not disguise or conceal our religion, as if we were ashamed of it. We are intended to be lights to the world, and our light should so shine, that men may "see our good works," and knowing the principle from which they spring, "glorify our Father who is in heaven." Our speech also should be always with grace, "seasoned with salt," by which the heathen meant wit; but our speech is to be seasoned with wisdom, prudence, and the unction of the Saviour's name; for "his name is as ointment poured forth." Thus may Christians put to silence the ignorance and reproaches of the world.

Of the brethren here mentioned, several have been named before; as Tychicus, in the close of the last Epistle. Of Onesimus, we shall have a full account in the Epistle to Philemon. Aristarchus was a Macedonian of Thessalonica, who accompanied Paul into Greece, into Asia, and to Rome, and who is said to have been beheaded by Nero, at the same time with Paul. (Acts xix. 29; xx. 4; xxvii. 2.) Marcus, or Mark, here mentioned, should be distinguished from Mark the Evangelist; but Jesus, called Justus, is believed to be the same as Joseph Barsabas, one of the seventy disciples, and whom Peter proposed as a candidate for the vacant apostleship after the death of Judas, (Acts i. 23.) The name Justus was doubtless added, in respect to the remarkable uprightness of his character. These were all "of the circumcision," that is, Jews; but the following are considered as Gentiles:—Of Luke, see the introduction to that Evangelist, where we have considered him as a physician of Antioch. Of Epaphras, who was a minister of their own, Paul speaks most affectionately, both here and in the opening of the Epistle; but of Nymphas we know nothing, as he is only here named. The hint to Archippus seems to imply, that he needed such an admonition: but Demas has a black mark upon his character, in 2 Tim. iv. 10.

Whether or not Paul wrote any distinct Epistle to the Laodiceans, or from Laodicea, as our present text reads, (ver. 16,) we may draw from this passage the following fact—that it was customary, even from the beginning, to read the apostolical Epistles in the churches, and that the churches who received such Epistles were in the habit of handing them for perusal to their sister churches; which shows the high esteem in which they were then held as inspired writings, since it is an honour allowed, as we believe, to no private writings, except some few of the apostolical fathers. (See 1 Thess. v. 27.)

Ver. 7. Tychicus.—See Ephes. vi. 21, 22. From comparing these passages, and the many parallel places between this Epistle and that to the Ephesians, it has been inferred that they were written about the same time, and probably sent together. See Doddridge.

Ver. 12. Perfect and complete in all the will of God.—Which expression seems equivalent to that in 2 Tim. iii. 17; "Thoroughly furnished to every good work."

Ver. 13. Laodicea and them in Hierapolis.—[Laodicea and Hierapolis were both cities of Phrygia in Asia Minor, between which, and equi-distant from each, was situated Colossæ. Laodicea was situated near the Lycus, about 63 miles east of Ephesus; and became one of the largest and richest towns in Phrygia, vying in power with the maritime cities. It is now called Eski-hissar, the old castle; and besides the whole surface within the city's wall being strewed with pedestals and fragments, the ruins of an amphitheatre a magnificent odeum, and other public buildings, attest its former splendour and magnificence. But, when visited by Chandler, all was silence and solitude; and a fox, first discovered by his ears peeping over a brow, was the only inhabitant of Laodicea. Hierapolis, now Pambouk-Kalesi, was situated, according to the Itinerary, six miles N. of Laodicea; and its ruins are now about a mile and a half in circumference.]—Baxter.

Ver. 16. From Laodicea.—Those who contend that Paul wrote to the Laodiceans, understand this of that Epistle, to be received from them, which seems an unnatural construction: J. Edwards therefore suggests, that it was the first Epistle to Timothy to which the apostle refers, and which, by the superscription, appears to have been written from that city. This we consider as much the most easy and natural solution of the difficulty.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS.

[THE Epistle to the Colossians, and the two preceding Epistles, which were written during the imprisonment of St. Paul, and about the same time, are remarkable for a peculiar pathos and ardour, or rapture, as some have termed it, which is generally ascribed to the extraordinary consolations enjoyed by the Apostle during his sufferings for the sake of Christ. Critics have justly remarked, that the style of the Epistle to the Ephesians is exceedingly elevated, and corresponds with the state of the Apostle's mind at the time of writing. Overjoyed with the account which their messenger brought him of the steadfastness of their faith, and the ardency of their love to all the saints, and transported with the consideration of the unsearchable wisdom of God displayed in the work of man's redemption, and of his amazing love towards the Gentiles, in introducing them, as fellow heirs with the Jews, into the kingdom of Christ, he soars into the most exalted contemplation of these sublime topics, and gives utterance to his thoughts in language at once rich and varied. Grotius affirms, that "it expresses the most sublime matters contained in it, in terms more sublime than are to be found in any human language." This character, adds Macknight, "is so just, that no real Christian can read the doctrinal part of the Epistle to the Ephesians, without being impressed and roused by it, as by the sound of a trumpet." The style of the Epistle to the Philippians is very animated, pleasing, and easy; every where bearing evidence of that contented state of mind in which the Apostle then was, and of his great affection for the people. It has been observed as remarkable, that the Epistle to the Church of Philippi is the only one, of all St. Paul's letters to the churches, in which not one censure is expressed or implied against any of its members; but, on the contrary, sentiments of unqualified commendation and confidence pervade every part of this Epistle. The language of the Epistle to the Colossians is bold and energetic; the sentiments grand; and the conceptions vigorous and majestic. Whoever, says Michaelis, would understand the Epistles to the Ephesians and Colossians must read them together. The one is in most places a commentary on the other; the meaning of single passages in one epistle, which, if considered alone, might be variously interpreted, being determined by the parallel passages in the other Epistles. Yet, though there is a great similarity, the Epistle to the Colossians contains many things which are not to be found in that to the Ephesians.]—Bagster.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

[THE Gospel was first preached at Thessalonica by St. Paul, accompanied by Silas and Timothy, with such success, that it excited the envy and indignation of the unbelieving Jews, who having stirred up a violent persecution against them, they were forced to flee to Berea, and thence to Athens, (Acts xvii. 2—15,) from which city he proceeded to Corinth. Having thus been prevented from again visiting the Thessalonians as he had intended, (ch. ii. 17, 18,) he sent Silas and Timothy to Thessalonica in his stead, (ch. iii. 6-9) who having, on their return to him at Corinth, given such a favourable account of their state as filled him with joy and gratitude, (Ac. xvii. 14, 15; xviii. 5,) he wrote this Epistle to them from that city, (and not from Athens, as stated in the spurious postscript,) A. D. 52, to confirm them in their faith and to excite them to a holy conversation becoming the dignity of their high and holy calling.]—I.

CHAPTER I.

The Thessalonians are given to understand both how mindful of them Saint Paul was at all times in their thanksgiving, and prayer: 5 and also how well he was persuaded of the truth and sincerity of their faith, and conversion to God.

PAUL, and [a] Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the [b] Thessalonians which is in God the Father and in the Lord Jesus Christ: Grace [c] be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

2 We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers;

3 Remembering without ceasing your work [d] of faith, and labour [e] of love, and patience [f] of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father;

4 Knowing, brethren [g] beloved, your election of God.

5 For our gospel came [h] not unto you in word only, but also in [i] power, and in the [j] Holy Ghost, and in much [k] assurance; as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake.

6 And ye became [l] followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, with joy [m] of the Holy Ghost:

7 So that ye were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia.

8 For from you sounded [n] out the word of the Lord not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place [o] your faith to Godward is spread abroad; so that we need not to speak any thing.

9 For they themselves show of us what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God [p] from idols to serve the living and true God;

10 And to wait [q] for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath [r] to come.

CHAPTER II.

1 In what manner the gospel was brought at first to the Thessalonians, and in what sort also they received it. 18 A reason is rendered both why Saint Paul was so long absent from them, and also why he was so desirous to see them.

FOR yourselves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you, that it was not in vain:

2 But even after that we had suffered before, and were shamefully entreated, as ye know, at [a] Philippi, we were [b] bold in our God to speak unto you the gospel of God with much [c] contention.

3 For our exhortation was not of [d] deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile:

4 But as we were allowed of God to be put in trust [e] with the gospel, even so we speak; not as pleasing men, but God, which trieth our hearts.

5 For neither [f] at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloak of covetousness; God is witness:

6 Nor of men [g] sought we glory, neither of CHAP. I. Ver. 1—10. Paul's prayers and thanksgiving for the Thessalonians.—The Epistles to this church, though placed so late by our translators, are generally allowed to have been the first written, and not later than A. D. 52, or, at the latest, 54, which is about ten years earlier than most of the preceding. "Silas and Timothy, with St. Paul, had preached the gospel to the Jews at Thessalonica," a considerable seaport town, and the metropolis of Macedonia, (Acts xvii. 1.) But they were interrupted in this work, and compelled to leave the city, by the persecution there raised against them: they then proceeded to Berea, whither they were followed by the same unbelieving Jews. St. Paul then went to Athens; but Silas and Timothy remained at Berea, till they received orders from Paul to follow him to that city, (Acts xvii. 15.) Timothy, we learn, (1 Thes. i. 2,) was then immediately despatched to Thessalonica, and it is most probable (that) Silas accompanied him .... It is not, however, expressly stated how Silas was employed at this time: they both rejoined Paul at Corinth, and it is natural to suppose they there gave him a full account of their labours and their sufferings. (Acts xviii. 5.)

That this Epistle "was written from Corinth in the year 51, or soon after, may be considered as almost the unanimous opinion of commentators, although the particular occasion is disputed. The general object of the Epistle is certainly to confirm the Thessalonians in their faith, by enforcing the evidences of the Christian religion, while Paul opposes some opinions held by the heathen." (Preb. Townsend's New Test. Arranged.)

This first chapter is thought to have particular reference to the evidence of miracles which St. Paul wrought amongst them; we cannot, however, conceive that his expression, "Our gospel came unto you, not in word only, but in power," refers merely to miraculous powers, though they certainly must be included. The influence of the Holy Ghost was apparent, not only in the miracles which Paul wrought, but also, as Doddridge expresses it, in "the very deep and powerful impressions" it made upon their hearts, and in that "full assurance" with which it was attended; being received "in much affliction" by the persecution of the Jews, and with that spiritual joy, with which the Holy Ghost supported them, and rendered them triumphant over all the malice of their enemies. So that they became in these respects examples to all in Macedonia and Achaia, through which they rapidly spread abroad the good tidings of salvation; and these were rendered the more efficacious, from the evidence which the Thessalonians gave of its power and efficacy in their own lives and conversations; being turned from the worshipping of dumb idols, "to serve the living and true God;" and waiting for the return from heaven of his Son Jesus, who delivereth from the wrath to come.

"We see here, (says the excellent Doddridge,) a compendious view of the Christian character. It is to turn from idols, from every thing which we have loved and esteemed, pursued, and trusted, in an irregular degree, to serve the living and true God, under a real sense of his infinite perfections and glories. It is turning also to Jesus, his Son, as saving us 'from the wrath to come;' from a deep conviction of our being justly exposed to wrath, by our transgressions against God, to seek rescue and refuge in Christ, as delivering us from it by his atonement and grace, and completing that deliverance by almighty power in the day of his final triumph. ....

"If this be the effect of our receiving the gospel, it will evidently prove that it is 'come to us, not in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghost; and it may give us abundant assurance of our interest in God, and cause us, by the happiest tokens, to know our election in him."

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—20. Paul recapitulates his labours among the Thessalonians, and blesses God for his success.—In this recapitulation, St. Paul adverts to the shameful treatment he had received at Philippi, merely for curing a female slave, of whom her owners had made a gain by fortune-telling, as endowed with a spirit of Python. (See on Acts xvi. 1—24.) He then appeals to them for the upright, tender, and disinterested conduct, which he and his brethren had shown toward them; and, at the same time, commends them for the cordial manner in which they received the message of salvation; "not (indeed) as the word of men, but (as it is in truth) the word of God," which "effectually worketh in (all) that believe." He next commends them for becoming followers (or imitators) of the other churches, who had believed before them, and had ornamented their profession by a consistent conversation.

St. Paul then adverts to the cruel and outrageous conduct of the Jews, his own nation, who having "both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets," now hunted the preachers of the gospel as if they were wild beasts, from city to city, and from one country to another; as we have seen in the Book of the Acts of the Apostles. In this conduct, while they pleased not God, who had repeatedly reproved their conduct, they rendered themselves odious to all reasonable men, and particularly to the Gentiles. "The hatred which the Jews bare to all the heathen, without exception, (says Dr. Macknight,) was taken notice of by Tacitus and Juvenal, and even by Josephus. This hatred was directly contrary to the law of Moses, which enjoined humanity to strangers." (Exod. xxii. 21.) This aversion certainly increased after the captivity, and probably arose, in great degree, from the treatment of their oppressors; but was not justifiable upon the principles, either of Moses, or of Christ.

This malevolence particularly discovered itself in their conduct with respect to the gospel, which, in some instances, they seem willing to have received, if so be that the Gentiles had been excluded from it; but the admission of other nations to the same privileges with themselves, seemed to them the most exceptionable feature of Christianity. (See Acts xiii. 5.)

CHAP. I. Ver. 1. Silvanus.—[Silas, or Silvanus, and Timothy, did not come to the Apostle, when driven from Thessalonica and Berea, till after his arrival at Athens, nor did they continue with him in that city, being sent speedily back to Thessalonica, (ch. iii. 1. Ac. xvii. 10—15;) which shows that this Epistle could not have been written from Athens, but from Corinth, where they afterwards rejoined him: Ac. xviii. 1—6.]—Bagster.

you, nor yet of others, when we might have [h]been [i]burdensome, as the apostles of Christ.

7 But we were gentle among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children:

8 So being affectionately desirous of you, we were willing to have [j]imparted unto you, not the gospel of God only, but also our own souls, because ye were dear unto us.

9 For ye remember, brethren, our [k]labour and travail: for labouring night and day, because we would not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God.

10 Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily and justly and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believe:

11 As ye know how we exhorted and comforted and charged every one of you, as a father doth his children,

12 That ye would walk [l]worthy of God, who [m]hath called you unto his kingdom and glory.

13 For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not [n]as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh [o]also in you that believe.

14 For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which in Judea are in Christ Jesus: for ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews:

15 Who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their [p]own prophets, and have [q]persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men:

16 Forbidding [r]us to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved, to fill [s]up their sins alway: for the wrath is come upon them to the [t]uttermost.

17 But we, brethren, being taken from you for a short time in presence, not in heart, endeavoured the more abundantly to see your face with great desire.

18 Wherefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul, once and again; but Satan hindered us.

19 For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of [u]rejoicing? Are not even ye [v]in the presence [w]of our Lord Jesus Christ at his [x]coming?

20 For ye are our glory and joy.

CHAPTER III.

1 Saint Paul testifieth his great love to the Thessalonians, partly by sending Timothy unto them to strengthen and comfort them: partly by rejoicing in their well doing; 10 and partly by praying for them, and desiring a safe coming unto them.

WHEREFORE when we could no longer forbear, we thought it good to be left at Athens alone;

2 And sent [a]Timotheus, our brother, and minister of God, and our fellow-labourer in the gospel of Christ, to establish you, and to comfort you concerning your faith:

3 That [b]no man should be moved by these afflictions: for yourselves know that we [c]are appointed thereunto.

4 For verily, when we were with you, we told you before that we should suffer tribulation; even as it came to pass, and ye know.

5 For this cause, when [d]I could no longer forbear, I sent to know your faith, lest [e]by some means the tempter have tempted you, and our labour [f]be in vain.

6 But now when Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring [g]greatly to see us, as we also to see you:

7 Therefore, brethren, we were comforted [h]over you in all our affliction and distress by your faith:

8 For now we live, if ye stand fast [i]in the Lord.

9 For what thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God;

10 Night and day praying exceedingly that we might see your face, and might perfect [j]that which is lacking in your faith?

11 Now God himself and our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, [k]direct our way unto you.

12 And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love [l]one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you:

13 To the end he may establish your hearts [m]unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming [n]of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.

But to forbid the apostles "to speak to the Gentiles, that they might be saved"—this is not only inhuman, but also diabolical: it is attempting to subvert the designs of God, as well as the happiness of men! Would that none but Jews were chargeable with this! but that Christians should be guilty of such an offence, is indeed truly horrible, and would seem impossible; but what was the meaning of the opposition made, but a few years ago, to sending the gospel to India? It was literally forbidding any to speak to the Gentiles of India, that they should be saved! And is there nothing like this nearer home? Are there none who oppose, and endeavour to prevent, persons from preaching the gospel to the Gentiles in our own country? Alas! that such men should pretend to the name of Christians! What would Paul have said in such a case? Just what he said in the case before us—"Satan hindered us."

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—13. Paul refreshed by the intelligence he received by Timothy from the Thessalonians, the more desires to visit them.—In the close of the preceding chapter, Paul had expressed his regret at not having been able to visit them: and so great was his anxiety to hear of their welfare, that, sooner than continue in suspense, he agreed to remain alone in Athens, and to send Timothy to visit them; to inquire into their welfare, and their progress in the Christian course, and, at the same time, to encourage and animate them therein. And when he returned, the account which he brought with him was so gratifying, that he became still more desirous to visit them; and prayed, therefore, that all impediments might be removed, and his way directed towards them.

In the mean time, however, he feels some apprehension, lest, hearing of his troubles and afflictions, they should be discouraged and distressed on his account; he reminds them that troubles are inseparable from the present life; and that "through much tribulation we must enter into the kingdom of God." (Acts xiv. 22.)

The short prayer which concludes this chapter, exhibits a happy specimen of pure and undefiled religion. St. Paul prays that they might "increase and abound;" or, (as Macknight expresses it,) "overflow with love, one towards another, and towards all men, even (says the apostle) as we do toward you;" after expressing towards them an attachment the most ardent and sincere.

Ver. 6 We might have been burdensome.—The Apostle evidently refers to the right he had of being maintained at their charge. See verse 9, and compare 1 Co. ix. throughout.

Ver. 13. Which effectually worketh.—See Phil. ii. 12, 13.

Ver. 15. And have persecuted us.—Margin, "Chased us out;" hunting the preachers of the gospel, like wild beasts. See Mat. xxiii 34. Acts vii. 52.

Ver. 16. That they might—Macknight, ("so that) they might," &c.——Fill up their sins.—See Mat. xxiii. 32.——For the wrath is come.—Doddridge, "But wrath is coming," &c. Compare Mat. xxiii. 32—36.

Ver. 17. Being taken.—Doddridge, "separated from you for a very little season;" literally, "the time of an hour."

Ver. 18. Satan hindered us.—[By raising such a storm of persecution against him at Berea and other places, that it was deemed prudent to delay his visit till the storm was somewhat allayed. Some, apparently with less propriety, suppose Satan may mean some adversary or powerful opponent, as the word denotes: others refer it to wicked men, who are the instruments of Satan; and others, by a very usual figure which substitutes the concrete for the abstract, understand wickedness, i. e. the wickedness of his enemies and persecutors. Inquiry.

Ver 19 For what, &c.—[Macknight connects this verse with the preceding by adding, "These things ye may believe, for what," &c. The reason of abrupt and ill animation with which it is expressed, in this chapter, are incomprehensible.] Inquiry.

CHAP. iii. Ver. 1. To be left at Athens alone. That is, having no other fellow-labourer in whom he could so well confide, for it appears Silas was not assisted and as it should seem from Acts xviii 5, that he went, or at least returned with Timothy.

Ver 5 Were in vain.—To have indeed, is to be useful and happy.

Ver 9 For all the joy. That is, For the exceeding great joy. See Jael 2.

Ver 11 Now God himself, &c. Doddridge, "Even, &c. Inquiry. Dobbs reads "Direct." Macknight, "Make straight." See Isaiah xl 3.

Ver 13 With all his saints, or "holy ones." See chap iv 14.

CHAPTER IV.

He exhorteth them to go on forward in all manner of godliness, 6 to live holily and purely, 9 to love one another, 11 and quietly to follow their own business: 13 and lest they should sorrow inordinately for the dead, 15 And unto this last exhortation is added a brief description of the resurrection, and second coming of Christ to judgment.

A. D. cir. 52

FURTHERMORE then we [a] beseech you, brethren, and [b] exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk [c] and to please God, so ye would abound [d] more and more.

2 For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus.

3 For this is the will of God, even your sanctification, that [e] ye should abstain from fornication:

4 That every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour;

5 Not in the lust of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles [f] which know not God:

6 That no man go beyond and [g] defraud his brother in [h] any matter: because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified.

7 For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but [i] unto holiness.

8 He therefore that [j] despiseth despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us his holy Spirit.

9 But as touching brotherly love ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are taught [k] of God to love one another.

10 And indeed ye do it toward all the brethren which are in all Macedonia: but we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more;

11 And that ye study to be quiet, and to [l] do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you;

12 That ye may walk honestly [m] toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of [n] nothing.

13 But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope.

14 For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so [o] them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

15 For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep.

16 For [p] the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise [q] first:

17 Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in [r] the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be [s] with the Lord.

18 Wherefore [t] comfort one another with these words.

CHAPTER V.

1 He proceedeth in the former description of Christ's coming to judgment, 16 and giveth divers precepts, 23 and so concludeth the epistle.

BUT of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you.

2 For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh [a] as a thief in the night.

3 For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail [b] upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape.

4 But [c] ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief.

5 Ye are all the children of light, and [d] the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness.

6 Therefore [d] let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be [e] sober.

7 For they that sleep sleep in the night; and they that be drunken are drunken in the night.

8 But let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breast-plate [f] of faith and love; and for a helmet, the hope of salvation.

9 For God hath not appointed [g] us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ,

10 Who died for us, that, whether [h] we wake or sleep, we should live together with him.

11 Wherefore [i] comfort yourselves together and edify one another, even as also ye do.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1–18. Exhortations to holiness—consolation to the bereaved.—Practical exhortations have, of course, a general similitude; so many of these are levelled against lewdness, that we may safely infer it was the reigning sin of the Thessalonians, and of the Pagan world in general. It may, indeed, be doubted whether this sin was ever carried to greater excess than in some Christian cities, (so called;) but the fact is, Christianity has thrown a veil over vice, and driven its votaries from the idol temples, where they used publicly to perpetrate the most shameful crimes, under the mask of religion and the forms of devotion, into holes and corners, where the public eye but seldom follows them; and those who are not ashamed to commit fornication and adultery, are at least ashamed of being seen to do it. But the eye of God enters every chamber of iniquity, and his "Book of remembrance" records every secret crime, and will one day be opened in the presence of assembled worlds. St. Paul, however, not only strongly guards his Thessalonian converts against their former crimes; but urges them to the opposite virtues, and to that course of industry, which has a powerful tendency, by usefully filling up their time, to preserve them from temptation.

The apostle then meets an objection, which seems to have troubled the weaker brethren, who indulged excessive grief, like the heathen, for some of their deceased friends. Death must be terrible indeed to those who have no hope beyond the grave. Well might they wail and howl over their departed friends. But with the disciples of Jesus the case is far otherwise. Those who die in Jesus, do but sleep; and when he returns in glory, he will bring his departed saints with him. For he shall descend from heaven in great and awful glory, and a voice no less powerful than that which said, "Let there be light, and light was," shall command the dead to rise.

But the dead in Christ (we are told) shall rise first, and then those who believe in him on earth shall be changed, and their rarefied bodies (so to speak) shall be "caught up," to meet their descending Saviour; and so shall they be "for ever with the Lord." Well is it added, "Comfort one another with these words."

"Yes: Faith shall triumph o'er the grave,
And trample on the tombs:
My Jesus, my Redeemer lives;
My God, my Saviour comes!"—Watts.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1–28. Warnings to prepare for the great day of the resurrection and final judgment, with other practical admonitions.—The suddenness of this great event, and the alarm which it will create, are well represented by comparing it (as our Lord had before done) to the coming of a thief in the night; and to the sudden attacks of pain upon a woman in CHAP. IV. Ver. 4. Possess his vessel.—(Gr. "his own vessel;") i. e. his body. The woman being elsewhere called the "weaker vessel," implies that the man is a vessel also. (1 Peter iii. 7.) And our apostle himself speaks of himself and brethren as "earthen vessels." 2 Cor. iv. 7.

Ver. 6. In any matter. Macknight, "In (this) matter."

Ver. 8. Despiseth. Namely, the testimony of the apostles. A strong assertion of their inspiration.—Doddridge.

Ver. 11. Study to be quiet.—Doddridge, "Make it your ambition to live quietly."

Ver. 12. Walk honestly.—Doddridge and Macknight, "Decently," or orderly.—Lack of nothing—i. e. have need of no man's assistance.

Ver. 14. Will God bring with him—Compare chap. iii. 13.

Ver. 16. With a shout—(Keleusma.) The word is used in profane authors for the shout of soldiers in attacking, of rowers, and of charioteers. Elsner and Wetstein. Also, for "the word of command in battle." Smith's Mess.

—The trump of God.—See 1 Cor. xv. 52.—Shall rise first.—See note on 1 Cor. xv. 23.

Ver. 17. We which are alive—That is, "we Christians"—the members of Christ's mystical body. Compare Gen. i. 25. Ps. lxvi. 6. Hosea xii. 4. 1 Cor. xv. 51. These passages are sufficient to show, that Paul's manner of speaking does not imply that he expected to be living at the arrival of this great day. But for a full answer to this objection, see Findlay's Vind. of the Sac. Books, in reply to Voltaire; also Pres. Edwards' Misc. Observ.

Ver. 3. When they say—That is, the men of this world. See Mat. xxiv 38, 39.

Ver. 5. Children of light.—See Ephes. v. 8.—Not of the night—i. e. not children of the night.

Ver. 8. Breast-plate of faith, &c.—See Ephes. vi. 14, 17.

Ver. 10. Whether we wake or sleep—i. e. we alive, or in the grave. Doddridge and Macknight.

12 And we beseech you, brethren, to know them [l] which labour among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you;

13 And to esteem them very highly in love for their works' sake. And be [k] at peace among yourselves.

14 Now we [l] exhort you, brethren, warn them that are [m] unruly, [n] comfort the feeble-minded, support the [o] weak, be patient [p] toward all men.

15 See that none render [q] evil for evil unto any man; but ever follow [r] that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men.

16 Rejoice [s] evermore.

17 Pray [t] without ceasing.

18 In [u] every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you.

19 Quench [v] not the Spirit.

20 Despise [w] not prophesyings.

21 Prove [x] all things; hold [y] fast that which is good.

22 Abstain [z] from all appearance of evil.

23 And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless [a] unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

24 Faithful is he [b] that calleth you, who also will do it.

25 Brethren, pray for us.

26 Greet all the brethren with a holy kiss.

27 I [c] charge you by the Lord that this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren.

28 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen.

the hour of travail. "A thief comes upon people, (observes Mr. Blackwall,) when they are bound in sleep, and they awake in amazement and confusion—unarmed, and in a helpless posture: pangs come upon a woman when, perhaps, she is eating, drinking, or laughing, and thinking of nothing less than that hour. And here it is said, not that the day of the Lord will come thus, but that it is actually coming, which increases the awfulness of the representation." The exhortation, therefore, is, "Let us not sleep as do others," namely, the heathen world around us; but let us watch and be sober, "for we are children, not of the night, but of the day:" and God hath not appointed us to darkness and to wrath, but unto light and salvation by Jesus Christ. "Wherefore," the apostle repeats, "Comfort yourselves together, and edify one another, even as also (I believe) ye do." St. Paul then subjoins a series of practical maxims, similar to those in the close of several other Epistles, of which this forms the top of the climax—"Abstain," not only from actual evil; but "from all appearance of evil," that no shadow of reproach may pass upon our holy religion: and he concludes with imploring upon them this very extensive blessing—"May the God of peace himself sanctify you wholly; and may your whole (person) spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ!"

Ver. 12. To know them—That is, take notice of them; treat them with affection and respect, as in the next verse.——And are over you—i. e. preside over you.

Ver. 14. Unruly.—Doddridge says this is a military term, applied to soldiers who do not keep their proper ranks, &c.——Be patient.—Doddridge, "long-suffering."

Ver. 19. Quench not the Spirit—i. e. Resist not, nor neglect his influences. The expression refers to the Holy Spirit having visibly appeared in the form of flames. Acts ii. 3.

Ver. 20. Despise not prophesyings.—Though this may primarily refer to miraculous gifts, (as in 1 Cor. xiv. 3,) Macknight says, "This precept, in a more general sense, is designed for those who neglect the public worship of God, on pretence that they are so wise, and so well instructed, that they can receive little or no benefit from it."

Ver. 23. And the very God of peace—Doddridge, "May the God of peace himself"—Sanctify you wholly, &c.—Doddridge, "Sanctify your whole [constitution] spirit, and soul, and body." Macknight, still better—"Your whole [person] spirit," &c. "It is (says Doddridge) very evident, that the apostle refers to a notion which prevailed among the Rabbies, as well as the philosophers, (Pythagoreans, Platonists, and Stoics,) that the person of man was constituted of three distinct substances, the rational spirit, the animal soul, and the visible body." See Heb. iv. 12.

Ver. 24. Who also will do it.—Doddridge, "Do (this:)" that is, "sanctify you wholly."

Ver. 27. I charge you.—Doddridge and Macknight, "I adjure you."——That this Epistle be read, &c.—"This being a command to the presidents and pastors of the Thessalonian church, it is evident that this Epistle must have been first delivered unto them, by his order, although it was inscribed to the Thessalonians in general. The same course, no doubt, he followed with all his other inspired Epistles. They were sent to the elders of the churches, for whose use they were designed, with a direction that they should be read publicly, by some of their number, to the brethren in their assemblies for worship; and that, not once or twice, but frequently, that all might have the benefit of the instructions contained in them. If this method had not been followed, such as were unlearned would have derived no advantage from the apostolical writings..... The practice, therefore, of the Romish clergy, who do not read the Scriptures to the common people in their religious assemblies, or who read them in an unknown tongue, is directly contrary to the apostolical injunction and to the primitive practice."—Macknight in loc.

The subscription to this (as well as to the following Epistle) is judged to be erroneous. Paley remarks, that though dated from Athens, it speaks of "the coming of Timotheus from Thessalonica." (Ch. iii. 6.) And the history informs us, Acts xviii. 5, that "Timothy came out of Macedonia to Paul at Corinth." The same learned writer also rejects the dating at Athens the second Epistle; remarking, that "the history does not allow us to suppose that Paul, after he had reached Corinth, went back to Athens." But the subscriptions to the Epistles generally are considered of so little authority, that they are altogether omitted by Doddridge, Macknight, and others.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE FIRST EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

[THE first Epistle to the Thessalonians, it is generally agreed, was the earliest written of all St. Paul's epistles; whence we see the reason and propriety of his anxiety that it should be read in all the Christian churches of Macedonia.—"I charge you by the Lord, that this Epistle be read unto all the holy brethren." (Ch. v. 27.) "The existence of this clause," observes Paley, "is an evidence of its authenticity; because, to produce a letter, purporting to have been publicly read in the church at Thessalonica, when no such letter had been read or heard of in that church, would be to produce an imposture destructive of itself.... Either the Epistle was publicly read in the church of Thessalonica, during St. Paul's lifetime, or it was not. If it was, no publication could be more authentic, no species of notoriety more unquestionable, no method of preserving the integrity of the copy more secure... If it was not, the clause would remain a standing condemnation of the forgery, and one would suppose, an invincible impediment to its success." Its genuineness, however, has never been disputed; and it has been universally received in the Christian church, as the inspired production of St. Paul, from the earliest period to the present day. The circumstance of this injunction being given, in the first epistle which the Apostle wrote, also implies a strong and avowed claim to the character of an inspired writer; as in fact it placed his writings on the same ground with those of Moses and the ancient prophets. It was evidently the chief design of the apostle, in writing to the Thessalonians, to confirm them in the faith, to animate them to a courageous profession of the gospel, and to the practice of all the duties of Christianity; but to suppose, with Macknight, that he intended to prove the divine authority of Christianity by a chain of regular arguments, in which he answered the several objections which the heathen philosophers are supposed to have advanced, seems quite foreign to the nature of the epistle, and to be grounded on a mistaken notion, that the philosophers deigned at so early a period to enter on a regular disputation with the Christians, when in fact they derided them as enthusiasts, and branded their doctrines as "foolishness." In pursuance of his grand object, "it is remarkable," says Doddridge, "with how much address he improves all the influence, which his zeal and fidelity in their service must naturally give him, to inculcate upon them the precepts of the gospel, and persuade them to act agreeably to their sacred character. This was the grand point he always kept in view, and to which every thing else was made subservient. Nothing appears, in any part of his writings, like a design to establish his own reputation, or to make use of his ascendancy over his Christian friends to answer any secular purposes of his own. On the contrary, in this and in his other epistles, he discovers a most generous, disinterested regard for their welfare, expressly disclaiming any authority over their consciences, and appealing to them, that he had chosen to maintain himself by the labour of his own hands, rather than prove burdensome to the churches, or give the least colour of suspicion, that, under zeal for the gospel, and concern for their improvement, he was carrying on any private sinister view. The discovery of so excellent a temper must be allowed to carry with it a strong presumptive argument in favour of the doctrines he taught.... And, indeed, whoever reads St. Paul's epistles with attention, and enters into the spirit with which they were written, will discern such intrinsic characters of their genuineness, and the divine authority of the doctrines they contain, as will, perhaps, produce in him a stronger conviction, than all the external evidence with which they are attended." These remarks are exceedingly well grounded and highly important; and to no other Epistle can they apply with greater force than the present most excellent production of the inspired Apostle. The last two chapters, in particular, as Dr. A. Clarke justly observes, "are certainly among the most important, and the most sublime in the New Testament. The general judgment, the resurrection of the body, and the states of the quick and the dead, the unrighteous and the just, are described, concisely indeed, but they are exhibited in the most striking and affecting points of view."]—Bagster.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

[THE second Epistle to the Thessalonians appears, from Silvanus and Timothy being still with St. Paul (ch. i. 1,) to have been written soon after the first, A. D. 52, and from the same place, Corinth, and not from Athens, according to the spurious subscription. It seems that the person who conveyed the first Epistle to the Thessalonians speedily returned to Corinth, and gave the Apostle a particular account of the state of the Church; and, among other things, informed him that many were in expectation of the near approach of the advent of Christ, and of the day of judgment, which induced them to neglect their secular affairs, as inconsistent with a due preparation for that important and awful event. This erroneous expectation they grounded partly on a misconstruction of some expressions in his former Epistle, and of what he had spoken when with them; but it was supported also by some person, or persons, making a claim to inspiration, and claiming to have a revelation upon the subject, and, as some suppose, also by a forged Epistle. As soon as this state of the Thessalonians was made known to St. Paul, he wrote this second Epistle to correct such a misapprehension, and rescue them from an error, which, if appearing to rest on the authority of an Apostle, must have a very injurious tendency, and be ultimately ruinous to the cause of Christianity.]—B

CHAPTER I.

1 Saint Paul certifieth them of the good opinion which he had of their faith, love, and patience: 11 and therewithal useth divers reasons for the comforting of them in persecution, whereof the chiefest is taken from the righteous judgment of God.

PAUL, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto [a] the church of the Thessalonians in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ:

2 Grace [b] unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth;

4 So that we ourselves glory [c] in you in the churches of God for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye [d] endure:

5 Which is [e] a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also [f] suffer:

6 Seeing [g] it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you;

7 And to you who are troubled [h] rest with us, when the Lord Jesus [i] shall be revealed from heaven with [j] his mighty angels,

8 In [k] flaming fire [l] taking [m] vengeance on them that [n] know not God, and [o] that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ:

9 Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction [p] from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory [q] of his power;

10 When he shall come to be [r] glorified in his saints, and to be admired [s] in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day.

CHAPTER II.

1 He willeth them to continue steadfast in the truth received, 3 showeth that there shall be a departure from the Faith, 9 and a discovery of antichrist, before the day of the Lord come. 15 And thereupon repeateth his former exhortation, and prayeth for them

NOW we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him,

2 That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as [a] that the day of Christ is at hand.

3 Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except [b] there come a falling away first, and that man of sin [c] be revealed, the [d] son of perdition;

4 Who opposeth and exalteth [e] himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.

5 Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things?

6 And now ye know what [f] withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time.

7 For the mystery of iniquity doth already [g] work: only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way.

8 And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall [h] consume with the spirit [i] of his mouth, and shall destroy [j] with the brightness of his coming:

CHAP. I. Ver. 1—12. Paul thanks God for the conversion of the Thessalonians, and comforts them under persecution.—"This Epistle," says Prebendary Townsend, "is generally supposed to have been written by St. Paul, a few months after the former. It is [or rather ought to be] dated from the same place, Corinth: and Silvanus and Timotheus are both mentioned in the Introduction, [as in that of the former.] It was most probably written a little before, or a little after, the insurrection of the Jews at Corinth, when St. Paul was dragged before Gallio, (Acts xviii. 12;) as the apostle [chap. iii. 2, of this Epistle] seems to anticipate this violence, ... or else prays to be delivered from these unreasonable and unbelieving persecutors. .....

"St. Paul having been informed that some expressions in his first Epistle had been either perverted or misunderstood by the Thessalonians, (see 1 Thess. iv. 15—17; v. 4, 6,) who supposed the end of the world and the coming of Christ to be at hand, immediately addresses them, for the purpose of refuting this error; which, while resting on apostolical authority, would be alike injurious to the Christian converts, and to the continued propagation of the gospel." (New Test. Arr.)

The apostle opens this Epistle, as he had done the former, by thanking God on their behalf, and rejoicing in their consistent an ornamental profession of the gospel; and, at the same time, denouncing the awful judgments of God against their infidel and relentless persecutors. For "when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels," then shall he take vengeance—not on them who never heard the gospel; but on those who, having heard it, refuse either to believe or to obey it; who "put from them the words of eternal life," and reject the "only name given under heaven among men, whereby we can be saved." (See Acts xiii. 46; iv. 12.)

Our apostle then prays for the Thessalonians, that they might be counted "worthy of this calling;" namely, of being reckoned among the saints; and that "the Lord would in them fulfil the good pleasure of his goodness,"—an expression which the ingenious Mr. Blackwall has noted as "the most charming representation any where to be found, of that infinite goodness which surpasses all expression; but was never so happily and properly expressed as here." To this quotation, Dr. Doddridge adds, "that the [Greek] word seems at once to express that it is (God's) sovereign pleasure; and also that he feels a sacred complacency in the display of it."

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—17. The apostle guards the Thessalonians against any mistake as to the near approach of the end of the world, and warns them of the grand apostacy.—"There is reason to believe, from this and many other passages of the New Testament, (says the late And. Fuller,) that the sacred writers considered themselves as having passed the meridian of time; and, as it were, entered into the afternoon of the world." (See 1 Cor. x. 11. Heb. i. 2; ix. 20. James v. 8. Rev. xxii. 20.)

"Every thing, with respect to degrees, is what it is by comparison. Taking into consideration the whole of time, the coming of Christ was 'at hand.' (Phil. iv. 5.) But taking into consideration only a single generation, the day of Christ was not 'at hand.' The Thessalonians, though a very amiable people, were by some means led into a mistake on this subject,

CHAP. I. Ver. 3. Your faith groweth exceedingly.—"This teaches us not to satisfy ourselves with a general belief that the gospel is from God, nor with a superficial view of its doctrines and precepts. Our persuasion of [its] divine origin ought to become more clear and extensive."—Macknight. [The word uperauxanei signifies, as Dr. Clarke remarks, to grow luxuriantly, as a good and healthy tree in a good soil; and, if a fruit tree, bearing an abundance of fruit to compensate the labour of the husbandman. Faith is one of the seeds of the kingdom: this the Apostle had sowed and watered, and God gave an abundant increase. Their faith was multiplied, and their love abounded; and this was not the case with some distinguished characters only; it was the case with every one of them. For this the apostle felt himself bound to give continual thanks to God on their behalf, as it was "meet" and right.]—B.

Ver. 5. A manifest token.—Doddridge, "Display."

Ver. 7. His mighty angels.—Greek, "Angels of his power."

Ver. 8. Taking vengeance.—Macknight, "inflicting punishment."

Ver. 9. With everlasting destruction.—It seems impossible to reconcile his with the doctrine of Universal Restoration.——From the presence.—Bp. Hopkins explains this as implying, not only banishment, but positive punishment, as it were, by the lightning of his eye. We think, with Macknight, that it is an allusion to the glory of the Shechinah, from which a flame came out and destroyed Nadab and Abihu, and afterwards 250 of Koruh's company. Levit. x. 1. Numb. xvi. 35.

Ver. 11. Count—That is, graciously consider you as worthy for this high and holy calling and "fulfil in you all the good pleasure of his goodness," &c.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. By the coming, &c.—Bp. Newton, Cradock, Doddridge, Macknight, &c. render it, "Concerning the coming," which is far preferable. ——And by our gathering together.—See 1 Thes. iv. 17. Jude 14.

Ver. 3. Let no man deceive you.—This is supposed to refer to the impositions practised in the first age of Christianity by false prophets, forged epistles, &c. as well as by a misconstruction of Paul's former Epistle. See Macknight.——A falling away.—Doddridge, "an apostacy." Macknight, "The apostacy."——The son of perdition.—See Jn. xvii. 12. For a full exposition of this passage, see Bp. Newton, vol. ii. Dissert. 22; and Benson on the Epistles, Diss. 2.

Ver. 4. Above all that is called God.—Macknight, "a God;" the omission of the Greek article, he thinks, requires the insertion of the indefinite article in English. But the man of sin personated the true God, and not an idol We, therefore, with Doddridge, prefer the common translation.

Ver. 7. He who now letteth.—Doddridge, "Only there is one that hindereth till he be taken out of the way." Dr. Chandler translates the verse thus: —"For the mystery of iniquity already worketh, only till he who restrains it be taken out of the way." To the same purpose, Macknight. The obsolete word let, in the sense of "hinder."

Ver. 8. That wicked.—Macknight, "lawless one." (Gr. anomo.)—Whom the Lord shall consume with the Spirit—(Doddridge, "breath")—of his mouth.—"Which (says Doddridge) shall kindle around him a consuming flame." See note on chap. i. 9. Some parts of Daniel's prophecy are very similar to several verses in this chapter.

9 Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders,

10 And with all deceivableness of [k] unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love [l] of the truth, that they might be saved.

11 And for this cause God shall send them strong [m] delusion, that they should believe a lie:

12 That [n] they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

13 But we [o] are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen [p] you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth:

CHAPTER III.

1 He craveth their prayers for himself: 3 testifieth what confidence he hath in them, 5 and what he prayeth for them: 6 giveth commandment to keep apostolic discipline, 11 shun idleness, and ill company, 16 and last of all concludeth with prayer and salutation.

---

so as to expect that the end of the world would take place in their lifetime, or within a very few years. To correct this error, which might have been productive of very serious evils, was a principal design of [this] Epistle."

The mistake here referred to probably originated in a misunderstanding of St. Paul's words, in his first Epistle, wherein he speaks of some Christians being alive at that period, (1 Thess. iv. 15—17,) which they misunderstood as speaking of himself and brethren of that generation.

We come now to a most interesting and important prophecy relative to the grand apostacy, and to the reign of "the Man of Sin," and here arise three or four inquiries which demand a brief attention.

1. What is the grand apostacy here referred to? This apostacy, or "falling away," is agreed to be, not of a political, but of a religious nature; and Protestant writers and commentators almost universally refer it to the apostacy of the church of Rome, from the doctrine of Scripture and of the apostles. This prediction, as Dr. Pye Smith observes, "describes a great and extensive apostacy, which was to arise in the very bosom of the Christian church. The description purports, that this falling away should not be a renunciation of the Christian name, but should have its seat in 'the temple of God,' in the interior of the church, or great body of Christians; that its principles were already in operation, but that a temporary restraint would be imposed upon them; that, on the removal of this restraint, it would rapidly and powerfully develope itself; that its character would be wicked, its means of action extremely artful, deceptive, and iniquitous, and its tendency most destructive; that it should usurp a proud dominion, and claim even divine prerogatives; and that it should, at last, be annihilated by the pure doctrine and invincible power of the Lord Jesus."

2. Who is "the Man of Sin, the Son of Perdition?" The same class of writers who explain this apostacy of the corruptions of Popery, of course explain this Man of Sin as meaning the Pope of Rome; not any individual Pope, nor the Pope merely as a religious character; but as the head of that system of ecclesiastical usurpation and tyranny, which we commonly comprehend under the term Popery. Let us compare it with the original. His being "the Son of Perdition," implies apostacy and treachery. Popery, like Judas, not only deserted, but betrayed Christ and his cause—not, indeed, for thirty pieces of silver; but tempted by the immense wealth which accrues from purgatory and pardons, and masses for the dead, as well as from the church's secular usurpations. It took its seat in the church, which is God's temple, and there claimed supreme authority in dictating the sense of Scripture—in imposing laws—and in prescribing implicit faith and obedience, which certainly implies a supreme and divine authority; for what is more peculiar to Deity than to prescribe how we are to believe and live? Nor are there wanting instances of the arrogant assumption even of divine names and worship.

Our 3d inquiry regards the impeding power here referred to, which almost all commentators, Catholic as well as Protestant, refer to the Pagan Roman empire, which, while it remained, prevented the rising to his full authority of this "Man of Sin" and "Son of Perdition"—generally called Antichrist, from its direct opposition to the doctrine and authority of Christ. But we must not enlarge here, as the subject will come again under our notice in the next Epistle, and more at large in the writings of St. John.

4. We must consider the means of success which attended the rise of this wicked, or, more literally, lawless one; who, while he prescribed laws to all Christendom, himself, of course, acknowledged no superior, but assumed the title of Christ's Vicar upon earth, which he still retains. Not to quote the blasphemy of the Canonists, who, in one instance, at least, flattered the Bp. of Rome with the impious title of "Our Lord God the Pope;" Mosheim informs us that, in the eleventh century, the Bishops of Rome "carried their pretensions so far as to give themselves out for lords of the universe, arbiters of the fate of kingdoms and empires, and supreme rulers over the kings and princes of the earth." Accordingly, the Pope is no sooner elected than he is enthroned upon the altar, and the Cardinals, who elected him, kiss his feet, which ceremony is very properly called—Adoration. (Bp. Newton on the Prophecies.)

But, to go no farther back than the 16th century, the Council of Trent requires every clergyman, on taking orders, to subscribe the following declaration:—"I acknowledge the holy Catholic and apostolical church of Rome, the mother and mistress of all churches: and to the Pope of Rome, the successor of Peter the Prince of the Apostles, and the Vicar of Jesus Christ, I promise and swear true obedience." (Creed of Pope Pius IX.)

Now this wicked, lawless power, is said to come "after (or according to) the energetic working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders:" that is, as the candid Doddridge explains it, "by a variety of fictitious miracles, so artfully contrived, and so strongly supported by an abundance of false testimonies, that many shall be entangled, deceived, and undone by them:" and because "they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved," they are "given up to these awful delusions that they might be condemned." God forbid, however, that we should maintain that all Roman Catholics will be lost. This is said in reference to those only who believed not the truth, because "they had pleasure in unrighteousness;" and this is the true and general cause of men's rejection of the gospel.

But we come, lastly, to consider the end of this extraordinary character, "whom the Lord shall destroy by the breath of his mouth," which is his word, "and by the brightness of his coming," which may allude to the diffusion of truth wherever that word is spread: or, as Doddridge explains it, the breath of his [Christ's] mouth, shall kindle all around him a consuming flame, in which all his [Antichrist's] pomp and pride shall vanish. (See Rev. ii. 16; xix. 15.)

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—18. Paul entreats the prayers of the Thessalonians, and gives them his apostolical advice.—The apostle having, in the close of the preceding chapter, prayed earnestly for the Thessalonians, now, in return, entreats their prayers for him, that he might be delivered out of the hands of "unreasonable and wicked men," by whom he is supposed to mean his persecutors; and that his labours might be abundantly blessed in the propagation of the gospel.

St. Paul then expresses his confidence in the Thessalonians, that they would follow his directions and advice, and again prays for them that their hearts might be directed into the love of God, and the patience of Christ: and thus, in most of his Epistles, he mingles prayers and instructions, in the true spirit of an apostle, his heart being filled with zeal for God, and love to the souls of men.

He then exhorts them to the maintenance of proper discipline in the church, withdrawing themselves from communion with any one, though, in the judgment of charity, a Christian brother, who should be found to walk disorderly and bring disgrace upon his profession. He adverts particularly to any that should prove idle—a vice not sufficiently reprobated among Christians; and who, instead of providing, by their CHAP. III. Ver. 1. May have free course, and be glorified.—John Edwards thinks this is another allusion to the Olympic races, in which the runner who gained the prize was said to be glorified; i. e. highly applauded. So the apostle desires that the gospel might run its uninterrupted course with great success.

2 And that we may be delivered from [b] unreasonable and wicked men: for all men have not faith.

3 But the Lord [c] is faithful, who shall establish you, and keep [d] you from evil.

4 And we have confidence [e] in the Lord touching you, that ye both do and will do the things which we command you.

5 And the Lord direct [f] your hearts into the love of God, and [g] into the patient waiting for Christ.

6 Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye [h] withdraw yourselves from every brother [i] that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us.

7 For yourselves know how ye ought to follow us: for we behaved not ourselves disorderly among you; own labour, "things honest in the sight of all men," became busy-bodies, and went about talking from house to house, whereby they might justly acquire the character of religious gossips: these he severely reproves, pronouncing on them this emphatic sentence,—"that if any would not work, neither should he eat;" and referring to the example of himself and brethren, who had worked night and day, when necessary, rather than eat the bread of idleness: and even as to those whose circumstances did not require them to live by daily labour, there was so great a call in the church for active and benevolent exertion, that it was criminal to be idle: and though they had long been thus employed, they were still to persevere, and not to be "weary in well-doing."

Paul would not, however, recommend any measures unnecessarily severe: he would not treat even a disorderly brother as an enemy, but admonish, and endeavour to restore him. And "may the Lord of peace himself, (says he,) give you peace always by all means. The Lord be with you all!"

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE SECOND EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

[Besides those marks of genuineness and authority which this Epistle possesses in common with the others, it bears the highest evidence of its divine inspiration, in the representation which it contains of the papal power, under the characters of the "Man of sin," and the "Mystery of iniquity." The true Christian worship is, the worship of the one only God, through the one only Mediator, the man Christ Jesus; and from this worship the church of Rome has most notoriously departed, by substituting other mediators, invocating and adoring saints and angels, worshipping images, adoring the host, &c. It follows, therefore that "the man of sin" is the Pope: not only on account of the disgraceful lives of many of them, but by means of their scandalous doctrines and principles; dispensing with the most necessary duties, selling pardons and indulgences for the most abominable crimes, and perverting the worship of God by the grossest superstition and idolatry. He also, like the false apostle Judas, is "the son of perdition;" whether actively, as being the cause of destruction to others, or passively, as being devoted to destruction himself. "He opposeth:" he is the great adversary of God and man; persecuting and destroying, by crusades, inquisitions, and massacres, those Christians who prefer the word of God to the authority of men. "He exalteth himself above all that is called God, or is worshipped;" not only above inferior magistrates, but also above bishops and primates, kings and emperors; nay, not only above kings and emperors, but also above Christ, and God himself; "making even the word of God of none effect by his traditions;" forbidding what God has commanded, as marriage, the use of the Scriptures, &c.; and commanding, or allowing, what God has forbidden, as idolatry, persecution &c. "So that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." His "sitting in the temple of God," implies plainly his having a seat in the Christian church: and he sitteth there "as God," especially at his inauguration, when he sits upon the high altar in St. Peter's church, and makes the table of the Lord his footstool, and in that position receives adoration. At all times he exercises divine authority in the church; "showing himself that he is God;" affecting divine titles, and asserting that his decrees are of the same, or greater authority, than the word of God. The foundation of popery was laid in the Apostles' days; but several ages passed before the building was completed, and "the man of sin revealed," in full perfection; when that "which hindered," the Roman empire, was dissolved. "His coming is after the energy of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders," &c.; and does it require any particular proof, that the pretensions of the Pope, and the corruptions of the church of Rome, are all supported and authorized by feigned visions and miracles, by pious frauds, and impositions of every kind? But, how much soever "the man of sin" may be exalted, and how long soever he may reign, yet, at last, "the Lord shall consume him with the Spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy him with the brightness of his coming."]—Bagster.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO TIMOTHY.

[Timothy, to whom this Epistle is addressed, was a native of Lystra, a city of Lycaonia, in Asia Minor. His father was a Gentile, but his mother Eunice, and his grandmother Lois, were Jewesses, by whom he was brought up in the fear of God, and early instructed in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. (Acts xvi. 1. 2 Tim. iii. 15.) It is probable that he was converted to the Christian faith during the first visit made by Paul and Barnabas to Lystra, (Acts xiv.) and when the Apostle came from Antioch in Syria to Lystra the second time, he found him a member of the church, and so highly respected and warmly recommended by the church in that place, that he chose him to be the companion of his travels, having previously circumcised him, (Acts xvi. 1–3,) and solemnly ordained him by imposition of hands, (1 Ti. iv. 14. 2 Ti. i. 6.) though at that time he was probably not more than twenty years of age, (1 Ti. iv. 12.) Being thus prepared to be the Apostle's fellow-labourer in the gospel, he accompanied him and Silas in their various journeys, assisting him in preaching the gospel, and in conveying instructions to the churches. (Acts xvi. 10, 11, &c.; xvii. 13, 14; xviii. 5; xix. 22; xx. 4.) An ecclesiastical tradition states that he suffered martyrdom at Ephesus, being slain with stones and clubs, A. D. 97, while preaching against idolatry in the vicinity of the temple of Diana; and his supposed relics were transported to Constantinople with great pomp, A. D. 356, in the reign of Constantius.

It is evident that this Epistle was written by the Apostle when on a journey from Ephesus to Macedonia, having left Timothy at Ephesus, in care of the church, (ch. i. 3.) This is supposed by many, both ancients and moderns, to have been when St. Paul quitted Ephesus, on account of the disturbance raised by Demetrius, and went into Macedonia, (Acts xx. 1,) about A. D. 56, 57, or 58.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER I.

1 Timothy is put in mind of the charge which was given unto him by Paul at his going to Macedonia. 5 Of the right use and end of the law. 11 Of Saint Paul's calling to be an apostle, 20 and of Hymenæus and Alexander.

individual ministers, and the two first of them to Paul's beloved son—not in the flesh, but "in the faith,"—his son Timothy, of whose conversion and character, Dr. Macknight gives the following account:—

"Paul and Barnabas, in the course of their first apostolical journey among the Gentiles, having come to Lystra, a city of Lycaonia in the Lesser Asia, (Acts xiv. 6,) preached there some time, and converted a pious Jewish woman named Lois, with her daughter Eunice, whose husband, it is thought, was then dead, (2 Tim. i. 5.) Soon after this, Timothy, Eunice's son, who had been brought up by his mother and grandmother in the Jewish religion, and in the knowledge of the Scriptures, (2 Tim. iii. 15,) being greatly affected by the apostle's discourses, believed. From the time of his conversion, Timothy made such proficiency in the knowledge of the gospel, and was so remarkable for the sanctity of his manners, as well as for his zeal in the cause of Christ, that he attracted the esteem of all the brethren in those parts. Accordingly, when the apostle came from Antioch, in Syria, to Lystra the second time, they so praised Timothy, that him would Paul have to go forth with him, (Acts xvi. 2, 3.) Timothy was (also) pointed out as a fit person to be ordained an evangelist. . . . . Timothy, though a Jew, [by his mother's side,] not having been circumcised, by reason that his father was a Greek, it was proper he should bear that mark of his descent; because, without it, the Jews would have looked on him as a Gentile, and have despised his instructions. This, and not any opinion that circumcision was necessary to salvation, determined the apostle to propose, and Timothy to receive, the rite by which the Jews, from the earliest times, had been distinguished from the rest of mankind."

Timothy was set apart to the office of an evangelist by the Presbytery, or elders of the church, and either at the same time, or soon afterwards, received the bestowment of miraculous gifts by the hands of the apostle, to whom he became travelling companion and fellow-labourer, in several of his journeys, till he left him in Ephesus to go into Macedonia, and while they were separated sent him this Epistle. Considerable difference prevails among critics as to the date of this Epistle. Many place it as early as A. D. 56 or 58; but we have followed Mr. Horne in placing it in 64, which is a year sooner than our translators; but the exact date is of little importance, as there is no question of its authenticity or inspiration.

The apostle having introduced this epistle, in his usual manner, with an apostolical blessing, reminds Timothy of the charge he had given him, to caution all the teachers of Christianity against the fables, as well of the Jewish Rabbies as of the Pagan theology; and particularly against their endless genealogies, which could lead to no valuable end, and answer no pious purpose; but on the contrary, being subject to great uncertainty, ministered to many idle questions, and encouraged a spirit of idle disputation: whereas, the end and object of all the precepts of the gospel is holy obedience to God, affection to the brethren, and universal benevolence. The teachers here reproved, it appears, affected to be teachers of the law of Moses, and especially of its moral precepts, without well understanding either its nature or design. Truly, "the law is good if a man use it lawfully;" and it is lawfully used when employed, (as in the following verses,) for the conviction of sin, as a direction in the path of duty, or as a glass wherein to view the glory of the divine perfections; but it is used unlawfully, when considered as a covenant of works and a means of justification, as this apostle has at large shown in his Epistles to the Romans and Galatians. (See Omicron's Letters, No. 30.)

The apostle then adverts to his favourite subject, his obligations to sovereign grace; and he declares himself as "the chief of sinners," to be set forth for a pattern of divine mercy and long-suffering, which reflection draws from him a pious doxology to "the King eternal, immortal and invisible." The chapter concludes with a melancholy intimation respecting two fallen professors, who had made shipwreck of their faith; and whom he had, by a temporary separation from the church, delivered into the hands of the tempter, not for their destruction, but that they might learn, by what they suffered from him, to blaspheme no more.

CHAPTER III.

2 How bishops, and deacons, and their wives, should be qualified, 14 and to what end Saint Paul wrote to Timothy of these things. 15 Of the church, and the blessed truth therein taught and professed.

THIS is a true saying, If a man desire the office of a [a] bishop, he desireth a good work.
2 A bishop [b] then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of [c] good behaviour, given to hospitality, apt to teach;
3 Not [d] given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but [e] patient, not a brawler, not covetous;
4 One that ruleth well [f] his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity;
5 (For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?)

all men, we think the plain and obvious meaning is, for men of all ranks and classes, and particularly for our superiors—"kings, and all that are in authority." And here, says M. Claude, "It is very natural to remark the time [when this injunction was given.] It was when the church and the apostles were every where persecuted; when the faithful were the objects of the hatred and calumny of all mankind, and in particular, of the cruelty of these tyrants: yet none of this rough treatment could stop the course of Christian charity. St. Paul not only requires every believer to pray for all men, but he would have it done in public, that all the world might know the maxims of Christianity, always kind, patient, and benevolent. Believers consider themselves as bound in duty to all men, though men do nothing to oblige them to it. He was aware malicious slanderers would call this worldly policy and human prudence; and would say, Christians only meant to flatter the great, and to court their favour; yet even this calumny does not prevent St. Paul: he orders them to pray publicly, and first, for civil governors."—These remarks, we may observe, were written by a French Protestant divine, in the prospect of that horrid persecution, which soon after drove him into banishment in a foreign country, by the revocation of the Edict of Nantz, which was the French law of toleration.

The argument used by our apostle to justify and enforce this precept, of praying for all, is, that "God our Saviour will have all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth;" which we consider as referring, not so much to the design or decree of the Almighty, as to his command, and revealed will. So Dr. Macknight renders it—"Who commandeth all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth;" which is language parallel to that which our apostle addressed to the Athenians, (Acts xvii. 30:) God "now commandeth all men every where to repent." Farther, as the ground of this commandment, we read, that our Saviour "gave himself a ransom for ALL:" by which expression we understand, that all ranks, all orders, and all nations of mankind, are equally interested in his atonement, and equally enjoined to receive and rest upon it; with no exceptions from its benefits, but what are made by their own infidelity and perverseness.

Another argument, and that a very powerful one, to induce us to pray for our governors, is, the great advantage to be expected therefrom, both to ourselves and to the church; namely, that we may lead quiet and peaceable lives under their administration, which cannot be expected while they act in rebellion against God, and are persecutors of his people.

What follows in this chapter relates to the female sex, their dress, and conduct. It has always been considered as a delicate and a dangerous thing for preachers to interfere with the dress of women; but Paul was an apostle, and, as such, armed with an authority, to which Christian women cannot object: and the purport of his injunction, as we understand it, is, not to degrade them, but rather to increase their respectability; for he does not forbid their wearing apparel suited to their rank and circumstances, (which is, indeed, desirable, that it may employ the poor;) but those showy and splendid ornaments, calculated, indeed, to attract the notice of the other sex, and therefore inconsistent with Christian modesty. From the same principle, he forbids the rendering themselves conspicuous in the assemblies for public worship, by exercising their gifts before the men.

But we have freely expressed our opinion on this point, on the latter part of chap. xiv. of Paul's first Epistle to the Corinthians. The reasons which the apostle gives for female subjection are two:—

1. That Adam was first formed, and then Eve, to be his help-meet and companion.

2. That it was through her being deceived that Adam fell, and, by falling, brought on his posterity death and all its painful accompaniments of wo.

The last verse of this chapter is peculiarly difficult. Some of our best commentators, considering that our salvation is wholly dependent on "the Seed of woman," think that the expression here used has a reference to the incarnation, as if Paul had said, "Woman, having been the instrument of our salvation, shall also be herself saved through that event;" and though woman must suffer much in consequence of that divine sentence, "In sorrow shalt thou bring forth children;" yet even in that perilous hour shall she be saved, if she continue to act worthy her Christian profession.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—16. How bishops, deacons, and their wives, should be qualified—the ground of these directions.—We purposely avoid inquiry into the particular nature and rank of these officers in the Christian church; but however their rank and office may be considered—whether bishops be understood as prelates, presidents, or pastors—most certainly moral character is to either, and to all, of the first importance. Their office is not a sinecure—it is a work, a good work, and requires a blameless character. One qualification is remarkable—he must be "the husband of one wife;" that is, of one wife only: "Neither guilty of polygamy, nor of divorce, or the taking of a second wife before the death of the first; evils too common in those days, both with Jews and Gentiles; and, however borne with before the establishment of Christianity, they were nevertheless sins against the divine institution of marriage; and therefore eminently culpable and scandalous, in a person who claimed so sacred and exemplary a character as that of a Bishop, or President of a Christian church." (Rev. Dr. Turner's Social Relig. p. 63, note.)

Among other qualifications of a bishop, it is particularly enjoined that he should not be a novice—that is, a new convert; but a man of some standing and experience in the Christian church, so as not likely to be elated with his situation, or to "fall into the condemnation of the devil," which appears to have been spiritual, or rather intellectual, pride.

The like purity of character is required in deacons as in pastors; and in performing well their office, they are said to "purchase to themselves a good degree"—namely, of respectability in the Christian church; and, as Dr. Hammond expresses it, may be "assumed into holy orders;" or, as Dr. Doddridge explains it, "they who have discharged the office of a deacon well, procure to themselves not only a fair report in the general, but very often a good degree of farther advancement in a higher office"—namely, as pastors or teachers. And not only ministers and deacons, but their wives also, ought to be persons of grave, sober, and prudent conduct. Much of the respectability and usefulness of a minister, or See Parad. Lost, bk. ix. 952, &c.—Some, however, supply the word, first, from the preceding verse—"Adam was not (first) deceived;" but we doubt the propriety of this supplement.

Ver. 15. She shall be saved.—Macknight refers this to the woman in the preceding verse, viz. Eve, who was herself saved through the promised seed, which eventually sprang from her.

CHAP. III. Ver. 2. The husband of one wife—i. e. of one only: no polygamist.—Apt—Doddridge, "fit"—to teach.

7 Moreover he must have a good report of them [j] that are without; lest he fall into reproach and the snare [k] of the devil.

8 Likewise must the deacons [l] be grave, not double-tongued, not [m] given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre;

9 Holding [n] the mystery [o] of the faith in a pure conscience.

10 And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless.

11 Even so must their wives [p] be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things.

12 Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling [q] their children and their own houses well.

13 For they that have [r] used the office of a deacon [s] well, purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldness in the faith [t] which is in Christ Jesus.

14 These things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly:

15 But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house [u] of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and [v] ground of the truth.

16 And without controversy great is the mystery [w] of godliness: God was [x] manifest in [y] the flesh, justified in the [z] Spirit, seen of [a] angels, preached unto the [b] Gentiles, believed on [c] in the world, received up [d] into glory.

CHAPTER IV.

1 He foretelleth that in the latter times there shall be a departure from the faith. 6 And to the end that Timothy might not fail in doing his duty, he furnisheth him with divers precepts belonging thereto.

NOW the Spirit speaketh expressly, that [a] in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing [b] spirits, and doctrines of devils;

2 Speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron;

3 Forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received [c] with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth.

4 For every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving:

5 For it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer.

6 If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up [d] in the words of faith and of good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained.

7 But refuse profane and old wives' [e] fables, and exercise thyself rather unto godliness.

pastor, depends upon the Christian character and conduct of his wife.

In the close of this chapter, we are introduced to the temple of truth, which is the Christian church, in which the apostles and evangelists, (of which last Timothy was one,) are to be considered as pillars, and Christ as the foundation. So Dr. Lightfoot tells us, that the members of the great Sanhedrim were called pillars of the truth; and St. Paul himself applies the term pillars to James, Cephas, and John, as pillars of the Christian church, (Gal. ii. 9:) but in Rev. iii. 12, every Christian conqueror is promised to be made a pillar in the temple above. The apostle's design may then be, to admonish Timothy of the importance of his being steadfast in the doctrines and duties of Christianity, since he was himself to be a pillar in the church of God, which church itself was to be the great support of truth, since without a visible church, it could not be maintained on earth.

The concluding verse gives an abstract of the principal points which compose the great mystery of Christianity, so called in opposition to, and in distinction from, the mysteries of Paganism, which were neither sublime in themselves, nor pious in their practical tendency and effect. This mystery comprehends, 1. The incarnation of Christ—God manifested in the flesh.—2. The resurrection of Christ, which we consider to be the import of the expression, justified in the Spirit; for he was "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of Holiness, (or Holy Spirit,) by his resurrection from the dead." (Rom. i. 4.) This was a complete justification of his character and pretensions, as the Son of God; and, at the same time, as his resurrection implies his previous death, it includes the doctrine of his atonement.—3. He was seen of angels—seems to refer to his intercourse with spirits, both evil and good; with the former of whom he had mysterious conflicts, in the various scenes of his temptation, passion, and resurrection; and by the latter of whom he was assisted and consoled.—4. Preached unto the Gentiles—the mystery which St. Paul speaks of as "hidden in God from the beginning of the world." (Ephes. iii. 9.) 5. Believed on in the world—yea, in almost all parts of the then known world. (Rom. x. 18.) 6th and lastly, Received up into glory, and exalted to the right hand of God, (Acts ii. 24, 30, 33.) These events compose a great part (though not the whole) of the mysteries of Christianity. That they are not regularly arranged, is not to be wondered at in St. Paul, whose rapid pen records events, not always according to the order of their occurrence, but in the order in which they presented themselves to his vivid imagination.

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1—16. The great apostacy foretold.—Apostolical advice to Timothy.—"By calling the Christian church, in the end of the preceding chapter, the pillar and support of the truth, (says Dr. Macknight,) the apostle teaches us, that one of the important purposes for which that great spiritual building was reared, was to preserve the knowledge and practice of true religion in the world. Nevertheless, knowing that in aftertimes great corruptions, both in doctrine and practice, would take place in the church itself; and that the general reception of these corruptions by professed Christians, would be urged as a proof of their being the truths and precepts of God, on pretence that the church is the pillar and support of the truth, the apostle .... judged it necessary, in this 4th chapter,

---

Ver. 6. Not a novice.—Macknight, "Not a new convert."—The condemnation of the devil—That is, pride.

Ver. 8. Not double tongued—That is, says D. Turner, "not deceitful, saying and unsaying."

Ver. 10 Then let them use, &c.—Doddridge, "If they be found blameless, let them use the office of a deacon."

Ver. 11. Even so must their wives be grave.—So the passage is generally understood; Macknight, however, renders it after the Vulgate—"The WOMEN in like manner must be grave"—referring it to the deaconesses, or female presbyters, who were employed in visiting and instructing their own sex: and so he tells us it was understood by Chrysostom and other Greek, as well as Latin fathers; and it is certain the same Greek word is used indifferently for both "wives" and "women."

Ver. 15. 16. Pillar and ground—Margin, "stay"—of the truth.—The passage is difficult, and has been variously rendered. We shall give two or three, which appear to us the most probable, interpretations. 1. As by our translators, and many others. 2. Henderson would render the passage—"The pillar and establishment of the truth, and incontrovertibly great is the mystery of godliness: God manifested himself in the flesh," &c.; and this, he says, has the sanction of the principal dignitaries of the Greek church in Russia. (Travels in Russia, p. 123.) 3. A third interpretation is that of Pye Smith, (partly borrowed from Dr. Cramer, of Kiel.) "These precepts I write unto thee, (hoping to come to thee very soon, but if I should be longer than I expect,) that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to conduct thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God (—the pillar and foundation of the truth and confessedly great is this mystery of religion!—) who was manifested in human nature, &c. (See Smith's answer to Taylor's Manifesto, p. 59.)

Ver. 16 And without controversy .... God was manifest (Margin, manifested) in the flesh, &c.—There is confessedly a doubt as to the original reading, whether it should be, "God was manifested in the flesh;" or, "WHO (or which) was manifested;" the difference being small in the original, and unimportant, since the title GOD (or Theos) (though in this text omitted by Griesbach.) is in various other passages applied to Christ, as John i. 1, &c. The Unitarian version reads, "HE who was manifested in the flesh;" and without a masculine pronoun it seems difficult to make any sense of the passage; a mystery might be "manifested," but the term would by no means answer to the other particulars—it could not be "received up into glory."

CHAP. IV. Ver. 1. Now the Spirit speaketh expressly.—Macknight. Or "saith in so many words."—That in the latter times.—Doddridge, "the last times." Macknight, "in aftertimes." Doddridge thinks, that under this term may be included the whole of the gospel dispensation, or any part of it, as in Heb. i. 1, 2. 1 Peter i. 20. Mede explains this expression, of the last times of the Roman Empire. Daniel's fourth Monarchy.—Depart from the faith.—Doddridge and Macknight, "Apostatize." Compare 2 Thess. ii. 3.—Doctrines of devils (or demons.)—Not (says Mede) that demons were the authors of them, (though that be true,) but doctrines concerning demons; meaning, that the Gentile idolatrous theology of worshipping demons should be revived in the adoration of saints and angels, as thus stated in the Creed of Pope Pius IV.—"I believe, that the saints who reign with Christ are to be worshipped and prayed to." Macknight adopts this explanation; but Granville Sharp contends in favour of the common version; to which Doddridge also adheres. See Sharp on the case of Saul.

Ver. 1—3. Now the Spirit speaketh, &c.—[This important prediction ought be more correctly rendered, "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall apostatize from the faith, giving heed to crafty spirits, and doctrines concerning demons, through the hypocrisy of men, having their consciences seared with a hot iron, forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats," &c. How applicable these predictions are to the corruptions of the church of Rome need scarcely be insisted on. The worship of saints and angels in that church is essentially the same with the worship of demons among the heathen; which has been established in the world by books forged in the name of the Apostles and saints, by lying legends of their lives, by false miracles ascribed to their relics, and by tales of their mass and relations; while celibacy was enjoined and practised under pretence of chastity, and abstinence under pretence of devotion. Nor can the Spirit of God could foresee and foretell these remarkable events.]—Bowyer.

Ver. 3. Forbidding to marry, [and commanding] to abstain from meats godliness [g] is profitable unto all things, having promise [h] of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.

9 This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation.

10 For therefore we both labour and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe.

11 These things command and teach.

12 Let [i] no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.

13 Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine.

14 Neglect [j] not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by [k] prophecy, with the laying on [l] of the hands of the presbytery.

15 Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear [m] to all.

16 Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save [n] thyself, and them that hear thee.

CHAPTER V.

1 Rebuke to be observed in reproving. 3 Of widows. 7 Of elders. 23 A precept for Timothy's health. 24 Some men's sins go before unto judgment, and some men's do follow after.

REBUKE not an elder, but entreat him as a father; and the younger men as brethren;

2 The elder women as mothers; the younger as sisters, with all purity.

3 Honour widows that are widows [a] indeed.

4 But if any widow have children or nephews, let them learn first to show [b] piety at home, and to requite their parents: for that is good and acceptable before God.

5 Now she that is a widow indeed, and desolate, trusteth in God, and continueth in supplications and prayers night and day.

6 But she that liveth [c] in pleasure is dead [d] while she liveth.

7 And these things give in charge, that they may be blameless.

8 But if any provide not for his own, and specially [e] for those of his own [f] house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel.

9 Let not a widow be [g] taken into the number under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man, to foretell the introduction of these corruptions, under the idea of an apostacy from the faith."

This passage is considered as speaking of the same apostacy that is predicted in the 2d Epistle to the Thessalonians, (chap. ii. 3, 4.) This apostacy, which followed the days of apostolic purity, spread beyond the reach of the Roman church, and Antichrist appeared in a variety of forms: or, as St. John says, there were "many Antichrists," (1 John ii. 18:) so that this great defection must not be confined to Popery, but may be fairly construed as comprehending other heresies, which at the same time sprung up and flourished; many of which, on the one hand, possessed the same secular character; or, on the other, affected the like austerities, "forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats," on which the gospel dispensation lays no restraints. "This false morality, (says Dr. Macknight,) was very early introduced into the church, being taught first by the Eucratites and Marcionites, and afterwards by the Manicheans, who said marriage was the invention of the evil god, and considered it as sinful..... In process of time, the monks embraced celibacy, and represented it as the highest pitch of sanctity. At length, celibacy was recommended by the priests, and by the orthodox themselves; more especially by the Bishops of Rome, the great patrons of the worship of angels and saints. Thus the worship of demons, and the prohibition of marriage, though naturally unconnected, have gone hand in hand in the church, as the Spirit here foretold."

Bishop Newton also remarks, that "there is no necessary connexion between the worship of the dead .... and commanding to abstain from meats; and yet it is certain, that the great advocates of this worship have, by their pretended purity and mortification, procured the greater reverence to their persons, and the readier reception to their doctrines. But this idle, popish, monkish abstinence, is as unworthy of a Christian, as it is unnatural to a man. It is perverting the purpose of nature, and 'commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving by believers, and by them who know the truth.' The apostle, therefore, approves and sanctifies the religious custom of blessing God at our meals; as our Saviour, when he was to distribute the loaves and fishes, (Matt. xiv. 19; xv. 36,) 'looked up to heaven, and brake:' and what then can be said of those who have their tables spread with the most plentiful gifts of God, and yet constantly sit down and rise up again, without suffering so much as one thought of the Giver to intrude upon them? .... can they be reputed either to believe or know the truth? Man is free to partake of all the good creatures of God, but thanksgiving is the necessary condition." (Dissert. 23.)

In enjoining these things upon Timothy, St. Paul assures him, that if he would prove himself a good minister of Jesus Christ, it must be by attention to sound and scriptural doctrines, and not by listening to Rabbinical traditions, or heathen fancies, both which may be included under the denomination of "profane, and old wives' fables." "Bodily exercise," also, by which he seems to refer to the voluntary mortifications he had just reproved, Paul considers of but little value; but he exhorts his son Timothy to exercise himself in those duties of practical religion, which are profitable for our present advancement in religion and happiness, and have attached to them, when performed in a proper spirit, the promise of eternal life. Upon this passage, Mr. Robert Hall remarks, that, "The happiness which religion confers in the present life, consists of the blessings which it scatters by the way, in its march to immortality."

Some difference has arisen among commentators as to the sense in which God—"The living God, is the Saviour of all men, specially of them that believe." "God, (says Dr. Macknight,) preserves both man and beast by the care of his providence; but saves believers from eternal death." (See Job vii. 20. Ps. xxxvi. 6.) Drs. Doddridge and Gill explain to the same effect.

When the apostle adds, "Give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine," &c. we infer two things—1. That even divine inspiration did not supersede the necessity of human means. They are enthusiasts only who pretend to any divine influences, which may set aside the use of learning; for Timothy, though an evangelist, was to give attendance to reading, and (ver. 15,) to meditate on what he read, for this purpose especially, that his profiting might "appear to all."—2. That both the private studies and public labours of ministers should be directed to the same end; "for in doing this, (says the apostle,) thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." The salvation of his own soul, is to every man the first and most important object; but the circle of duty enlarges with our connexions. A family brings upon us a multiplied responsibility; but oh! the awful account that ministers of large congregations will have to render, for those who perish through their neglect!

CHAP. V. Ver. 1—25. Timothy advised in his conduct towards elders, and especially females.—As nothing is more difficult to administer than reproof, the young evangelist is advised on this head, to act with the utmost caution and judgment, especially as it respects aged Christians of either sex, treating them as parents, and the younger Christians as brothers and sisters; and all intercourse with the latter is to be conducted with the utmost purity and prudence, the neglect of which has often seriously affected the characters both of ministers and hearers.

With respect to widows, those who have children, or grandchildren, in sufficient circumstances, ought to be maintained by them; but for those who were aged and destitute, the church ought, if possible, to make provision; employing them as deaconesses, to lead the devotions of their own sex in their separate meetings—to visit the sick—and to instruct the young

---

"In the original of this passage (says Macknight) is the boldest ellipsis found in the New Testament." Doddridge renders it, "Requiring abstinence from marriage, and from (various kinds of) meat."

Ver. 10. Saviour of all men.—The meaning is, Christ is offered as the Saviour of all—of all classes of men, Gentiles as well as Jews; but he is actually the Saviour of those only who believe and obey his Gospel. This passage is of the same import with that in John iii. 16.

Ver. 12. In Spirit.—This word is wanting in several ancient manuscripts and versions.—Macknight.

Ver. 14. The hands of the presbytery—Who appear to have laid on their hands with Paul; 2 Ti. i. 6. Compare Acts viii. 17, 18.

CHAP. V. Ver. 1. Rebuke not.—Doddridge and Macknight, "Rebuke not severely," nor sharply——An elder.—This is often used as a term of office; but here, as opposed to younger men, it must be taken literally, with respect to age.

Ver. 5. Widows indeed—That is, says Macknight, "desolate"—unable to maintain themselves, and having no relations to maintain them.——Nephews.—Doddridge and Macknight, "Grand-children."

Ver. 5. Night and day—i. e. continually. See Luke ii. 37.

Ver. 6. Liveth in pleasure.—Doddridge, "luxuriously." Whitby says, the original term has a particular reference to the drinking of strong and costly liquors.

Ver 9. The wife of one man—That is, having confined herself with strict fidelity to her lawful husband, and was not divorced to marry another. So Doddridge and Macknight. It appears, however, that the Pagan Romans paid particular respect to those who refused to marry again, and on some of 16 Well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged [n] strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work.

17 But the younger widows refuse: for when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, they will marry;

18 Having damnation, because they have cast off their first faith.

13 And withal they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and [i] not only idle, but tattlers also and busy-bodies, speaking things which they ought not.

14 I will therefore that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the house, give none occasion to the adversary [j] to speak reproachfully.

15 For some are already turned aside after Satan.

16 If any man or woman that believeth have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged; that it may relieve them that are widows indeed.

17 Let [k] the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honour, especially they who labour in the word and doctrine.

18 For the scripture saith, [l] Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn. And, [m] The labourer is worthy of his reward.

19 Against an elder receive not an accusation, but [n] before [o] two or three witnesses.

20 Them that sin rebuke [p] before all, that [q] others also may fear.

21 I charge [r] thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect [s] angels, that thou observe these things [t] without preferring one [u] before another, doing nothing by partiality.

22 Lay hands [v] suddenly on no man, neither be partaker [w] of other men's sins: keep thyself pure.

23 Drink no longer water, but use a little wine [x] for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities.

24 Some men's sins are open [y] beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after.

25 Likewise also the good works of some are manifest beforehand; and they that are otherwise cannot be hid.

CHAPTER VI.

1 Of the duty of servants. 3 Not to have fellowship with new-fangled teachers. 6 Godliness is great gain, 10 and love of money the root of all evil. 11 What Timothy is to flee, and what to follow. 17 and charge to admonish the rich. 20 To keep the purity of true doctrine, and to avoid profane janglings.

LET as many servants [a] as are under the yoke count their own masters worthy of all honour, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed.

2 And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them, because they are brethren; but rather do them service, because they are [b] faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort.

3 If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome [c] words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according [d] to godliness;

4 He is [e] proud, knowing [f] nothing, but [g] doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings,

5 [h] Perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, supposing that gain is godliness: from such [i] withdraw thyself.

6 But godliness [j] with contentment is great gain.

7 For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain [k] we can carry nothing out.

8 And having food and raiment let us be therewith [l] content.

9 But they that will [m] be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition.

10 For [n] the love of money is the root of all females. As to those who lived in pleasure, we do not understand this of pleasures criminal and licentious, but rather of a life of ease and indulgence, which unfitted them for devotion or benevolent exertions: they were, therefore, so far dead while they lived, being useful neither to the church nor to the world.

As to the other sex, if any man refused to provide for his aged and distressed relatives, and especially those of his own household, such a one thereby denied the faith, and was worse than an infidel; that is, worse than if he had never professed Christianity; because it is a practical renunciation of its first and fundamental principle of love.

As to the younger widows, it became the elders to be cautious how they received them as pensioners on the church, lest, after a while, they should not bear the restraints of Christianity, but marry Pagan husbands, and be enticed to desert the Christian faith, and thereby bring condemnation on themselves, and disgrace upon the cause.

The account here given of idle, gossiping females, may suit others besides the women of the apostolical age; and should be a warning to the sex against incurring such a severe reproof. In general we may remark, that great talkers on religion, as well as on other subjects, are seldom persons of much sense or piety. It is the shallow brook that rattles over the pebbles; the full stream flows in silent majesty.

The duty of children to provide for their necessitous and infirm parents, is here strongly inculcated; as is that also of churches to provide a liberal and honourable support for their pastors.

The two last verses mark the opposite characters of mankind, in respect to their natural dispositions. Some are so naturally frank and open, that whether they incline to good or evil, their characters are easily discerned. If they are vicious and profane, they are openly so, and they proclaim their own shame and condemnation; while the sins of others are more secret and reserved, and are only manifest in the event. So, on the other hand, some men's good works are equally open to public observation, and cast a kind of glory round their characters; while those of a more modest and reserved turn,

"Do good by stealth, and blush to find it fame."

They cannot, however, eventually be concealed; what they now do in secret, shall in the last day be openly acknowledged and rewarded.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1—21. Exhortation to servants—Directions to Timothy—Cautions against covetousness and worldly-mindedness.—The exhortation to slaves and other servants, is very similar to that given to those among the Colossians, (chap. iii. 22,) with this additional charge, not to take any advantage of their masters, as being fellow Christians, so as to their tombs, inscribed these words, Uni viro nupta—she had only one husband. But that St. Paul did not consider second marriages unlawful to women, is clear, from his advising them. See ver. 14.

Ver. 10. If she have washed the saints' feet.—See Lu. vii. 38—44, and notes.

Ver. 11. The younger widows refuse—That is, to receive them on the pension list, as widows to be supported by the church.—To wax wanton against Christ.—Macknight, "When they cannot endure Christ's rein." He says the original term is a metaphor, taken from high fed animals, who cannot bear the reins. Glassius and Le Clerc translate it, "Who do not obey the reins."

Ver. 12. Having damnation.—Doddridge, "Exposing themselves to condemnation." Macknight, "Incurring condemnation."—Cast off their first faith—That is, their fidelity to Christ, plighted when they assumed the office of Christian teachers: so Macknight. But, perhaps, to cast off their first faith, was only to "leave their first love," and lose their zeal. Compare Rev. ii. 4.

Ver. 13. Speaking things which they ought not—That is, revealing family secrets.

Ver. 14. The younger women.—Instead of women, which word is not in the original, Doddridge and Macknight adopt widows, from ver. 11, which therefore warrants, in such cases, second marriages on the female side.—To speak reproachfully—i. e. concerning Christ, or Christianity.

Ver. 17. The elders that rule well.—Doddridge and Macknight, "preside well;" especially they who labour in the word and doctrine—i. e. who are active and laborious preachers.—Worthy of double honour—That is, a proportionate income.

Ver. 19. But before.—Margin, "under;" i. e. under the testimony of, &c.

Ver. 20. Them that sin—That is, that sin scandalously, so as to bring reproach on the cause, let them be publicly rebuked, to warn others.

Ver. 21. The elect angels.—Those who having kept their stations when Satan and his adherents fell, are now fixed in permanent felicity by the divine decree. So Doddridge.

Ver. 22. Lay hands suddenly on no man—That is, according to Doddridge and Macknight, "Ordain no one to a sacred office hastily, or without due inquiry and examination."

Ver. 23. Drink no longer water—That is, water alone; but mix wine with it. The Greeks often mingled their wine with water in different proportions. Orient. Lit. No. 1507.

CHAP. VI. Ver. 1. Under the yoke—i. e. of bondage, or in actual slavery.

Ver. 2. Because they are faithful—i. e. fellow Christians.—Partakers of the benefit—i. e. of Christianity.

Ver. 3. The words of our Lord Jesus.—All the precepts which the apostle delivered by inspiration being the precepts of Christ, there is no occasion to suppose that he here referred to some precepts which he delivered while on earth.

Ver. 4. Doting.—Macknight, "distempered." Doddridge, "raving."

evil: which while some coveted after, they have [o]erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.

11 But thou, O man [p] of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness.

12 Fight [q] the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed [r] a good profession before many witnesses.

13 I give thee charge [s] in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who [t] before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good [u] confession;

14 That thou keep this commandment without spot, [v] unrebukable, until the appearing [w] of our Lord Jesus Christ:

15 Which in his times he shall show, who is the [x] blessed and only Potentate, the [y] King of kings, and Lord of lords;

16 Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which [z] no man can approach unto; whom [a] no man hath seen, nor can see: to whom [b] be honour and power everlasting. Amen.

17 Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust [c] in [d] uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to [e] enjoy;

18 That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, [f] willing to communicate;

19 Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay [g] hold on eternal life.

20 O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding [h] profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called:

21 Which some professing have [i] erred concerning the faith. Grace be with thee. Amen.

treat them with less respect or attention, because they were the more kind and lenient.

St. Paul then charges Timothy to urge upon his hearers the great and important interests of practical religion, and, in particular, to adhere strictly to "the doctrine which is according to godliness;" from an assurance, that all doctrines which have not a decided bearing in favour of Christian practice, are no part of Christianity. On the contrary, they have a tendency to engender strife and perverse disputings, which gratify men of corrupt and worldly dispositions, whose religion is to get money, and to whom "gain is godliness;" whereas the contrary is the fact, namely, that "Godliness, especially when linked with contentment, is great and certain gain." And why should we be discontented? "For we brought nothing into this world, (with us,) and it is certain we can carry nothing out:" and well it is we cannot; for if mankind could carry their wealth with them, this would be a poor world indeed! "Having (then) food and raiment, let us be therewith content:" and this content, which makes us happy here, together with vital godliness, which ensures to us "another and a better world," may well be reckoned great, accumulated, and eternal gain!

But as to those who are determined to be rich at all adventures, what do they eventually gain thereby? "They fall into many foolish and hurtful lusts." Indeed, there is no crime into which the love of money does not lead—no misery into which it does not, at one time or other, involve those afflicted with this dangerous mania; in short, "The love of money is the root of all evil."

"Money (says the pious Mrs. More) is the most efficient tool with which ambition works; it is the engine of political mischief, and of domestic oppression; the instrument of individual tyranny, and of universal corruption. Money is the elemental principle of pleasure; it is the magnet which, to the lover of flattery, attracts parasites; which the vain man loves for the circle it describes about him, and the train which it draws after him, even more than for the actual enjoyments which it procures him. It is the grand spring and fountain of pride and self-sufficiency, more especially to those who have nothing better to value themselves upon."—(Mrs. More's St. Paul, ch. xiv.)

Beautiful and animated is the apostrophe that follows:—"But thou, O man of God, flee these things"—pride, strife, covetousness, and the other evils he had enumerated.—"Fight the good fight of faith;" and then, having thereby conquered, "lay hold of eternal life," as the gracious reward promised by the Almighty Judge.

This chapter, and the Epistle, concludes with a solemn charge to Timothy, in the sight of God, and of our Lord Jesus Christ, not to flinch from his duty as a faithful minister of the gospel; but to charge the "rich in this world," that they be not proud, nor high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, which often "make to themselves wings and fly away." To prevent this, the rich are admonished to distribute their wealth liberally while they have it at command; and thereby to "lay up for themselves," as our Lord expresses it, "treasures in heaven," that when all earthly blessings fail them, they may "lay hold on eternal life!"

Ver. 10. They have erred.—Doddridge, "wandered."
Ver. 12. Professed a good profession.—Doddridge, "Confessed a good confession."
Ver. 13. A good confession.—The word is the same as in the verse preceding. See John xviii. 37.
Ver. 15. Which in his times he shall show.—Doddridge, "manifest." See Acts i. 7.
Ver. 16. Light which no man can approach unto.—Doddridge and Macknight, "light inaccessible."
Ver. 18. Willing to communicate—i. e. communicative; but the context evidently confines the word to charitable communications.
Ver. 19. Laying up in store.—Doddridge, "Treasuring up."—That they may lay hold.—The expression here, as in ver. 12, is evidently agonistic, and refers to grasping the prize which was the reward of victory.

Ver. 20. That which is committed to thy trust.—Namely, the gospel.—Science falsely so called.—The word here rendered science, (gnoseos,) in the following century gave rise to a sect famous (or rather infamous) in Ecclesiastical history, called Gnostics, or knowing ones, because they pretended to know more than any other Christians; and it has been surmised, from this text, that the sect was now rising to public notice.
Ver. 21. Have erred concerning the faith.—It was the desire of being wiser than man was designed to be, that seduced our first mother, Eve, and ruined mankind. (Gen. iii. 6.) And the same principle has led curious minds into dangerous errors, in every successive generation. The sect, or rather sects, of the Gnostics, (for they were much divided,) led them into speculations concerning the Aions, (or ages,) whom they took for a kind of intelligences emanating from the Deity, which notion was the parent of a thousand foolish fancies.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE FIRST EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY.

[THIS Epistle bears the impress of its genuineness and authenticity, which are corroborated by the most decisive external evidence; and its divine inspiration is attested by the exact accomplishment of the prediction which it contains respecting the apostacy in the latter days. This prophecy is similar in the general subject to that in the second Epistle to the Thessalonians, though it differs in the particular circumstances; and exactly corresponds with that of the prophet Daniel on the same subject: Da. xi. 38.]—Bagster.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO TIMOTHY.

[THAT this Epistle was written by St. Paul when a prisoner is sufficiently evident from chap. i. 8, 12, 16; ii. 9; and that it was while he was imprisoned at Rome, is universally admitted. That it was not written during his first confinement, recorded in Acts xxviii., as Hammond, Lightfoot, and Lardner suppose, but during a second imprisonment there, and not long before he suffered martyrdom, as Benson, Macknight, Paley, and Clarke, Bishop Tomline, Michaelis, Rosenmuller, and Horne, contend, is amply proved by the following considerations: in his first imprisonment "he dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came to him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus, with all confidence, no man forbidding him;" but at the time he wrote this Epistle, he was closely imprisoned as one guilty of a capital crime, so that Onesiphorus, on his arrival at Rome, had considerable difficulty in finding him out, and his situation at this time was extremely dangerous. At his first confinement at Come, Timothy was with St. Paul, and is joined with him in writing to the Rolossians, Philippians, and Philemon; but the present Epistle implies that he was absent. At the former period, Demas was with him; but now he had forsaken him, having loved this present world, and gone to Thessalonica. St. Mark was also then with him; but in the present Epistle Timothy is ordered to bring him with him. In the former Epistles, the Apostle confidently looked forward to his liberation, and speedy departure from Rome, (Philip. ii. 24. Philem. 22;) but in the Epistle before us he holds extremely different language, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand: I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day." From these observations, to which others might, and have been added, we may conclude, that this Epistle was written while St. Paul was in imprisonment the second time at Rome, and but a short time before his martyrdom; and, as it is generally agreed that this took place on the 29th of June, A. D. 66, and as the Apostle requests Timothy to come to him before winter, it is probable that it was written in the summer of A. D. 65. It is generally supposed, that Timothy resided at Ephesus when St. Paul wrote this Epistle to him; which appears very probable, though not certain.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER I.

[illegible] Timothy, and to the faithful faith which was in Timothy himself, his [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and

2 And the things that thou hast heard of me [b] among many witnesses, the same commit [c] thou to faithful men, who shall be able [d] to teach others also.

3 Thou therefore endure [e] hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

4 No man that warreth [f] entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier.

5 And if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully.

6 The husbandman [g] that laboureth must be first partaker of the fruits.

7 Consider [h] what I say; and the [i] Lord give thee understanding in all things.

8 Remember that [j] Jesus Christ, of the seed of David, was raised from the dead according to my gospel:

9 Wherein I suffer trouble, as an evil-doer, even unto [k] bonds; but the word of God is not bound.

10 Therefore I endure all things for the [l] elect's sake, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory.

11 It is a faithful saying: For if [m] we be dead with him, we shall also live with him:

12 If we suffer, we shall also reign with him: if we deny [n] him, he also will deny us:

13 If [o] we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he [p] cannot deny himself.

14 Of these things put [q] them in remembrance, charging them before the Lord that they strive [r] not about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers.

15 Study [s] to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly [t] dividing the word of truth.

16 But shun profane and vain babblings: for they will increase unto more ungodliness.

17 And their word will eat as doth a [u] canker: of whom is Hymeneus and Philetus, 18 Who concerning the truth have [v] erred, saying [w] that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some.

19 Nevertheless the foundation [x] of God standeth [y] sure, having this seal, The Lord [z] knoweth them that are his. And, Let [a] every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity.

20 But in a great house there are not only vessels [b] of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some to honour, and some to dishonour.

21 If [c] a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honour, sanctified, and meet for the master's use, and prepared [d] unto every good work.

22 Flee [e] also youthful lusts: but [f] follow righteousness, faith, charity, peace, with them that call [g] on the Lord out of a pure heart.

23 But foolish and unlearned questions [h] avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes.

24 And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, [i] patient,

25 In meekness [j] instructing those that oppose themselves; if God [k] peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging [l] of the truth;

26 And that they may [m] recover themselves out of the snare [n] of the devil, who are [o] taken captive by him at his will.

Ver. 3. Endure hardness.—Doddridge, "Afflictions." Macknight, "evil." Of the hardships which the Roman soldiers had to endure, see Josephus on the Jewish War, book iii. chap. 5.

Ver. 6. The husbandman that laboureth, &c.—Doddridge, "The husbandman must first labour, (and then) partake of the fruits." Macknight translates to the same effect.

Ver. 8. According to my gospel—i. e. the gospel which he preached.

Ver. 9. An evil-doer.—Macknight and Doddridge, "A malefactor."—The word of God is not bound.—On the contrary, persecution often contributes to its propagation. See Philip. i. 12, 13.

Ver. 11. It is a faithful saying.—Compare Rom. vi. 5, 8.

Ver. 15. Rightly dividing the word of truth.—Some think this refers to the duty of the priests in dividing the sacrifices; others, to the husbandman dividing the furrows with his plough; but we should rather refer it to the office of a steward, part of which, in those times, was to give each of the household his "portion of meat in due season." Luke xii. 41.

Ver. 17. Hymeneus and Philetus.—The latter is mentioned no where else in Scripture; but of Hymeneus, see 1 Tim. i. 20.

Ver. 18. The resurrection is past already.—These appear to have been allegorical preachers, who explained the resurrection figuratively of baptism, or perhaps of regeneration, which is the resurrection of the soul; an error afterwards ascribed by Epiphanius to the Gnostics and the Marcionites, and which Macknight thinks they founded on a misinterpretation of John v. 25.

Ver. 19. Having this seal, The Lord knoweth, &c.—This is thought to be an allusion to Num. xvi. 5. "Even to-morrow the Lord will show who are his, and who is holy; and will cause him to come near unto him; even him whom he hath chosen," &c. This passage refers to the priests under the law, and it is in allusion to them, that true Christians are called "a chosen generation, a holy and royal priesthood," 1 Peter ii. 5, 9. Doddridge says, "the expression is here used . . . in allusion to the custom of engraving upon some stones laid in the foundation of buildings the name of the persons by whom, and the purposes for which the structure is raised." We have no direct proof to offer; but we strongly suspect this was sometimes done by sealing; and we presume the seal of a prince was of that authority, that no subject dare remove a stone thus sealed. The late Mr. Taylor, in his fragments to Cabnet, No. cclxvi. 5, has given a copy of a Persian seal, containing not only the name of the king, but three sentences, one of which is, "God is my sufficiency;" another, "He that is not for Ali (Mahomet's son-in-law) is no friend of mine."

Ver. 20. Vessels . . . . . of earth—Are earthen ware. The vessels of so different materials are intended to represent the different sorts of teachers in the Christian church—some as apostles and evangelists, gold and silver; false teachers, wood and earthen ware.

Ver. 21. If a man therefore purge himself from these—That is, keep himself aloof from the false teachers and their errors, "he shall be a vessel unto honour," or an honourable vessel, like those of gold or silver.

Ver. 23. Unlearned questions.—Macknight, "untaught questions;" i. e. questions having no foundation in the Scriptures, and not there resolved, but curious, idle, and unimportant.

Ver. 26. Recover themselves.—Greek, "awake." Elsner remarks, the original means, to awake from a deep sleep—such as may be the consequence of fessions, to each of which the Christian, and especially the Christian minister, may be assimilated. 1. He is a soldier, and is bound by oath to follow and to obey the Captain of his salvation. Every soldier must keep to his post, and is not allowed to engage in any other business; nor has he time, for the Roman soldier, (who is here alluded to,) when neither fighting nor encamping, was always exercising. The foot soldiers, besides their armour, which was cumbersome and heavy, were obliged to carry three days' provision: so that they had much labour and hardship constantly to endure. 2. He is compared to one striving for mastery in the Olympic games, where all the laws of the contest must be strictly observed, in order to secure the prize; for a man "is not crowned except he strive lawfully." 3. He is likened to the husbandman, who must first labour to cultivate his ground, to sow, and plant, and water, and weed, &c. before he can expect to be a partaker of the fruits of the earth.

Paul having exhorted Timothy to endure hardships, reminds him of what himself endured—"I suffer trouble as an evil-doer," or malefactor, even "unto bonds: I endure all things for the elect's sakes, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus." This he did in the expectation, that those who suffer—who are crucified, and dead with Christ,—shall also be raised and reign with him. Timothy is then exhorted and encouraged to pursue his studies and labours wisely and zealously; discouraging all strife about words, and "all profane and vain babblings," in which the erroneous and worldly-minded teachers took delight; and studying so to divide the word of truth, like a faithful steward, as to give to each hearer his proper share and portion.

Our apostle next refers to some false and injudicious teachers, who, by allegorizing away the doctrine of the resurrection, "overthrew the faith of some." Notwithstanding this, however, he assures them that the foundation of God remained sure, having this double inscription for its seal—"The Lord knoweth them that are his;" and, "Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity." The one motto pointing to the great source of our salvation on the part of God; the other, the great practical end of our religion; and it is remarkable how often St. Paul thus connects election on the part of God, and obedience on the part of man, notwithstanding many persons consider them as inconsistent and contradictory.

The following verse (20) connects, as we conceive, not with that immediately preceding, but with the 18th verse. The faithful ministers of Christ are vessels of gold and silver; erroneous teachers, vessels of wood and clay; but, as in a great house, vessels of all these kinds are necessary, so in the church of God, there are false teachers, as well as true; and there is a "needs be that offences come." Timothy is, however advised to keep himself at a distance from false and erroneous teachers, and, at the same time, to guard against those youthful passions to which his age (being only a few years over thirty) might naturally expose him; meaning, by youthful lusts or passions, "not sensual lusts only, (as Macknight expresses it,) but ambition, pride, love of power, rashness, and obstinacy; vices which some teachers, who are free from sensual lusts, are at little pains to avoid." These he was not only to avoid, but to flee from; and, at the same time, in fleeing from them, he would pursue after righteousness, faith, charity, (or love,) peace, which he would find in the opposite direction—"with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart." And as to those who had gone into serious errors, Timothy is exhorted to treat them with all meekness, in hope that they might be enabled to recover themselves from the snare of Satan.

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—17. Paul admonishes Timothy of the great degeneracy to be expected in the times of the grand apostacy.—It is not necessary to enter into a minute inquiry as to all the vices here enumerated—a few general observations may suffice.

1. We are not disposed to confine these vices, any more than the grand apostacy itself, to the popish clergy: they may be all expected, wherever the form of godliness subsists without the power. 2. We may remark, how many vices and vicious tempers may co-exist with the mere form of godliness? 3. "It is observable, (says Dr. Macknight,) that this description begins with extreme selfishness as the root, and concludes with the excessive love of sensual pleasure as the end, of all [these] corruptions."—"Lovers of pleasures more [or rather] than lovers of God." This applies particularly to those professors who, with little or no hesitation, enter into all the enjoyments of the world, and frequent its places of fashionable amusements, without appearing to suspect that they renounce Christ by preferring these before him. "There has been (says Wilberforce) much argument concerning the lawfulness of theatrical amusements. Let it be sufficient to remark, that the controversy would be short indeed, if the question were to be tried by this criterion of love to the Supreme Being. If there were any thing of that sensibility for the honour of God, and of that zeal in his service, which we show in behalf of our earthly friends, or of our political connexions, should we seek our pleasure in that place which the debauchee, inflamed with wine, or bent on the gratification of other licentious appetites, finds most congenial to his state and temper of mind? In that place, from the neighbourhood of which (how justly termed a school of morals might hence alone be inferred) decorum, and modesty, and regularity retire, while riot and lewdness are invited to the spot, and invariably select it for their chosen residence! where the sacred name of God is often profaned! where sentiments are often heard with delight, and motions and gestures often applauded, which would not be tolerated in private company! . . . . . where, when moral principles are inculcated, they are not such as a Christian ought to cherish in his bosom, but such as it must be his daily endeavour to extirpate: not those which scripture warrants, but those which it condemns as false and spurious; being founded in pride and ambition, and the overvaluation of human favour! Where, surely, if a Christian should trust himself at all, it would be requisite for him to prepare himself with a double portion of watchfulness and seriousness of mind, instead of selecting it as the place in which he may throw off his guard, and unbend without danger!"

What is here said of theatrical amusements may apply to most other fashionable diversions, the leading object of which is, to divert the mind from every thing serious and devout; and which, consequently, is utterly inconsistent with the love of God our Saviour. It is not strange, therefore, that such should be denounced by our apostle as enemies to the truth, and reprobates concerning the faith: but it is an awful and alarming circumstance that men of this character should be found among the professed teachers of Christianity; and it is much to be lamented that, among professing females, there should be any silly enough to be led captive by them.

As a striking contrast to the preceding characters, we may here contemplate those of Paul and his son Timothy; the latter having not only "fully known," but copied the virtues of the former. Hence we may see the utility of scripture biography, and other Christian memoirs, because, "Herein we see how grace operates in men like ourselves; having the same passions, frailties, and imperfections with ourselves; and placed in similar circumstances of duty, labour, difficulty, trial, and temptation." Timothy faithfully followed the same course of doctrine, manner of life, and virtues of his venerable father in Christ, St. Paul; and, in so doing, became exposed to the same trials and persecutions as he had suffered. He also derived his knowledge from the same source—the sacred Scriptures, in which he had been initiated in his infancy—had subsequently made them the chief subject of his study and attention—and they had made him "wise unto salvation."

Here the apostle lays down two important propositions which demand our particular attention. 1. All Scripture is given by inspiration; and, 2. Is profitable for instruction, &c.

1. When we read "all Scripture" is given by inspiration, we must recollect that but little of the New Testament was yet written, and still less got into circulation: consequently, when a child, Timothy could have known nothing of it: yet, when brought into circulation, none but a Jew would place it in authority inferior to the Old.

2. The Holy Scriptures are here commended as able to make us wise unto salvation, and more particularly as profitable for doctrine, reproof, &c. that is, furnishing every thing necessary to "complete the man of God," or the perfect Christian—so far as perfection is attainable in the present life. From this we may infer the folly and wickedness of keeping back the Scriptures from the common people—all of whom equally need them with ourselves: on the other hand, it is a distinguishing mark of a true minister of Christ, that he studies them himself, and recommends them to his hearers.

Ver. 3. False accusers.—Margin, "Make-bates:" according to Minsheu, a make-bate, is a make-strife; or, a mischievous, contentious person. The devil himself has his name (Diabolos) from this word, because he is an "accuser of the brethren."

Ver. 11. Persecutions . . . . at Antioch, at Iconium, at Lystra.—See Acts xiii. 50; xiv. 2, 5, 19.

Ver. 16. All Scripture—i. e. Holy Scripture, as in the preceding verse. — Grotius, Dr. Geddes, and the Unitarian Version, render this "All Scripture given by inspiration of God (is) profitable," &c. changing the place of the verb supplied; and this, it appears, has the sanction of the old Syriac, the Vulgate, and most ancient versions. The question, what writings are inspired, must be decided by internal and historical evidence. The sense much depends on the copulative and (Greek kai) which is wanting in the ancient versions generally, but if retained, justifies our authorized translation; to which agree Doddridge, Macknight, and most English commentators; and for a full defence of which, in answer to Dr. Geddes, see an Essay "On the Divine Inspiration of the Jewish Scriptures, by Dr. Findlay, of Glasgow."

Ver. 17. That the man of God may be perfect.—Margin, "perfected:" i. e. completely and thoroughly furnished for every good work.

long acquaintance with the holy Scriptures, is solemnly charged to a zealous and faithful exercise of his ministerial talents:—Show thyself "a man of God, thoroughly furnished unto every good work." And St. Paul the more strongly urges this, from the consideration that he foresaw the time was coming, in which many would not bear to hear the truth. As to himself the great apostle saw his end approaching, and was prepared to offer up his life as a sacrifice in the cause of God, that he might receive the crown of martyrdom. "I am now ready to be offered, (says he;) and the time of my departure is at hand." Here, according to the learned Blackwall, "is an allusion to that universal custom [both among Jews and Gentiles] of pouring wine or oil on the head of the victim, immediately before it was slain: the apostle's emphatical word signifies, 'Wine is just now pouring on my head; I am just going to be sacrificed to Pagan rage and superstition.'"

The apostle proceeds, (ver. 7)—"I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith." These terms are evidently agonistic—that is, they allude to the Olympic games; the former alluding to the boxing or wrestling combats, and the latter to the races. He had completed both: his battle was fought—his race was run; he had also kept the sacred deposit of the faith intrusted to him, and he was going to receive his crown—a crown of righteousness and glory, reserved for him against the second coming of his Lord, his Saviour, and his Judge. And he rejoiced to know, that the crown was not for him only. It was not the reward of a few only, (though indeed comparatively few,) but of all those who looked and longed for the second coming of their Lord—to all who should love his appearing, and hail him as their almighty Saviour.

The latter part of the chapter contains a variety of miscellaneous information and remarks. In the first place, the apostle requests Timothy to come and visit him as soon as possible; apparently anticipating, that if he delayed he might be too late to see him; for the time of his departure was at hand.

Of Demas, Paul complains, he "hath forsaken me, having loved the present world." From the cautious manner in which Paul speaks of this man in Coloss. iv. 14, it has been inferred that he considered him as a doubtful character, but this is not certain; nor is there any proof that Demas apostatized from Christianity: perhaps his secular interests might induce him to go to Thessalonica, or fear might deter him from staying with the apostle.

The cloak, the books, and the parchments, have occasioned a great variety of conjectures. The first article was probably to guard against the cold and rain. From the mention of books and parchments, Bishop Bull derives a useful argument in favour of ministerial studies, though it is utterly useless to guess at the contents of either the books or parchments.

Alexander is so common a name, that there is no certainty that this Alexander was either of those who had been before mentioned, though what is said of him agrees with 1 Tim. i. 20. Both evidently opposed Paul's preaching: but the most painful fact here mentioned is, that upon Paul's first hearing, he was deserted, like his divine Master—"All forsook him and fled." Even this, however, was overruled for good, as he was so strengthened and supported, that he was enabled to preach the gospel before his Gentile adversaries with good effect, and was, for the present, delivered from the mouth of the lion—by whom many think Nero was intended; but this is by no means certain. It is generally agreed, however, that soon after the date of this Epistle, Paul fell a martyr to the rage of that execrable tyrant, who, as is well known, after setting fire to the imperial city, laid the fault upon the Christians.

So Tacitus, after speaking of Nero's charging the Christians with setting fire to Rome, which he did himself, (A. D. 64,) says, "To suppress, if possible, this common rumour, Nero procured others to be accused, and punished with exquisite tortures a race of men detested for their evil practices, who were commonly known by the name of Christians. The author of that sect (or name) was Christus, who, in the reign of Tiberius, was punished with death as a criminal, by the Procurator Pontius Pilate. But this pestilent superstition, though checked for a while, broke out afresh, not only in Judea, where the evil first originated, but even in the city (of Rome;) the common sink into which every thing filthy and abominable flows from all quarters of the world. At first, those only were apprehended who confessed themselves of that sect; afterwards, a vast multitude discovered by them, all of whom were condemned, not so much for the crime of burning the city, as for their enmity to mankind. Their executions were so contrived, as to expose them to derision and contempt. Some were covered over with the skins of wild beasts, that they might be torn to pieces by dogs; some were crucified; while others, having been daubed over with combustible materials, were set up as lights in the night-time, and thus burnt to death."

The death of Paul is commonly placed in A. D. 65 or 66; and his being a Roman citizen, procured him the honour of decapitation instead of crucifixion. Milner cites from Chrysostom a tradition, that the immediate cause of his last imprisonment was, that his preaching had converted a cupbearer and concubine of the Emperor; though Bishop Pearson, and some other learned men, are of opinion that he was not put to death by Nero, but by one of his deputies, while he was himself gone to head the army in Greece. There is no doubt, however, of his martyrdom, which the Calendar places on the 29th of June. We shall close this Epistle, which was probably the last St. Paul wrote, with the following judicious reflections of Dr. Macknight upon this apostle's epistolary correspondence, and the evidence which it affords of the truth of Christianity:—

"These strong asseverations of the truth of the things which Paul had all along preached; these earnest charges to Timothy, to preach the same things openly and plainly to the world; these high expressions of joy in the sufferings which he had endured for preaching them, and these confident expectations which he expressed, of receiving a full reward in

Ver. 3. Teachers, having itching ears.—Macknight transposes the words thus:—"Having itching ears, they [that is, the people] will heap to themselves teachers" calculated to tickle them with new and curious matter; namely, fables and allegories, such as those of the Rabbies and Pagan philosophers.

Ver. 5. Make full proof.—Doddridge, "Accomplish."—Thy ministry.—To a person who regretted to Dr. Johnson, that he had not been a clergyman, because he considered the life of a clergyman an easy and comfortable one, the doctor made this memorable reply: "The life of a conscientious clergyman is not easy. I have always considered a clergyman as the father of a larger family than he is able to maintain. No, sir, I do not envy a clergyman's life as an easy life, nor do I envy the clergyman who makes it an easy life."

Ver. 6. I am now ready to be offered.—So Doddridge; but Macknight renders it, "I am already poured out;" and others "I am poured upon," alluding to pouring wine, &c. upon the head of the victim, before it was sacrificed. The sense of both is the same as our version.

Ver. 7. I have fought a good fight, &c.—Macknight, "I have combated the good combat; I have finished the race; I have preserved the faith." Dr. Adam Clarke cites, from Euripides, a case in which a wife died to redeem the life of her husband when his parents had refused, and he reproaches them in these expressive words: "Thou wouldest have fought a good fight, hadst thou died for thy son."

the life to come for all his labours and sufferings, being the apostle's dying words to his intimate friend and companion of the ministry of the gospel, conveyed in a private letter, no person who is a judge of human nature and human actions, can read them without being impressed with the strongest conviction of the apostle's own thorough persuasion of the things which, from the time of his conversion, he constantly preached, without the least variation. And seeing the most important of these things were matters of fact, of which his own senses and experience had informed him: . . . . . I say, the apostle's own persuasion of these facts, is such a proof of their reality, and of the truth of the gospel history, as never will be shaken by all the sophistry of infidels united. This excellent writing, therefore, will be read by the disciples of Christ to the end of the world, with the highest satisfaction: and the impression which it must have on their minds, will often be recollected by them with the greatest effect, for the confirmation of their faith in the gospel, and their consolation under all the evils which their adherence to the gospel may bring upon them."

Ver. 20. Erastus.—[As Timothy accompanied the apostle from Corinth to Jerusalem, through Macedonia, and probably to Miletus, before his first imprisonment at Rome, it would have been wholly superfluous to have informed him of Erastus, if he had spoken of that voyage; and Trophimus accompanied the apostle to Jerusalem. Acts xx. 4—16; xxi. 29.]—Bagster.

Ver. 21. Claudia.—Dr. Henry, in his Eccles. Hist., supposes this to be the lady celebrated in two of Martial's Epigrams; but Macknight thinks this inconsistent with her age. Tradition states, that she first brought the gospel into Britain.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE SECOND EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY.

[This epistle was written to St. Paul's most intimate friend, under the miseries of a jail, and with the near prospect of an ignominious death, which he suffered under the cruel and relentless Nero; and it is peculiarly valuable to the Christian church as exhibiting the best possible evidence of the truth and reality of our holy religion, and affording a striking contrast between the persecuted, but confident and happy Christian, and the ferocious, abandoned, and profligate Roman. The detestable Nero having set fire to Rome, on the 10th of July, A. D. 64, endeavoured to remove the odium of that nefarious action, which was generally and justly imputed to him, by charging it upon the Christians, who had become the objects of popular hatred on account of their religion; and in order to give a more plausible colour to this calumny, he caused them to be sought out, as if they had been the incendiaries, and put great numbers to death in the most barbarous and cruel manner. "Some," says Tacitus, "were covered over with the skins of wild beasts, that they might be torn to pieces by dogs; some were crucified; while others, having been daubed over with combustible materials, were set up as lights in the night time, and thus burnt to death. For these spectacles, Nero gave his own gardens, and, at the same time, exhibited there the diversions of the circus; sometimes standing in the crowd as a spectator, in the habit of a charioteer, and at other times driving a chariot himself." (See also Suetonius, in Vit. Nero. c. 16.) To these dreadful scenes Juvenal thus alludes: "Describe a great villain, such as Tigellinus, (a corrupt minister under Nero,) and you shall suffer the same punishment with those who stand burning in their own flame and smoke, their head being held up by a stake fixed to a chain, till they make a long stream (of blood and sulphur) on the ground." So also Martial in an epigram concerning the famous C. Mucius Scævola, who lost the use of his right hand by burning it in the presence of Porsenna, king of Etruria, whom he had attempted to assassinate: "You have, perhaps, lately seen acted on the theatre, Mucius, who thrust his hand into the fire: if you think such a person patient, valiant, and stout, you are a senseless dotard. For it is a much greater thing, when threatened with the troublesome coat, to say, I do not sacrifice, than to obey the command, Burn the hand." This troublesome coat, or shirt, was made like a sack, of paper or coarse linen cloth, either besmeared with pitch, wax, or sulphur, and similar combustible materials, or dipped in them; which was then put on the Christians, who, in order to be kept upright, the better to resemble a flaming torch, had their chins severally fastened to stakes fixed in the ground. At the same period, many of the most illustrious senators of Rome were executed for the conspiracy of Lucan, Seneca, and Piso; many of whom met death with courage and serenity, though unblest with any certain hope of futurity. With the Christian alone was united purity of manners amidst public licentiousness, and purity of heart amidst universal relaxation of principle; and with him only were found love and good will to all mankind, and a patience, and cheerfulness, and triumph in the hour of death, as infinitely superior to the stoical calmness of a Pagan, as the Christian martyr himself to the hero and the soldier. After such scenes as these was this Epistle written, probably, the last which St. Paul ever wrote; and, standing on the verge of eternity, full of God, and strongly anticipating an eternal weight of glory, the venerable Apostle expressed the sublimest language of hope and exultation:—"I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but to all them also that love his appearing." (Chapter iv. 6—8.) Surely every rational being will be ready to exclaim, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my latter end be like his!"]—Bagster.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO TITUS.

[Of Titus, to whom this Epistle is addressed, and of whom St. Paul speaks in terms of the highest approbation and most cordial affection in his Epistles, we know nothing more with certainty, than that he was a Greek by birth, and one of the Apostle's early converts, who frequently attended him in his journeys. We have also no certain information when, or by whom, the Gospel was first preached in Crete; though it is probable that it was made known there at an early period, as there were Cretans present on the day of Pentecost, who, on their return home, might be the means of introducing it among their countrymen. Nor have we any account concerning St. Paul's labours in that island, except the bare fact which may be inferred from this Epistle; though St. Luke mentions that he touched at the Fair Havens and Lasea in his voyage to Rome. It is therefore inferred, that this event took place, and consequently this Epistle was written, subsequent to his first imprisonment at Rome, and previously to his second, about A. D. 64; which is considerably strengthened by the verbal harmony subsisting between this Epistle and the first Epistle to Timothy. The Apostle seems to have had very great success in his ministry in that island; but, by some means, to have been hurried thence, before he could order the state of the churches in a regular manner. He therefore left Titus there to settle the churches in the several cities of the island, according to the apostolical plan. Titus lived there till he was 94 years of age, and died, and was buried in that island. It was upon the occasion of Titus being thus left at Crete, that St. Paul wrote this Epistle, to direct him in the proper discharge of his various and important duties.]—Bagster

Chap. I. Ver. 1—16. Paul's affection to Titus: directions for his conduct: the character of the Cretans.—Titus appears to have been a convert from Gentilism by the ministry of St. Paul, who here calls him his own son in the common faith; and frequently mentions him, in his second epistle to the Corinthians, with great affection. He often employed him either as his messenger to the churches, or his travelling companion. He was with Paul and Barnabas, at Jerusalem, when some of the Judaizing teachers urged it upon him to be circumcised, but Paul would not allow it, (Gal. ii. 3, 4,) though he circumcised Timothy, his mother being a Jewess.

Before writing this Epistle, the apostle had been in Crete, (now called Candia,) with Titus and Apollos, whom he left there; and is said, at his writing of this Epistle, to have been at Nicopolis, in Macedonia, at or near which city he designed to winter. Such is the statement in the subscription, which

7 For a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God; not self-willed, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre;

1 Directions given unto Titus for his doctrine and life. 9 Of the duty of servants, and 11 general of all Christians.

3 The aged women likewise, that they be in behaviour as becometh [c] holiness, not [d] false accusers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things;

4 That they may teach the [e] young women to be [f] sober, to love their husbands, to love their children, both Macknight and Paley admit to be the probable fact; and from the similarity between the doctrine and phraseology, this epistle seems to have been written about the same time with the first epistle to Timothy.

In this, as in most of his epistles, Paul connects, (as we have already remarked,) "the faith of God's elect" with "the truth which is after (or according to) godliness;" and we may depend upon it, that those preachers who do not preserve this connexion inviolate, deserve not to be ranked as preachers of the gospel. When he adds, that "God had promised eternal life before the world began," we think, with Dr. Doddridge, that it is much the most natural to interpret this of the Father's promise to his Son, when he said, as in the second Psalm, "Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance," &c. (Ps. ii. 8.) and not (as some do) of his promise to Adam after the fall, but before the Jewish age or dispensation.

When Paul left Titus in Crete, (or Candia,) it was for the purpose of arranging such ecclesiastical affairs as himself had not had time to attend to; and especially to ordain ministers in every town in the island, where there might be occasion and opportunity. On this subject he repeats nearly the same sentiments which he had expressed to Timothy on the like occasion, respecting the qualifications of pastors and teachers, as may be seen in our notes below. He contrasts such as he recommends with the preachers of the circumcision, some of whom, it appears, were natives, and partook of the national character of the Cretans, who, according to one of their own poets, (Epimenides,) were addicted to lying, rapaciousness, luxury, and idleness. What a mixture of unhappy qualities!

"This witness," the apostle adds, speaking generally, "is true." Therefore (as if he had said) "when you discover any of these unhappy qualities mingling in their conduct and conversation, "rebuke them sharply," that they may be sound in the faith; on the same principle that a skilful surgeon will cauterize a wound to save the life of his patient, or remove a gangrene to effect a sound and perfect cure.

The evils of which the apostle seems apprehensive, were the apparently opposite ones of superstition and immorality, which, strange as it may seem, often operate upon each other, as we see in the lower classes of Roman Catholics. A superstitious attention to outward forms quiets their consciences in the neglect of Christian morals; and the commission of immoralities leads them to fly to saints and angels for their intercession, when they dare not approach the Son of God himself, whose "eyes are as a flame of fire."

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—15. Directions to Titus, how to exhort the different classes of society.—By "sound doctrine" we understand, not only orthodox principles, but those principles taught in a manner calculated to promote the health and activity of the soul, and adapted to the various classes of hearers and members of the Christian church.

1. He begins with the aged men, whose discriminative character should be gravity, temperance, and love; for vital Christianity has a most benevolent aspect, and a powerful tendency to promote both the present and future happiness of mankind. While it moderates and usefully directs the ardour of the young, it warms the heart of the aged, and cheers them in their passage to the tomb: but levity, either in conduct or conversation, ill becomes the gravity of gray hairs.

2. Of aged women, and particularly of such as are employed in the church, a correspondent excellence of character is required, founded upon holiness: they must act as becometh saints; and, as persons employed in the service of God, studiously avoid those vices into which women, uninfluenced by Christianity, too often fall. The female sex is the bond of union to society. The various relations it successively fills—as of daughter, wife, and mother—are of vast importance, and capable of the greatest advantages to mankind, especially as the means of forming the human character in early life.

3. Young men must be exhorted to be sober-minded and discreet; to whom Titus, as a young man and a teacher of religion, is exhorted to show himself as a pattern of good works and religious conversation.

4. Christian servants are required to be obedient in all things, neither purloining nor gainsaying, that they also, in their humble sphere, may adorn the doctrine of God their Saviour.

After these exhortations, we have (ver. 11 to 14) a striking display of the nature, object, and end of the gospel dispensation, on which Dr. Doddridge excellently remarks; "Hardly does the word of God afford a more instructive and comprehensive summary of the gospel than that before us: it gives us a view of the nature of the dispensation as a doctrine of grace, and, at the same time, a doctrine according to godliness.

Ver. 7. A bishop must be blameless, &c.—Compare 1 Tim. iii. 2, 3.

Ver. 8. A lover of hospitality.—Doddridge and Macknight, "hospitable."

Ver. 10. Of the circumcision—i. e. those Judaizing teachers who taught the necessity of circumcision to all men.

Ver. 11. Whose mouths must be stopped.—"Neither by persecution nor force, (says Macknight,) but by clear and strong reasoning."

Ver. 12. A prophet of their own.—That is, a poet; for their poets were supposed to be inspired by the Muses, if not by the gods. The verse here cited is from Epimenides, and is thus poetically rendered—

"False Cretans, savage beasts, with bellies slow."

lity; that [i] they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things.

11 For the grace [m] of God that bringeth salvation [n] hath appeared to all men,

12 Teaching us that, denying [o] ungodliness and worldly [p] lusts, we [q] should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world;

13 Looking [r] for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing [s] of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ;

14 Who gave [t] himself for us, that he might redeem us from all [u] iniquity, and purify [v] unto himself a peculiar [w] people, zealous [x] of good works.

15 These things speak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority. Let [y] no man despise thee.

CHAPTER III.

1 Titus is yet farther directed by Paul, both concerning the things he should teach, and not teach. 10 He is willed also to reject obstinate heretics: 12 which done, he appointeth him both time and place, wherein he should come unto him, and so concludeth.

PUT them in mind to be subject [a] to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work,

2 To speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, showing all [b] meekness unto all men.

3 For we [c] ourselves also were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another.

4 But after that the kindness and [d] love of God our Saviour toward man appeared,

5 Not [e] by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost;

6 Which he shed on us [f] abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour;

7 That being justified [g] by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life.

8 This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful [h] to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men.

9 But [i] avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law; for they are unprofitable and vain.

10 A man that is a heretic after the first and second admonition [j] reject;

11 Knowing that he that is such is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself.

12 When I shall send Artemas unto thee, or Tychicus, be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis: for I have determined there to winter.

13 Bring Zenas the lawyer and Apollos on their journey diligently, that nothing be wanting unto them.

14 And let ours also learn to [k] maintain good [l] works for necessary uses, that they be not unfruitful.

15 All that are with me salute thee. Greet them that love us in the faith. Grace be with you all. Amen.

It hath appeared to all men, and it bringeth them salvation, by inculcating the most salutary lessons that man can receive. It teaches us to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, how pressing soever their solicitations may be. It instructs us in all the branches of our duty to God, to ourselves, and to our fellow Christians. . . . . As we are "slow of heart" to attend to such instructions, it enforces them with motives the most generous and the most animating. It represents to us, as it were in prophetic vision, the glorious appearance of the great God and our Saviour, Jesus Christ; when he shall come with everlasting blessings in his hands to reward all his faithful people, and with terrors of divine vengeance to be poured forth on all that have rejected the authority of his gospel. And, that the most powerful considerations of gratitude may join with those of the highest interest, it directs our eyes to this divine triumphant Saviour, as having once given himself to torture and to death for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify us unto himself, a peculiar people, devoted to God, and zealous of good works."

CHAP. III. Ver. 1—15. Titus instructed what to teach and what to reject, and how he should act towards heretics.—Some false teachers, it should seem, had insinuated that Christians were not bound, under the gospel dispensation, to obey Pagan governors; a principle which St. Paul combats in several of his epistles; for dominion (or civil power) is not "founded in grace," as some weak and wicked enthusiasts have pretended. St. Paul particularly guards against the disrespectful treatment of magistrates, as such, however ignorant or idolatrous; for, says he, we Christians, (that is, many of us were formerly Pagans and idolaters, and therefore ought to treat others now in the same state with candour, gentleness, and meekness. Not only so, but we should exercise towards them benevolence and compassion, even as "God our Saviour" hath done towards us. For, indeed, it is "not by works of righteousness which we have done," that we are saved, but according to his sovereign mercy, and by the agency of his Holy Spirit, which he hath shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ; the effects of which we should be careful to exhibit in our lives and conversations, for it is not only natural, but even just and proper, to judge of religious principles by their effect on the life and conduct of those who maintain them; and the principles of the gospel have the exclusive honour of being efficacious to the production and progress of universal holiness. "I will that thou affirm constantly, (says the apostle,) that they which have believed in God be careful to maintain good works." But as to "foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law—avoid them; for they are unprofitable and vain." Still worse; they often lead to heresy; and "a man that is a heretic (says he,) after the first and second admonition, reject." Here arise two questions of great difficulty and importance—Who are heretics? and, How should they be treated?

1. Who are heretics? The term "heretic" is used only in this place throughout the New Testament, though the word "heresy" is used frequently in the book of Acts, as equivalent to sect. (See Acts v. 17; xv. 5; xxiv. 5, 14; xxvi. 5; xxviii. 22.) "Prior to Christianity, the word was used indifferently for any sect or party, religious or philosophical; but after the erection of the Christian church, it was used for such separations only as were made on the ground of doctrine or principle; and other separations, grounded on difference of religious rites, or the preference of certain preachers, were denominated schisms. (1 Corinthians i. 10—12.) What, then, constituted the notion of a heretic in the first ages of the church? 1. He was supposed to be in an error. 2. That error was thought pernicious. "Heresy, (says Dr. Waterland,) lies in espousing pernicious doctrines." 3. That error was of sufficient importance to break communion, and so violate the unity of the church.

That the faith of such a man may be subverted, is easily understood; but how he is self-condemned, is not so clear. Some have thought it implies, that they did not themselves believe the doctrines which they taught. We can scarcely think that any Christian teachers would propagate opinions, knowing them to be false; yet finding certain opinions led to popularity, it is possible they might be too easily satisfied with them; especially if they had the ambition to raise a party, in order to be at the head of it. Still farther, if their practice agreed not with their doctrine, (as too often has been the case,) then would they plainly be self-condemned.

2. But how should such heretics be treated? Here is not a word about burning them; no fines, nor imprisonments, nor even curses, "with bell, book, and candle;" but only admonish them again and again, and if they remain incorrigible, reject them—first as teachers, and, finally, from the communion of the church.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO TITUS.

[THE striking affinity which subsists between the Epistle to Titus and the first Epistle to Timothy has been pointed out by several able writers. Both Epistles are addressed to persons left to preside in, and regulate their respective churches during the Apostle's absence. Both are principally occupied in describing the qualifications of those who should be appointed to ecclesiastical offices; and the requisites in this description are nearly the same in both Epistles. Timothy and Titus are both cautioned against the same prevalent corruptions; the phrases and expressions in both letters are nearly the same; and the writer accosts his two disciples with the same salutations; and passes on to the business of the Epistle with the same transition. The most natural mode of accounting for these resemblances and verbal coincidences, is by supposing, as we have already had reason to conclude, that the two Epistles were written about the same time, and while the same ideas and phrases still dwelt in the writer's mind. "Nevertheless," as Macknight justly observes, "the repetition of these precepts and charges is not without its use to the church still, as it makes us more deeply sensible of their great importance; not to mention, that in the Epistle to Titus, there are things peculiar to itself, which enhances its value. In short, the Epistles to Timothy and Titus, taken together, containing a full account of the qualifications and duties of the ministers of the gospel, may be considered as a complete body of divinely inspired ecclesiastical canons, to be observed by the Christian clergy, of all communions, to the end of the world." The island of Crete, now Candia, where Titus was a resident, was renowned in ancient times for the salubrity of its climate; for the richness and fertility of its soil; for its hundred cities; for the excellence of its laws, given by its king Minos; for Mount Ida, where Jupiter was said to have been preserved from the jealousy of his father Saturn; for the sepulchre of Jupiter; and in fact, for being the cradle of the gods, most of the absurdities that have been embodied into the heathen mythology having there had their origin. The Cretans, though at an early period celebrated for their great advances in civilization, and for an admirable system of laws, were notorious for covetousness, piracy, luxury, and especially for lying; insomuch that kretizein, to act like a Cretan, became a proverb for deceiving and telling lies, and a Cretan lie signified one that was remarkable for its magnitude and imprudence. They were one of the nations against which the Grecian proverb, "beware of the three K's," (in English C,) was directed; i. e. Kappadocia, Kilicia, and Krete; and Polybius (l. iv. c. 8. 53, &c.) represents them as disgraced by piracy, robbery, and almost every crime; and the only people in the world who found nothing sordid in money, however acquired. With this agrees their character given by Epimenides, one of their own poets, as quoted by St. Paul, (ch. i. 12, 13,) from a work of his no longer extant, entitled Concerning Oracles, and which the Apostle declares constituted their true character:

The Cretans are always liars, destructive wild beasts, sluggish gluttons.

Over this mass of idolatry and corruption, however, the gospel triumphed, producing by its benign and heavenly influences, purity, honesty, truth, and every moral and Christian virtue; nor has the successive subjugation of the people by the Saracens and Turks been ever able wholly to extinguish, though it has obscured, the light of Christianity which once shone upon them with such splendour. The island is divided into twelve bishops' sees, under the patriarch of Constantinople; but the execrable Turks, though they profess to allow the Christians the free exercise of their religion, will not permit them to repair their churches, many of which they have converted into mosques; and it is only by the influence of large sums of gold, paid to the pashas, that they can keep their religious houses from total dilapidation.]—Bagster.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO PHILEMON.

PHILEMON appears to have been a person of some consideration at Colosse, and in the church at that place, who had been converted by the ministry of St. Paul, probably during his abode at Ephesus; Onesimus, a slave of Philemon, having, as it is generally thought, been guilty of some dishonesty, fled from his master, and came to Rome; where the Apostle was at that time under confinement the first time, as appears by his expectation of being shortly released, about A. D. 62. Having, by some means, attended the preaching of the Apostle "in his own hired house," it pleased God to bless it to his conversion. After he had given satisfactory evidence of a real change, and manifested an excellent and amiable disposition, which greatly endeared him to St. Paul, he was sent back to his master by the Apostle, who wrote this Epistle to reconcile Philemon to his once unfaithful servant.]—Bagster.

Ver. 1—25. Paul intercedes with Philemon on the behalf of his slave Onesimus.—Philemon appears to have been a converted Gentile, living at Colosse, who became a member, and perhaps a minister, of the Christian church there, of which a branch, at least, met in his house. Onesimus was one of his slaves, who, having taken disgust (as is supposed) from some unknown cause, ran away from his master, and fled to Rome, where St. Paul was then a prisoner. Being providentially brought under his ministry, he was thereby converted to Christianity, and in consequence became known to Paul, with whom he seems to have remained a short time, till he was fully satisfied of his conversion. He then sent him back with this conciliatory epistle to his master, in which he affectionately entreats Philemon to receive him as his (Paul's) own son.

In introducing his request to Philemon, the apostle significantly calls himself the prisoner of Jesus Christ, exciting thereby all his sympathetic feelings towards him, both as a prisoner and a martyr; uniting with his own name that of the amiable young Timothy, as it were to second his request. He then addresses the "beloved Apphia," probably Philemon's consort, and "Archippus," whom he calls "our fellow-soldier," as engaged also in the Christian warfare, and perhaps, (as Dr. Lightfoot suggests) Philemon's son; Paul thereby wishing to unite their mediation with his own, on the behalf of the unhappy fugitive, who was bearer of the epistle.

The apostle then mentions the interest he had taken in Philemon's welfare, making mention of him continually in his prayers to God, and rejoicing, at the same time, in what he heard of his friend's benevolence and compassion. All these circumstances are ingeniously wrought into the introduction to his request; yet he gives him to understand, that he might have spoken in stronger language—that, as an apostle, he might have enjoined on him what he now only solicited. And who was the petitioner? "Paul the aged, a prisoner of Jesus Christ." And for whom did he petition? His "son Onesimus"—his "own bowels," as he afterwards expresses it. And what had he done? He had absconded, and doubtless with some of his master's property, for else he could hardly have reached Rome. And how does Paul meet this charge? "If he (Onesimus) have wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on mine account: I Paul have written it with mine own hand; I will repay it."

Ver. 1. Paul, a prisoner.—Macknight, (more literally,) "confined with a chain." See Acts xxviii. 20. [The Apostle in this Epistle indulges in some fine paronomasias on the proper names. Thus Philemon, affectionate, or beloved, is, "our dearly beloved;" Apphia, is, "the beloved sister," as several MSS., Vulgate, and others correctly read; Archippus, (the ruler of the horse, for managing of which heroes were anciently famous,) is, "our fellow soldier;" and Onesimus, (useful or profitable,) once unprofitable, is now profitable.] —Bagster.

Ver. 6. That the communication of thy faith may become effectual.—Doddridge, "That thy communion in the faith may be efficacious" in inducing others also to believe in Christ.

Ver. 7. The bowels of the saints are refreshed by thee—i. e. by Philemon's charities to the poor saints.

Ver. 8. Might be much bold—Rather, "more," or "very bold."

Ver. 9. Paul the aged.—Macknight calculates, that at this time he was sixty years old, and perhaps, through his many sufferings appeared much older.——And now also a prisoner.—See note on ver. 1.

Ver. 10. Onesimus, whom, &c.—Macknight translates this more literally, "My son, whom I begat in my bonds, (even) Onesimus;" and he remarks, that placing "Onesimus' name in the end of this sentence [as in the original] has a fine effect, by keeping the reader in suspense."

Ver. 12. Sent again—i. e. sent back again.——Mine own bowels—i. e. the 13 Whom I would have retained with me, that [o] in thy stead he might have ministered unto me in the bonds of the gospel:

15 For [q] perhaps he therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldest receive him for ever;

16 Not now as a servant, but above a servant, a brother [r] beloved, specially to me, but how much more unto thee, both in the [s] flesh, and in the Lord?

17 If thou count me therefore a [t] partner, receive him as myself.

18 If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee aught, put that on mine account;

20 Yea, brother, let me have joy of thee in the Lord: refresh [u] my bowels in the Lord.

21 Having confidence [v] in thy obedience I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt also do more than I say.

"In this beautiful passage, (says Dr. Macknight,) there is a group of the most affecting arguments closely crowded together. On the one hand, we have Philemon's own reputation for goodness; his friendship to the apostle; his respect for his character; reverence for his age; compassion for his bonds; and, at the same time, an insinuation of that obedience which Philemon owed to him as an apostle. On the other hand, we have Onesimus's repentance and return to virtue; his profession of the Christian religion, notwithstanding the evils to which it exposed him; and his being the object of his spiritual father's tender affection. In short, every word contains an argument."

Finally, the apostle delicately hints, that as he had been the honoured instrument of the conversion of Philemon, as well as of his slave Onesimus, he had some claim upon him on the score of gratitude; for it certainly becomes us to love and respect those whom God honours by making them the medium of his benefits, though all must, ultimately, be referred to him. It is on this principle the apostle adds, "Howbeit I do not say, how thou owest me also thine own self besides." As our parents have unquestionable claims upon our gratitude as the instruments of our first birth, so ministers, who have been employed by Providence as the means of our new birth, or regeneration, have doubtless large demands upon us of respect and love.

In the close of this epistle the apostle intimates a confident persuasion of being released, and being enabled to visit Colosse, which shows that it must have been written before his second epistle to Timothy, when he was waiting for death and martyrdom. It is generally dated in A. D. 63, about a year before his first to Timothy, and two years before his martyrdom.

This epistle has been much admired as a specimen of friendly correspondence. Comparing it to one of Pliny's, on an occasion somewhat similar, (Lib. ix. epis. 21,) Dr. Doddridge says, "though penned by one who was reckoned to excel in the epistolary style, and though it has many beauties, it will be found, by persons of taste, much inferior to this animated composition of the apostle Paul;" the chief excellency, however, of this (as of all Paul's Epistles) lies in the vein of Christian sympathy and piety which runs throughout the whole.

fruit of his body; speaking of him as his own son. Compare Isa. xlviii. 19; xlix. 1.

Ver. 14. That thy benefit.—(Greek, Agathon,) "good deed," or benevolence.

Ver. 15. For a season.—[This is a most delicate and masterly stroke; and indeed the whole Epistle, as Doddridge justly remarks, considered in no other point of view than as a mere human composition, must be allowed to be a master-piece of its kind. If compared with an Epistle of the younger Pliny, to which we may add another of Horace, written on a similar occasion, that Epistle, though composed by one who excelled in the epistolary style, and though undoubtedly it has many beauties, will be found by persons of taste much inferior to this animated composition of the Apostle Paul.]—Bagster.—For ever.—Not only in this world, but also in the next.

Ver. 20. Refresh my bowels.—Paul's bowels yearned over Onesimus: he was greatly concerned for him: Philemon's kindness would relieve his anxiety, and comfort him. Compare ver. 7.

Ver. 21. More than I say—i. e. not only pardon him, but give him his liberty, that he might devote himself to the ministry of the gospel—which doubtless was the event.

Ver. 24. Marcus, &c.—See Col. iv. 10, 12, 14.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE EPISTLE TO PHILEMON.

Paley expresses his admiration of the tenderness and delicacy of this epistle. There is certainly something very melting and persuasive in every part. It is a warm, affectionate, authoritative teacher, ardently interceding with an absent friend, for a beloved convert in a state of slavery, in a manner full of kindly affection, according with the sensibility of his mind.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

[The Hebrews were the Jews in Judea, who spoke a dialect of the Hebrew, and were so called to distinguish them from those who resided among the Greeks, and spoke their language, and were called Hellenists, or Greeks, (Acts vi. 1; ix. 29; xi. 20.) To such of the Hebrews as professed Christianity this Epistle was addressed, according to the opinion of the ancient Christian writers, and the best modern critics; and this decision is corroborated by the internal evidence of the Epistle itself, which contains many things peculiarly suitable to the believers in Judea. Though Hebrew was commonly spoken by the persons to whom this Epistle was sent, there is no necessity to suppose, with Origen, Jerome, and others, that it was originally written in that language, and afterwards translated into Greek by Luke, Barnabas, or Clement; for the latter language was then universally understood, and much esteemed by the inhabitants of Palestine, and the apostolical Epistles being intended for the use of the whole Christian world, as well as for the persons to whom they were sent, it was more proper that they should be written in Greek, than in any provincial dialect. In fact, the circumstance of there being no authentic report or tradition respecting any one copy of the Hebrew Epistle; the style of the epistle throughout, which has all the air of an original; the occurrence of numerous paronomasias on Greek words; the interpretation of Hebrew names, such as Melchisedec by King of Righteousness, and Salem by peace, in a manner by no means like the additions of a translator; and the quotations from the Old Testament being generally taken from the Septuagint, even where that version in some degree varies from the Hebrew; all these facts furnish positive and conclusive evidence that it was originally written in the Greek language, in which it is now extant. Though St. Paul's name is not affixed to this Epistle, (which he probably omitted because he was obnoxious to the enemies of Christianity in Judea,) yet the general testimony of antiquity, the current tradition of the church, the superscription, "The Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Hebrews," being found in almost all our manuscripts, except one, and the agreement of the style, or phrases, allusions, and exhortations, with those in the acknowledged Epistles of St. Paul, determine it to be the genuine production of that eminent Apostle; to which conclusion Carpzov, Whitby, Lardner, Macknight, Hales, Rosenmuller, Bengel, Bishop Tomline, Horne, Townsend, and almost every other modern commentator and critic, after weighing the mass of evidence, both external and internal, are constrained to arrive. If then St. Paul was the author of this Epistle, the time when, and the place where, it was written, may be easily ascertained; for the salutation from the saints in Italy, (ch. xiii. 24,) and his promise of seeing the Hebrews shortly, (ver. 23,) plainly intimate that his first imprisonment at Rome was then terminated, or on the point of being so. Consequently it was written from Italy, perhaps from Rome; soon after the Epistles to the Colossians, Philippians, and Philemon, either at the end of A. D. 62, or more probably in the beginning of the year 63. The grand design of the Apostle, in writing this Epistle, was, to guard the Jews in Palestine, who were then in a state of poverty, affliction, and persecution, against apostacy from the faith; by proving the truth of the grand doctrines of Christianity, and by showing that it was the completion and perfection of the Mosaic dispensation, the rites and ceremonies of which were but types of the New Testament dispensation.]—Bagster.

CHAPTER II.

1 We ought to be obedient to Christ Jesus, 5 and that because he vouchsafed to take our nature upon him, 11 as it was necessary.

THEREFORE we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have delivery to mankind: the former, that is, the Old Testament revelation, was parcelled out at different times, (so the original signifies,) in the course of 2000 years; the latter was revealed as it were, all at once, for it was not more than ten years from the baptism of Christ to the mission of St. Paul. Again, the former revelation was given in a great variety of ways, and by a succession of prophets, through many generations; the latter by the ministry of Jesus, and his apostles, within the space of a few years.

Another circumstance, far more striking and important, was the different ranks and importance of the messengers—God "hath in these last days spoken to us by his SON, whom he hath appointed heir of all things," &c., and whose rank and dignity now demand our special consideration.

1. He is the Son—so called in distinction from all the adopted sons of God; and he is therefore elsewhere called God's own, and only begotten Son. (Rom. viii. 3; and John i. 14, 18.) As such he is declared to be "heir of all things," and "Lord of all" creatures; by whom also he made the worlds, as is stated by St. John, (chap. i. 3.) He is also asserted to be the "brightness," effulgence, and beaming forth of the Father's glory, and the express character of his person; so that whatever perfections exist in the nature of the eternal Father, have an exact counterpart in the person of the Son; just as every mark or character of a seal is imprinted on the melted wax to which it is applied; language which certainly can be applied to no mere creature without confounding opposites in nature.

When it is said, "upholding all things by the word of his power," it has been questioned whether the pronoun [his] should be referred to the Father or the Son; but so united, so completely the same, are the divine perfections of the sacred Three, that it is in vain to attempt to distinguish them: if they are one in nature, so must they be in every divine perfection. It is added, "when he had by himself purged our sins;" that is, when, by the sacrifice which he offered on the cross, he had atoned for our sins, he then took his place at the right hand of the Majesty on high: and here we may remark a striking difference of expression. Before his incarnation, the Son was in the bosom of the Father; after his ascension, he took his place at his right hand—his person, his character, his achievements for our redemption were acknowledged, and gloriously rewarded.

"Being made, or having become, so much better than the angels, as he hath by right of inheritance, as the Son of God, obtained a more excellent and honourable name than they" ever could; for though angels are, in an inferior sense, the sons of God, (Job xxxviii. 7,) He (the Father) never addressed any one of them thus emphatically—"Thou art my Son!" much less exalted any other being as an object of worship to the heavenly hosts, saying, "Let all the angels of God worship him!"

And here we may remark how much the sacred writers (and Paul especially) delight in heaping honours upon our Saviour. Speak of him as a man, and he is "fairer than (all) the sons of men" beside. Speak of him as a king, and he excels both in the equity and dignity of his throne; he is "King of kings, and Lord of lords." Thus is he anointed with the oil of gladness and of grace, above all with whom he may be reckoned or associated. "In all things he hath the pre-eminence." (Col. i. 18.)

What is said, verse 7, concerning the angels, is generally understood as a comparison between those celestial beings, and the material agents of air and fire, as we have explained it, in the exposition of Ps. civ. 4, from whence these words are quoted; and Doddridge here paraphrases the passage thus: "He who rules the winds and the lightnings, has his angels under equal command; and employs them with the strength of winds, and the rapidity of lightnings, in his service." With respect to the doctrine of angels, we know that they are all ministering spirits, employed by Christ in the government of the world and of the church. Sometimes they direct the tempest or the pestilence, and at others, they wait upon the church or its ministers, (see 2 Kings xix. 35; 1 Kings xix. 5, &c.;) but we never read of their being seated upon thrones, or authorized to receive the homage of their fellow creatures, which, indeed, when offered, they have conscientiously refused. (Rev. xxii. 8, 9.)

When it is said, They "are all ministering spirits," the word all "is here emphatical, denoting (says Dr. Macknight) that even the highest orders of angels bow the knee to Jesus; ministering in the affairs of the world according to his direction. But though the Scriptures speak of all the angels as thus ministering, this does not imply that every angel is thus actually employed, in ministering for the heirs of salvation, but that every one of them is subject to be so employed." And these angels are ministers who belong to Christ, not to men, though employed for their benefit: nor will this passage prove that every heir of salvation has a guardian angel individually assigned to him, as some have supposed.

CHAP. II. Ver. 1—18. We must take heed to the gospel of clause does not refer to the different manners in which God revealed himself to the prophets, such as dreams, visions, voices, &c., but it refers to the different ways in which the prophets communicated the different revelations which they received, to the fathers—in types and figures, significant actions, and dark sayings, as well as in plain language."

Ver. 2. Hath in these last days—Namely, of the gospel dispensation. See note on 1 Tim. iv. 1.——By his Son.—Doddridge, "The Son," the pronoun his being an unnecessary supplement.——Heir—That is, Lord or proprietor—of all things.—So Paul teaches us, Gal. iv. i. The heir is "Lord of all," which title Peter also ascribes to Christ, (Acts x. 36.) Pye Smith remarks, that the Greek word for heir is by no means restricted to the primary meaning of possession by descent, and refers to Biel and Schleusner, as authorities.——By whom also he made the worlds—i. e. the material or visible creation: so the word is evidently used in chap. xi. 3.

Ver. 3. Who being the brightness of his glory—i. e. of the Father's glory ——and the express image—or "character;" that is, says the learned Leigh, "Answering to the divine perfections, as the impression of wax does to the engraving of the seal." Doddridge adds, "It is observable, that Philo calls the Logos 'the character of the image of God.'"——Of his person—(Greek hypostasis.) So Doddridge; but Macknight renders it, "An exact image of his substance." (Compare Col. i. 15.) And so the word hypostasis is rendered, ch. xi. 1: "The substance of things hoped for." Pye Smith quotes Rosenmuller, as saying, "It denotes God himself. The Son is called the absolutely perfect image of the Father, because he is like him in power, wisdom, goodness, &c.; since, by a Son, we understand one of the same nature as the Father." Schleusner explains it, "The express resemblance of the essence or nature of God, and of his unchangeable majesty."——And upholding all things.—"The word properly signifies upholding, bearing, or sustaining." M'Lean. Compare Col. i. 16.

Ver. 4. Being made, &c.—Macknight, "He is so much better than [Doddridge, 'superior to'] the angels by how much he hath inherited" &c. Our common translation, "by inheritance obtained," seems to imply the death of the Father, from whom such inheritance descended; but it is not so in the East, as we have observed in the parable of the prodigal son, where the father "divided his living," or property, between his sons. Doddridge, Macknight, and M'Lean, read simply, "He hath inherited;" and Campbell (on Mat. v. 3) remarks, that the original may denote the attainment of property by any kind of title.

Ver. 5. For unto which, &c.—That is, none of the angels have been thus honoured.——I will be to him a Father, &c.—2 Sam. vii. 14, where it is spoken of Solomon, who was a type of Christ.

Ver. 6. And again, when he bringeth.—Margin, "And when he bringeth again," i. e. after his resurrection. So Doddridge, Macknight, M'Lean, &c. ——The first-begotten.—Macknight and M'Lean, "first-born." Compare Rom. i. 4. Col. i. 18. Rev. i. 5.

Ver. 7. And of.—Doddridge, "concerning"—the angels.——And let all the angels of God worship him.—This appears taken from Psalm xcvii. 7 which is thus read in the LXX.—"Worship him all ye his angels." Abrabanel in Isa. lii. 13, confesses that the ancient Rabbies explained this place of the Messiah, who was to be exalted above Abraham, above Moses, and above the angels. See Hammond in Heb. i. 4.

Ver. 9. Above thy fellows.—Doddridge, "associates;" by which many understand the angels, but we think unjustly.

Ver. 12. As a vesture shalt thou fold them up.—Compare Isa. xxxiv. 4; Rev. vi. 14; also 2 Peter iii. 4—7.

Ver. 13. But to which, &c.—See Ps. cx. 1. Compare Mat. xxii. 43—46.

Ver. 14. To minister for them.—Doddridge, "to attend on those who shall inherit salvation."

CHAP. II. Ver. 1. Therefore ought to give the more earnest heed.—Macknight, "On this account we ought to attend the more earnestly."—Let them slip.—Margin, "Run out, as leaking vessels;" or, perhaps, as water through a sieve.

heard, lest at any time we should [a] let them slip.

2 For if the word spoken by [b] angels was steadfast, and [c] every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward;

3 How [d] shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which [e] at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him;

4 God [f] also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and [g] gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?

5 For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak.

6 But one in a certain place testified, saying, [h] What is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou visitest him?

7 Thou madest him [i] a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the works of thy hands:

8 Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But [j] now we see not yet all things put under him.

9 But we see Jesus, who [k] was made a little lower than the angels [l] for the suffering of death, crowned [m] with glory and honour; that he [n] by the grace of God should taste death for every man.

10 For it became [o] him, for [p] whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain [q] of their salvation [r] perfect through sufferings.

11 For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all [s] of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren, 12 Saying, [t] I will declare thy name unto my brethren, in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto thee.

13 And again, [u] I will put my trust in him. And again, [v] Behold I and the children which [w] God hath given me.

14 Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he [x] also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death [y] he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil;

15 And deliver them who [z] through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.

16 For verily [a] he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham.

17 Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a [b] merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people.

18 For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted.

Christ Jesus, who became man, and suffered for our salvation. It is the manner of St. Paul to associate himself with the persons to whom he wrote as one of them; and therefore, though he had himself received the gospel immediately from the Lord Jesus, he speaks of himself as if he had only heard it preached in the same way as others, in order to press upon them the more effectually, the necessity and importance of attending to its momentous doctrines.

The present chapter connects itself with the former by a "therefore;" deriving from the dignity of Christ's person a forcible argument for attending to the message of his grace; "for if the word spoken by angels was steadfast," &c. But what was the word spoken by angels? Unquestionably the Mosaic dispensation, and especially the moral law. This, St. Stephen informs us, was "given by the disposition of angels," (Acts vii. 38;) and St. Paul says, "It was ordained by angels in the hands of a mediator," (namely, Moses.) (Gal. iii. 19.) How far the agency of angels may be employed, it is alike useless and impertinent to inquire; but the gospel being delivered by the mouth of the Son of God himself, acquires thereby a weight superior to the law, which, though from the voice of God, was delivered by the medium of his servants. So the apostle had argued in the beginning of this epistle: "God, who in time past spoke by the prophets, hath now spoken by his Son." Well might he, therefore, add, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" A salvation truly great in every point of view in which it can be considered; whether in reference to the ruin from which it saves, or the happiness to which it exalts; whether we consider the price it cost, or the grace it exhibits. And great also is the evidence with which its promulgation is attended—"signs and wonders, with divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost."

By "the world to come," (ver. 5,) we understand the gospel dispensation, or kingdom of Messiah, (as in chap. vi. 5,) which was so called, as is well known, by the ancient Rabbies; but what is the meaning of this not being subjected to the angels?

1. It implies that the old dispensation was so subjected, as we have seen in the preceding chapter; for "the law was given by the disposition of angels;" but, 2d, Not so the gospel; that was committed to men like ourselves—even to sinners, that they might know how to act toward their fellow sinners. Angels are appointed neither to govern, nor to instruct the church: on the contrary, when they enter the church, it is to learn "the manifold wisdom of God, as displayed in the mysteries of the gospel, which things the angels desire to look into." (See Ephes. iii. 10. 1 Peter i. 12.)

In the passage here quoted from the 8th Psalm, it is evident that the apostle considered Christ as "the second Adam," (as in 1 Cor. xv. 45—47,) sent to "restore the ruins of the first;" and to realize that government which the other forfeited by sin. And "we see Jesus (the Lord from heaven) made a little (while) lower than the angels," that he might be capable of dying for our sins; and, as a reward for such humiliation and sufferings, raised again to glory and honour, and placed at the head of all creation, all things being in a train of subjugation to him; the final accomplishment of which will close the mediatorial system, as we have already seen in 1 Cor. xv. 26—28, to which we must refer, to avoid repetition. While, however, there remains any enemy unsubdued, that is, till the general resurrection, (for "the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death,") his kingdom will be progressing in the world; for "he must reign till all things are put under him."

When God is said to make the Prince, or "Captain of our salvation," perfect, it does not imply that any imperfection was attached to his character; but only that it was necessary for him to suffer trials and temptations, that he might be fully prepared to succour such of his people as were tried and tempted; and in order thus to suffer, it was necessary that he should take upon him all the sinless infirmities of human nature. Farther, that he might dethrone, depose, and destroy the assumed tyranny of death, not only over the bodies, but also over the minds of men, it was necessary that he should

Ver. 4. And gifts.—Margin, "distributions;" that is, of the various gifts of the Spirit. Compare 1 Co. xii. 1.

Ver. 5. For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection—i. e. under their government or direction, as the animal world was placed under subjection to Adam, as is stated in ver. 8 following, and in Gen. i. 28.—The world to come.—This, as we learn from Maimonides, was a common phrase to designate the kingdom of Messiah, called also the age to come, or the future age.—Whereof we speak—Or treat; and that he was speaking of this kingdom of the Messiah, is evident from the context, ver. 3, 4.

Ver. 7. A little lower.—Margin, "A little while inferior to;" meaning the Son of Man when upon earth.

Ver. 9. But we see Jesus, &c.—In our translation, it should seem as if the death of Christ was subsequent to his exaltation, which is exactly the reverse of the fact; Macknight therefore transposes the passage thus: "But we see Jesus, who for a little while was made less than angels, that by the grace of God he might taste of death on account of every one, for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour." The Doctor admits that the original text is in the order of our translation; but he adds, "This inverted order the Greek language admits, by reason of its peculiar structure: but in translating such passages into a language which, like the English, sparingly admits an inverted position of the words, they must be arranged according to their natural order, as is done in the new translation." Compare with this passage Phil. ii. 9—11.—For every man.—Macknight, as above, renders the Greek (uper,) "on account of;" but Doddridge retains the common version "For."—Every man.—"Every one," in Macknight, is somewhat more literal, and he restrains the term (as Gill does) to "every one of the sons who is to be brought to glory;" though he admits the death of Christ to be a benefit to all men.

Ver. 10. It became him, &c.—See Rom. xi. 36.—To make the captain.—Doddridge, "Leader," or Prince. The word is rendered Prince in Acts iii. 15; v. 31.

Ver. 11. All of one—i. e. of one family; or, according to M'Lean, of one Father.

Ver. 12. In the midst of the church.—"The church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men," &c.

Ver. 14. Destroy him, &c.—Doddridge, "depose him who had the empire of death." Pye Smith, "Holdeth the dominion;" but the word does not imply a right to such dominion.

Ver. 16. Took not on him the nature of angels.—Margin, "He taketh not hold of angels;" but of the seed of Abraham he taketh hold. Chrysostom explains this to mean, that when mankind fled—fled far from him, Christ pursued, and caught hold of them. See Hammond

CHAPTER III.

Christ is more worthy than Moses. 7 therefore if we believe not in him, we shall be more worthy punishment than hard-hearted Israel.

WHEREFORE, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest [a] of our profession, Christ Jesus;

2 Who was faithful to him that [b] appointed him, as also Moses [c] was faithful in all his house.

3 For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses, inasmuch as he who hath builded [d] the house hath more honour than the house.

4 For every house is builded by some man; but he that built all things is God.

5 And Moses [e] verily was faithful in all his house, as a [f] servant, for a testimony of [g] those things which were to be spoken after;

6 But Christ as a Son [h] over his own house; whose house [i] are we, if [j] we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.

7 Wherefore (as the Holy Ghost saith, [k] To-day if ye will hear his voice,

8 Harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness:

9 When your fathers tempted me, proved me, and saw my works forty years.

10 Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and said, They do alway err in their heart; and they have not known my ways.

11 So I sware in my wrath, [l] They shall not enter into my rest.)

12 Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil [m] heart of unbelief, in departing [n] from the living God.

13 But exhort [o] one another daily, while it is called To-day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

14 For we are made partakers of Christ, if [p] we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end;

15 While it is said, [q] To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation.

16 For [r] some, when they had heard, did provoke: howbeit not all that came out of Egypt by Moses.

CHAPTER IV.

1 The rest of Christians is attained by faith. 12 The power of God's word. 14 By our high priest Jesus the Son of God, subject to infirmities, but not sin, 16 we must and may go boldly to the throne of grace.
